aggregate more than 10 percent in principal amount of the indenture securities outstanding, or to any suit instituted by any indenture security holder for the enforcement of the payment of the principal of or interest on any indenture security, on or after the respective due dates expressed in such indenture security.

"DIRECTIONS AND WAIVERS BY BONDHOLDERS; PROHIBITION OF IMPAIRMENT OF HOLDERS' RIGHT TO PAYMENT

"SEC. 316. (a) The indenture to be qualified may contain provisions—

"(1) authorizing the holders of not less than a majority in principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding (A) to direct the time, method, and place of conducting any proceeding for any remedy available to such trustee, or exercising any trust or power conferred upon such trustee, under such indenture, or (B) on behalf of the holders of all such indenture securities, to consent to the waiver of any past default and its consequences; or

"(2) authorizing the holders of not less than 75 percent in principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding to consent on behalf of the holders of all such indenture securities to the postponement of any interest payment for a period not exceeding 3 years from its due date."

For the purposes of this subsection and paragraph (3) of subsection (d) of section 315, in determining whether the holders of the required principal amount of indenture securities have concurred in any such direction or consent, indenture securities owned by any obligor upon the indenture securities, or by any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by or under direct or indirect common control with any such obligor, shall be disregarded, except that for the purposes of determining whether the indenture trustee shall be protected in relying on any such direction or consent, only indenture securities which such trustee knows are so owned shall be so disregarded.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that, notwithstanding any other provision thereof, the right of any holder of any indenture security to receive payment of the principal of and interest on such indenture security, on or after the respective due dates expressed in such indenture security, or to institute suit for the enforcement of any such payment on or after such respective dates, shall not be impaired or affected without the consent of such holder except as to a postponement of an interest payment consented to as provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (a)."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HINSHAW: On page 124, after line 5, strike out the period and insert "and except that such indenture may contain provisions limiting or denying the right of any such holder to institute any such suit if and to the extent that the institution or prosecution thereof or the entry of judgment therein would, under applicable law, result in the surrender, impairment, waiver, or loss of the lien of such indenture upon any property subject to such lien."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the Committee I might say that the gentleman from California is offering this amendment as a committee amendment. The amendment was approved yesterday by the full committee and I am glad to have the gentleman from California explain the reason for the amendment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, first I express my very sincere appreciation to the chairman of the subcommittee, the very able and highly esteemed gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], and also to the able chairman of our Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] for giving me the privilege of offering this committee amendment. No doubt if this amendment had been prepared in time, it would have been part of the regular bill. As you have heard, it carries the endorsement of the entire committee. The necessity for it arises from a peculiar circumstance in the laws of my State of California and perhaps several others of the Western States. The law of California differs from the law prevailing generally in providing that there can be but one action to foreclose a mortgage. Since 1898 it has been the settled law of California, Commercial Bank v. Kershner (120 Cal. 495), and numerous other cases following it, that if the holder of a mortgage note recovers a judgment on such note, without foreclosing the mortgage, he thereby waives entirely the mortgage security. For this reason California attorneys have been careful in drafting indentures secured by property in California to provide that individual bondholders have no right of action upon the bonds, as distinguished from such right as they may be given—generally based on the refusal of the trustee to act, after appropriate request—to foreclose the indenture. Where the trustee is given the power to sue upon the bonds, as distinguished from the power to foreclose the indenture, the added provision is inserted that such power of the trustee is subject to the limitation that if the exercise of such power would result in the security being surrendered, waived, or lost, the trustee shall not have such power prior to foreclosure of the indenture. Mr. Chairman, I ask the favorable consideration of the Committee for my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SPECIAL POWERS OF TRUSTEES; DUTIES OF PAYING AGENTS

"SEC. 317. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions—

"(1) Authorizing the indenture trustee, in the case of a default in payment of the principal of any indenture security, when and as the same shall become due and payable, or in the case of a default in payment of the interest on any such security, when and as the same shall become due and payable and the continuance of such default for such period as may be prescribed in such indenture, to recover judgment, in its own name and as trustee of an express trust, against the obligor upon the indenture securities for the whole amount of such principal and interest remaining unpaid; and

"(2) Authorizing such trustee to file such proofs of claim and other papers or documents as may be necessary or advisable in order to have the claims of such trustee and of the indenture security holders allowed in any judicial proceedings relative to the obligor upon the indenture securities, its creditors, or its property.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that each paying agent shall hold in trust for the benefit of the indenture security holders or the indenture trustee all sums held by such paying agent for the payment of the principal of or interest on the indenture securities, and shall give to such trustee notice of any default by any obligor upon the indenture securities in the making of any such payment.

"EFFECT OF PRESCRIBED INDENTURE PROVISIONS

"SEC. 318. The indenture to be qualified shall provide that if any provision thereof limits, qualifies, or conflicts with another provision which is required to be included in such indenture by any of sections 310 to 317, inclusive, such required provision shall control."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Page 125, line 11, after the figures "318", insert "(a)", and after line 15, insert the following subsection:

"(b) The indenture to be qualified may contain in addition to provisions specifically authorized under this title, to be included therein, any other provision, the inclusion of which is not in contravention with any provision of this title."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, that was considered in committee yesterday as a necessary amendment to clear up the conflict as to whether the language of the bill is all-inclusive, as is intended. This language makes it certain, and I ask for the adoption of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

"RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

"SEC. 319. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, issue, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations and such orders as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors to carry out the provisions of this title, including rules and regulations defining accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this title. Among other things, the Commission shall have authority, (1) by rules and regulations, to prescribe for the purposes of section 310 (b) the method (to be fixed in indentures to be qualified under this title) of calculating percentages of voting securities and other securities; (2) by rules and regulations, to prescribe the definitions of the terms 'cash transaction' and 'self-liquidating paper' which shall be included in indentures to be qualified under this title, which definitions shall include such of the creditor relationships referred to in paragraphs (4) and (6) of subsection (b) of section 311 as to which the Commission determines that the application of subsection (a) of such section is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors, having due regard for the purposes of such subsection; and (3) for the purposes of this title, to prescribe the form or forms in which information required in any statement, application, report, or other document filed with the Commission shall be set forth. For the purpose of its rules or regulations the Commission may classify persons, securities, indentures, and other matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons, securities, indentures, or matters.

"(b) Subject to the provisions of the Federal Register Act and regulations prescribed under the authority thereof, the rules and regulations of the Commission under this title shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe, or upon such later date as may be provided in such rules and regulations.

"(c) No provision of this title imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission, notwithstanding that such rule, regulation, or order may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 320. Hearings may be public and may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof, or any officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

"SPECIAL POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 321. (a) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding which, in the opinion of the Commission, is necessary and proper for the enforcement of this title, any member of the Commission, or any officer thereof designated by it, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records may be required from any place in the United States or in any Territory at any designated place of investigation or hearing. In addition, the Commission shall have the powers with respect to investigations and hearings, and with respect to the enforcement of, and offenses and violations under, this title and rules and regulations and orders prescribed under the authority thereof, provided in sections 20, 22 (b), and 22 (c) of the Securities Act of 1933.

"(b) The Treasury Department, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation are hereby authorized, under such conditions as they may prescribe, to make available to the Commission such reports, records, or other information as they may have available with respect to trustees or prospective trustees under indentures qualified or to be qualified under this title, and to make through their examiners or other employees for the use of the Commission, examinations of such trustees or prospective trustees. Every such trustee or prospective trustee shall, as a condition precedent to qualification of such indenture, consent that reports of examinations by Federal, State, Territorial, or District authorities may be furnished by such authorities to the Commission upon request therefor.

"Notwithstanding any provision of this title, no report, record, or other information made available to the Commission under this subsection, no report of an examination made under this subsection for the use of the Commission, no report of an examination made of any trustee or prospective trustee by any Federal, State, Territorial, or District authority having jurisdiction to examine or supervise such trustee, no report made by any such trustee or prospective trustee to any such authority, and no correspondence between any such authority and any such trustee or prospective trustee, shall be divulged or made known or available by the Commission or any member, officer, agent, or employee thereof, to any person other than a member, officer, agent, or employee of the Commission: Provided, That the Commission may make available to the Attorney General of the United States, in confidence, any information obtained from such records, reports of examination, other reports, or correspondence, and deemed necessary by the Commission, or requested by him, for the purpose of enabling him to perform his duties under this title.

"(c) Any investigation of a prospective trustee, or any proceeding or requirement for the purpose of obtaining information regarding a prospective trustee, under any provision of this title, shall be limited—

"(1) to determining whether such prospective trustee is qualified to act as trustee under the provisions of subsection (b) of section 310;

"(2) to requiring the inclusion in the registration statement or application of information with respect to the eligibility of such prospective trustee under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of such section 310; and

"(3) to requiring the inclusion in the registration statement or application of the most recent published report of condition of such prospective trustee, as described in paragraph (2) of such subsection (a), or, if the indenture does not contain the provision with respect to combined capital and surplus authorized by the last sentence of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of such section 310, to determining whether such prospective trustee is eligible to act as such under such paragraph (2)."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment as a committee amendment which I send to the desk.

Page 130, after line 19, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"(b) The provisions of section 4 (b) of the Security and Exchange Act of 1934 shall be applicable with respect to the power of the Commission to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and other experts, and such other officers and employees as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this title."

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, that adopts the provisions that exist in the Security and Exchange Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of that amendment. We have pending on the House Calendar a bill reported by the Civil Service Committee having for its purpose to blanket employees into the civil service, and still Congress continues to go ahead and provide by legislation for their appointment without reference to the civil-service laws and regulations. The two positions are inconsistent.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I sympathize with the attitude of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] in its general applicability, but the purpose of this amendment is to make the general provisions of the Security and Exchange Act apply to this amendment, which we have under consideration today. There is some question that if this amendment is not adopted, the general provisions of the act dealing with this particular subject might not apply to the amendment now under consideration. For that reason, although I hesitate to disagree with my esteemed friend from Michigan, I feel that the amendment should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

"COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS; JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

"SEC. 322. (a) Orders of the Commission under this title (including orders pursuant to the provisions of sections 305 (b) and 307 (c)) shall be subject to review in the same manner, upon the same conditions, and to the same extent, as provided in section 9 of the Securities Act of 1933, with respect to orders of the Commission under such act.

"(b) Jurisdiction of offenses and violations under, and jurisdiction and venue of suits and actions brought to enforce any liability created by, this title, or any rules or regulations or orders prescribed under the authority thereof, shall be as provided in section 22 (a) of the Securities Act of 1933.

"LIABILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. (a) Any person who shall make or cause to be made any statement in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission pursuant to any provisions of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading with respect to any material fact, or who shall omit to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall be liable to any person (not knowing that such statement was false or misleading or of such omission), who, in reliance upon such statement or omission, shall have purchased or sold a security issued under the indenture to which such application, report, or document relates, for damages caused by such reliance, unless the person sued shall prove that he acted in good faith and had no knowledge that such statement was false or misleading or of such omission. A person seeking to enforce such liability may sue at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction. In any such suit the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit and assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against either party litigant, having due regard to the merits and good faith of the suit or defense. No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under this section unless brought within 1 year after the discovery of the facts constituting the cause of action and within 3 years after such cause of action accrued.

"(b) The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist under the Securities Act of 1933, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, or otherwise at law or in equity; but no person permitted to maintain a suit for damages under the provisions of this title shall recover, through satisfaction of judgment in one or more actions, a total amount in excess of his actual damages on account of the act complained of.

"UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATIONS

"SEC. 324. It shall be unlawful for any person in issuing or selling any security to represent or imply in any manner whatsoever that any action or failure to act by the Commission in the administration of this title means that the Commission has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, any trustee, indenture or security, or any transaction or transactions therein, or that any such action or failure to act with regard to any statement or report filed with or examined by the Commission pursuant to this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, has the effect of a finding by the Commission that such statement or report is true and accurate on its face or that it is not false or misleading.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 325. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, or any person who willfully, in any application, report, or document filed or required to be filed under the provisions of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"EFFECT OF EXISTING LAW

"SEC. 326. Except as otherwise expressly provided, nothing in this title shall affect (1) the jurisdiction of the Commission under the Securities Act of 1933, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, over any person, security, or contract, or (2) the rights, obligations, duties, or liabilities of any person under such acts; nor shall anything in this title affect the jurisdiction of any other commission, board, agency, or officer of the United States or of any State or political subdivision of any State, over any person or security, insofar as such jurisdiction does not conflict with any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"CONTRARY STIPULATIONS VOID

"SEC. 327. Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person to waive compliance with any provision of this title or with any rule, regulation, or order thereunder shall be void.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 328. If any provision of this title or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of the title and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby."

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it has been my privilege to serve on the subcommittee in the previous Congress which considered a similar bill and to serve on the subcommittee during the present Congress which has held hearings on and given consideration to the pending bill.

Since I did not take an opportunity to say so during the course of the general debate, I wish to say I am in favor of the bill, but I rose particularly to commend the work of the chairman of the subcommittee, my friend Mr. COLE of Maryland, who has done a very splendid piece of work in the manner in which he has helped evolve this legislation and bring it to its present highly satisfactory form. In that effort he has had the cooperation of my friend and colleague from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], who, as a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and at present the ranking member, during past years has taken a great deal of interest in the development of the Federal Securities and the Stock Exchange Acts, and has made a valuable contribution to the present legislation. I think both of those gentlemen deserve the praise and commendation of the House. That praise and commendation has, I think, been bestowed in the confidence which the Committee this afternoon has shown during the consideration of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I take this moment just to say a word or two about the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I was connected with it for so many, many years and I came to love it and its work to such an extent that I always feel good when I see the big fellows on that committee in charge of a bill on the floor of this House.

In the position in which I find myself now, I cannot even follow the hearings before the various committees of the House. Therefore I cannot read with the understanding which I would like to read the bills that are reported from the various committees. If there is a committee in the House of Representatives whose judgment on a legislative matter I would take on faith, it would be this great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I am proud to say that of all measures that have been passed in the so-called New Deal period, that are far reaching, and that are permanent, the Securities Act of 1933, the Stock Exchange Act of 1934, the Utility Holding Company Act of 1935—it matters not how the Congress may change, how the Executive may change, those monuments to the work and wisdom and patriotism of that great committee will not perish from the statute books.

I have enjoyed this afternoon hearing the splendid defense of this bill made by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE], the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. MAPES], and others of that committee. I just wanted to say to them and to the House that I do enjoy this little visit with them on the floor of the House this afternoon. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, this is an important bill. It is tremendously intricate. I appreciate, as chairman of the subcommittee, the very fine references to members of the committee, especially the words from the majority leader. More especially do I thank my good friend, Mr. REECE of Tennessee, for his remarks. He is a great fellow. It was legislation bearing the name of our distinguished majority leader which made such a bill as this the actual law to follow. Our association with him when he was chairman of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee recalls very definitely to us that wisdom which the House must respect. Along with the members of this committee, I thank them for the way the House has received this very complicated measure. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee substitute for the Senate bill.

The committee substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will now rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WALTER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill S. 2065, and pursuant to House Resolution 248, he reported the same back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

By unanimous consent, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 28. Concurrent resolution authorizing certain changes in the enrollment of H. R. 6577, the District of Columbia Revenue Act.

COMMERCIAL PRINTS AND LABELS

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 153) to transfer jurisdiction over commercial prints and labels, for the purpose of copyright registration, to the Register of Copyrights with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 16, after "applicants.", insert "There shall be paid for registering a claim of copyright in any such print or label not a trade-mark $6, which sum shall cover the expense of furnishing a certificate of such registration, under the seal of the Copyright Office, to the claimant of copyright."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LEWIS of Colorado. I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise the remarks I made today on the securities bill and to include therein a short statement from the hearings on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I make a like request.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, a similar request by the gentleman from Illinois will be granted.

There was no objection.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE BONDHOLDERS REORGANIZATIONS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to file certain reports.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to revise his remarks and to file certain reports. I ask, what reports?

Mr. SABATH. Question has arisen as to whether the report of the Select Committee to Investigate Bondholders' Reorganizations authorized by House Resolution 412 of the Seventy-third Congress has been properly filed. It was filed on May 16, 1938, but to eliminate any possible question I have submitted this request.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, certainly until I know the nature of the report, I shall have to object.

Mr. SABATH. It is the report of the committee.

Mr. CHURCH. I do not know what the report is. It is unusual that the request should be made in this way. The Select Committee to Investigate Bondholders' Reorganizations is long since dead. This appears to be some kind of a report not even signed by some of the members of that expired committee.

Mr. SABATH. Then I file it without unanimous consent, as a Member of the House.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object to the request?

Mr. CHURCH. I do not know what the report is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman either objects or does not object.

Mr. CHURCH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman objects to the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CHURCH. I will not object to the gentleman's request to extend his own remarks of today. I do object to the inclusion of a report.

Mr. SABATH. At this time, then, Mr. Speaker, I file the report as a member of that committee.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute with respect to the report.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, the life of the select committee expired on the 3d day of January, and I am somewhat in a quandary as to the authority of this committee, which is nonexistent now, to file a report. I say it for the simple reason that there were some portions of the report that ought to be edited, that were not acceptable to me. It does raise a very singular question, I would say, for the Speaker, as to whether or not the report can be filed by a committee which ceased to exist on the 3d day of January.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] how long, under the resolution setting it up, was the select committee given in which to present its final report?

Mr. SABATH. No time was specified within which to make the final report.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. What was the life of the committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not have before him the original resolution authorizing the setting up of this committee.

The Chair does not wish to make any improvident decision on the merits of the matter, and would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, if it meets with his approval, that he withhold this matter for the present.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will permit, I may say that today I finally received the reprinted, revised, and reedited report which was filed by me May 16, I think, 1938. Due to the fact, however, that I have been deprived of funds I had no people to cooperate with me in this matter and it has required a great deal of time to reedit the report. I have been obliged to withhold it, to send it to the Printer again and again, and that is the reason for the delay. It is the report which has been filed, it has been printed, and it is merely revised or reedited so that no injustive would be done to anyone.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Did the committee act upon the reedited edition?

Mr. SABATH. Copies were sent to the committee originally, they have gone over it; and then again they were sent copies some time ago merely as a courtesy.

Mr. MICHENER. My question is simply, Has the report the gentleman is attempting to file been considered in its present form, since it has been prepared, by the committee?

Mr. SABATH. I never heard any objection from members of the committee, and I have submitted it to members of the committee.

If there is any question, Mr. Speaker, I still stand on my statement that it has been filed. I rose only because some newspapermen said they did not know, but had been told there is a question as to some libel in it. I do not see where there is any libel in it, but I know that the facts are contained in the report, and the report was filed at that time.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I had the request for information as to whether the report had been filed, and I say to the gentleman, that I read the Journal of May 16, 1939, but I could not find in the Journal any reference at all to the filing of the report on that date.

Mr. SABATH. I am very sorry, but it has been filed, it has been sent to the printer, it has been printed, it is here. It has been reprinted twice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to state that perhaps the gentleman from Illinois should temporarily withhold his attempt to file the report. A rather serious question has been raised as to whether or not this report was filed under authority granted in the resolution and in the time granted by the original resolution. The Chair would like to have an opportunity to look into the RECORD with reference to the facts in the matter.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. We will say it has not been filed and that I had it printed somewhere else and not in the Printing Office. We will say that no one has ever seen it and it is the first report and I as chairman of the committee filed it now. This is a committee appointed by the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the gentleman would not have the legal authority to file this as a report of the committee because, as the Chair understands, the functions of the committee expired on January 1, 1939.

Mr. SABATH. But the committee was instructed to file its report, and there was no time fixed. I am not going to press the Speaker for a ruling.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather the gentleman withdraw the tender of the report for the present.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I withhold for the present my request to file the report.

PAYMENT OF CONSTRUCTION CHARGES ON UNITED STATES RECLAMATION PROJECTS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6984) to provide a feasible and comprehensive plan for the variable payment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects, to protect the investment of the United States in such projects, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE]?

There was no objection, and the Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. WHITE of Idaho, Mr. HILL, and Mr. HAWKS.

SUPPRESSION OF CERTAIN SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the immediate consideration of a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

HOUSE RESOLUTION 257

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 5138, a bill to make unlawful attempts to overthrow the Government of the United States; to require licensing of civilian military organizations; to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army and Navy; to require registration and fingerprinting of aliens; to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in certain cases; and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLARK] yield for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, about 6 weeks ago, before the bill in question and under consideration was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, under the rules of the House, as chairman of a committee and at the request of my committee, I asked that that bill be referred back to the Committee on Immigration where it properly belonged, because the whole bill involved the principle of immigration in its present status.

The Speaker ruled that I did not make the request in time, because in the case of the Hobbs bill, that bill had already been reported out of the committee, whereas the Smith bill was in the committee. I believe that the Chair ruled if I had made a motion in time, and before the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, it would have been in order to move that the bill be referred back to the Committee on Immigration, where it properly belonged.

I want to ask the Speaker, Is it in order for me now, or may I at this time on behalf of my committee, move to refer back this bill now about to be considered to the committee, where we claim it properly belongs?

The SPEAKER. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from New York, the Chair may say that the same parliamentary principle obtains with reference to this bill as pertained to the Hobbs bill. A motion to rerefer could only be made while the bill was in the hands of the committee and before being reported to the House.

This bill having been reported by the committee, and being on the Calendar of the House, it is too late for the gentleman to make such a motion.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman permit another parliamentary inquiry supplementary to my statement? In the case of the Smith bill, I did make a request for reference to the Committee on Immigration before the Committee on the Judiciary reported the Smith bill. The RECORD will bear me out.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, of course, has no independent recollection of that request. What happened to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is what I am trying to find out from the Speaker, whether it is in order now to raise the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair certainly did not object to the unanimous-consent request of the gentleman. The RECORD will show what was done. It must have been objected to. The RECORD will show the disposition of the gentleman's request. The Chair has no independent recollection of it.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, it is not in order now, in spite of the fact that we have preserved our constitutional right on the question of committees, to make that motion for rereference of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot agree with the statement that the gentleman has preserved his constitutional right under the rules of the House.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If I made it prior to the reporting of the Smith bill?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not raise his question prior to the reporting of the bill.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I shall be glad to find it if I can and submit it to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say to the gentleman that whether the request was made or not, manifestly there was no agreement on the request of the gentleman. The Chair assumes that the Committee on the Judiciary continued its jurisdiction over the bill and reported it to the House.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. This is very important legislation and I believe we should have a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 134]

Bell	Ferguson	McGranery	Sacks
Bloom	Fernandez	Maas	Schwert
Boren	Fish	Maciejewski	Secrest
Brewster	Fitzpatrick	Magnuson	Shannon
Buckler, Minn.	Flannery	Martin, Ill.	Smith, Ill.
Buckley, N. Y.	Folger	Massingale	Smith, Ohio
Burdick	Thomas F. Ford	May	Smith, W. Va.
Cluett	Gifford	Merritt	Snyder
Connery	Green	Mitchell	Somers, N. Y.
Cooley	Hart	Mouton	Steagall
Crawford	Hartley	Nelson	Sullivan
Creal	Healey	Nichols	Sumners, Tex.
Cummings	Hendricks	Norton	Taylor, Colo.
Curley	Hennings	O'Brien	Thomas, N. J.
DeRouen	Jarrett	O'Neal	Tinkham
Dies	Kelly	Osmers	Wallgren
Disney	Keogh	Patman	Walter
Eaton, Calif.	Kerr	Pfeifer	Wolfenden, Pa.
Evans	Lambertson	Reed, N. Y.	Woodrum, Va.
Fay	Lea	Ryan	Zimmerman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and forty-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] and yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before the House will make in order the consideration of what is known as the Smith alien bill, a subject which I believe the House will at least be interested in considering. As far as I have been able to learn, there has been no objection to the adoption of the rule making the consideration of this measure in order. I do not intend to take the time of the House to discuss the merits of the legislation itself, as it will be explained by those more familiar with it than I.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize and concede that the bill, consideration of which is made in order by the rule we are now considering, possesses many meritorious provisions as far as it goes but, in my judgment, many of the incisors and bicuspids of the Smith bill were extracted by the Committee on the Judiciary before it reported the bill. This bill does make it a crime for anyone to influence the loyalty or the morale of our armed forces, and that provision of the bill is, of course, to be highly commended. The bill also makes it a crime for anyone to utter literature advocating the overthrow of the Government by force or violence, and, of course, that is a very meritorious provision. The bill also makes it a crime for an alien to practice or engage in the business of moral prostitution and makes an alien who engages in that activity subject to deportation. Of course, we all recognize that as a very worth-while and very meritorious provision.

One of the chief objections I have to the bill as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary is that that committee struck out the first provision of the original Smith bill. While it is highly treasonable for any person to advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence, I consider it even more despicable and heinous for an American citizen, native-born or naturalized, to engage in such advocacy than for an alien to do so. The first section of the bill, as introduced by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], made it a crime for either an alien or a native-born citizen to advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. We have already enacted a law to meet just that situation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I understand that the gentleman has reference to the McCormack bill?

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Another provision of the Smith bill, which I would like to see incorporated in this bill, provided for the registration of aliens.

Mr. Speaker, it is not known how many aliens we have in this country who have entered unlawfully, and the only way to determine this fact is by rigid registration of all of the aliens in the United States. I have been advocating legislation to register all aliens for a number of years, and it seems to me that the time is here when this should be done without further delay. Under existing law we cannot deport aliens who entered unlawfully prior to 1924 unless it can be shown that they have been guilty of crime involving moral turpitude. A rigid enforcement of such a registration law as I have mentioned would enable us to ferret out those aliens who have entered unlawfully since 1924 and immediately deport them. It has been estimated that there are over 2,000,000 aliens in this country who have entered unlawfully, thousands of whom have been, and many of whom are still, on Government relief. Within 30 days after Congress passed the last relief bill, more than 30,000 aliens were dropped from our relief rolls, and there are reasons to believe that many thousands more are still on the rolls at the expense of the overburdened American taxpayers.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the only way to rid ourselves of these aliens who have unlawfully entered our country is by the enactment of a rigid registration law. Bills providing for the registration and fingerprinting of aliens are now pending in both branches of the Congress, and should be enacted into law before this session adjourns. I know of no subject before the Congress of more vital importance. At first, I confess, Mr. Speaker, I was somewhat skeptical about fingerprinting, because in the past this operation smacked somewhat of criminal implications, but after a careful consideration of the matter I have come to a different conclusion. Why should not these aliens be fingerprinted? We fingerprinted our soldiers during the World War, and again fingerprinted them when they applied for their adjusted-service compensation. Fingerprinting is becoming very popular among all classes of our citizenship as a matter of protection. Every alien should be fingerprinted and given an identification card, and, if it is found that he is here unlawfully, he should be promptly deported.

Mr. Speaker, there are from six to nine million aliens in this country today who have shown no tendency or disposition to become American citizens. This is an unhealthy situation which should be immediately corrected. I favor legislation that will give these aliens a reasonable time, say 1 year, in which to make up their minds as to whether they want to become American citizens, and at the expiration of that time, if they have made no move to become naturalized, I favor deporting them to the country whence they came. They are receiving all of the benefits which our citizens enjoy without assuming any of the hardships. This is manifestly unfair. There is no room in this country for such double allegiance as we saw demonstrated in Madison Square Garden, New York, recently when 18,000 members of the so-called German Bund assembled there and boldly acclaimed a European dictator, only to be followed a few nights later by 22,000 Communists who met in the same hall and praised the Soviet Government and the Third International. Mr. Speaker, these subversive influences are becoming more active and audacious every day—boring from within, insidiously feeding to the American people a soothing narcotic which has had a strong tendency to lull many of us into a feeling of false security. If we are worthy of the heritages handed down to us by those immortals who set up this Government by the free sacrifice of blood and treasure, we will awake from our lethargy and stamp out this menace to American democracy. [Applause.]

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I notice that title IV, the last title of the amended bill, simply provides for fingerprinting aliens who make application to enter this country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. In other words, they are fingerprinted in the country from which they seek to emigrate. This provision has nothing to do with the fingerprinting of the millions of aliens who are here now and are unnaturalized.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. That is the very thing of which I am complaining. I thought before I read this bill that our immigration authorities abroad were certainly taking the precaution of fingerprinting the aliens before they came to this country.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is a very small matter.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Certainly it is.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The original Smith bill provided for what we call and have been speaking of for years as a regular registration measure.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman think it would be wise and proper for him, as one of the strong and influential members of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, to move to amend this bill and reinsert in it the provision that would call for the general registration of all aliens?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would be glad to do that, but it seems to me that the author of the bill should do it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I can say to the gentleman that if he does offer such an amendment he will have the support of at least one individual Member.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am sure of that.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does not the bill, by implication, try to dictate what the members of the Army and Navy shall read, in that it takes away their liberty in that respect.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I do not think so.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Read it, and you will find out that it does.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. It certainly prevents advocates of communism from spreading propaganda among the members of the armed forces of the Government and prevents any effort to provoke insurrection or spread mutiny and sedition.

Mr. O'TOOLE. It denies them the right of receiving the literature that this bill forbids.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. And very properly so.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GEYER of California. I am sure the gentleman wants to state the facts, and I understood the gentleman to say that there were something like 12,000,000 aliens in this country. The Secretary of Labor tells us there are about three and a half million, and I am wondering if the gentleman would like to correct that statement.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The Secretary of Labor stated they had a record of only that many. I am talking about the tremendous number of which we have no record.

Mr. GEYER of California. I beg to differ with the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. And if we will proceed to register all aliens in this country, then we can determine just how many we have here.

Mr. GEYER of California. The number I gave is according to the estimates of the Labor Department.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Is not the National Guard considered a part of the armed forces of the United States?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I think so.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And the gentleman knows that the National Guard is very often employed in labor disputes. Is not that correct?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. In some instances, I think so.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. And this section of the bill could very easily be used against strikers if they issued any leaflets during a strike, because it might be held to influence them.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Not unless they advocated overthrow of the Government by force and violence.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. What is advocacy of overthrow of government is a matter of opinion. Innocent people, labor people in particular, have been persecuted under similar ambiguous laws.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. The National Guard is not included unless the National Guard is called into Federal service; and does not that cover the gentleman's proposition?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. As the gentleman knows, one of the provisions of the bill provides for the registration of all future aliens upon filing their application to come to this country.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Yes; but that is a very insignificant matter.

Mr. CLARK rose.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BILL

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from North Carolina yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] to submit a unanimous consent request?

Mr. CLARK. I yield, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 28.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 28

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House, in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 6577) to provide revenue for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, is authorized and directed to make the following changes:

(1) On page 2 of the conference report agreed to by the House on July 18, 1939, under the heading, Table of Contents, in section 4 (a) strike out "resident", and in sections 4 (b) and 5 (c), strike out "and nonresident individuals";

(2) On page 7 of such conference report, in the heading of subsection (c) of section 5, strike out "and nonresident individuals"; and

(3) On page 18 of such conference report, in section 31, strike out "title VI" and insert in lieu thereof "title IX."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate concurrent resolution?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is simply a correction of some typographical errors in the bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The distinguished minority leader is correct, it is just to take care of some clerical errors.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUPPRESSION OF CERTAIN SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. COFFEE].

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation is a matter on which honest men and women will differ. For the distinguished author of the bill, the able gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], I have profound respect and affection, but I differ with him as to the means by which we should attempt to enforce patriotism in the United States. In 1798 the United States made the mistake of enacting alien and sedition laws. Such distinguished statesmen as Thomas Jefferson and James Madison inveighed bitterly against the enactment of these laws and as a result of their powerful arguments, such reprehensible acts were wiped off the statute books.

Now we find in the year of our Lord 1939 that we are attempting to imitate Nazi Germany. In the Weimar Republic of Germany, which preceded the Hitler regime from 1929 down to 1933, we find almost identical parallels, with attempts made in the Congress of the United States to enact alien-baiting legislation. And that is what this is, gentlemen—alien-baiting legislation. [Applause.] You can dress up this bill in any disguise you please, but a rose by any other name would smell as sweet, and a skunk cabbage by any other name would be equally odoriferous.

This bill is a measure to deny civil liberties to foreign residents of our country. In my own State of Washington the Federal judges have arrogated unto themselves the right of denying to an alien resident of that State the privilege to become a citizen, if he has been so unfortunate as to have had to solicit relief at the hands of any political subdivision of the State or Federal Government.

In other words, to epitomize, an alien resident of my State who has been unfortunate enough to appeal for relief at the hands of my county and has been unable to repay that money to the county, when he seeks to become a citizen is interrogated by the Federal judge to this effect: "Have you been on relief?" "Yes." "Have you repaid the money you have received?" "Judge, I have not been able to do so; I cannot get a job." "That is too bad. This Federal court will deny you the right to become a citizen of the United States until you have repaid the money to the governmental agency from which you have received relief." And now we want to proceed against the alien because he has not become a citizen of the United States. [Applause.] I have heard people who sponsor this bill denounce the alien on the ground that we have so many hundreds of thousands in this country who have failed to become citizens, and yet in the next breath they deny them the means to become citizens. If one will read this bill impartially he cannot help but come to the conclusion that the author and the sponsors of the bill act on the theory that all foreigners must ipso facto be aliens who are engaged in an effort to overthrow the Government of the United States by force.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the first of the alien bills before this Congress. The first was by the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]. That bill provided that we may deport any alien who has been found guilty of advocating a change in the form of government—the very thing which Thomas Jefferson said should be done in every generation, and which Abraham Lincoln advocated as a means of keeping the Government abreast of the times. The next bill was by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

That bill provided that any alien who had been convicted of a crime and had served his sentence, if that crime were tainted with moral turpitude, should be held subject to deportation—as in the present law—but provided that until such time as the country from which he emigrated would accept him back he should be picked up by the Secretary of Labor and held in a detention camp, which means imprisonment without limit, and in effect sets up concentration camps. The next alien bill was that offered in the form of an amendment to a bill, an espionage bill, sponsored by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]. No objection was made to the original bill, which was a bill fixing increased penalties for those guilty of espionage; but the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] introduced an amendment on the floor which provided for the revival or resurrection of the criminal syndicalism laws.

Criminal syndicalism laws cursed the statute books of many States and of the Federal Government for some years during and following the World War. A cursory or casual reading of a typical such law would incline the unwary to the conclusion that such a bill is innocuous and not inimical to the civil liberties of the residents of our country. Actually, the phrase "overthrow the Government by force and violence" was construed by innumerable judges as an interdictment of labor leaders who were prosecuting a strike against an employer for the elimination of asserted grievances. Thus, labor leaders and unions were persecuted and prosecuted, by reason of their strike and picketing activities, under the provision of criminal syndicalism laws by means of a distorted interpretation of the above-quoted phrase.

Last week the immigration committee of another body reported out favorably an amended bill sponsored by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], by the terms of which all immigration into the United States is prohibited for a period of 5 years. Pending now in committees of both Houses of Congress are bills providing for fingerprinting of aliens, the carrying of passports within this country, decreeing deportation for aliens who have not filed application for citizenship within 30 days of their arrival, the bills differing as to the time limit for such citizenship.

Mr. Speaker, one might well ask, Why this flood of alien-baiting legislation? The answer might include a declaration that these aliens cannot vote and therefore that no dangerous political repercussions will ensue. It is likewise the fashion to pick upon some scapegoat and visit upon him the blame for the ills from which we suffer. In Germany the Jew was the victim of such legislative pogroms. In this country of late it has been the fashion to direct our javelins of attack at the helpless alien noncitizen. The facts are that there are less criminals who are aliens than there are American citizens in the criminal category. Prison statistics prove this point irrefutably.

Let no one be deluded, there is tremendous sentiment in this country against the passage of these alien-baiting laws. On Thursday evening, July 13, I addressed a meeting in Philadelphia on the subject of antialien legislation. Present were 200 delegates representing scores of thousands of members of leading fraternal, social, business, political, civic, women's, and labor groups. The meeting unanimously condemned the instant bill and similar measures. The National Farmers' Union opposes this bill, and like acts, in a statement in which that great organization of farmers declares:

> The farmers are not in favor of studding our country with concentration camps; they do not want to be fingerprinted and asked for their passports whenever they go into town. Though allegedly aimed at aliens such measures * * * threaten to undermine our democratic institutions and destroy our liberty.

The International Labor Defense has vigorously denounced this and related measures, stating:

> The antialien mosquito is the carrier of the deadly Fascist germ. Its sting is directed at the citizen. Because aliens are considered convenient "goats" by a large proportion of Members of Congress (they have no votes), the bills are aimed ostensibly at them. The agitation for passage of these measures stresses that they are against noncitizens only. Actually, as any analysis will show, this is far from being the case.

The American Civil Liberties Union has, in a carefully prepared statement, vigorously urged the defeat of the Smith bill, the rule for which is now before us.

The Congress for Industrial Organizations has made a statement which I quote:

> If any alien has violated the laws of this country, there are ample police measures, both Federal and State, by which he can be convicted and truly punished.
> We feel that the civil liberties of all citizens of our country are menaced when such unconstitutional measures are directed against aliens, and we know that frequently alien bills are used to intimidate and threaten workers who are exercising their ordinary rights to join with their fellow workers in the improvement of their living conditions.

I attach hereto a summary of pending bills in relation to this subject matter prepared by the National Emergency Conference:

SUMMARY OF PENDING BILLS WHICH ENDANGER AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES

(Prepared by National Emergency Conference, 156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Chelsea 2-2062)

H. R. 130 (ARENDS, Illinois). Register all aliens and fix heavy business and professional fees; deport aliens on relief for 1 year; arrest without warrant; register all children of aliens.

H. R. 163 (LUDLOW, Indiana). Deport aliens attempting to induce the United States to favor one or more belligerents in a foreign war, other than through "legitimate exercise of free speech."

H. R. 273 (SMITH, Virginia). Deportation for crimes involving moral turpitude; arrest without warrant.

H. R. 278 (SMITH, Virginia). Ban aliens from practice of optometry.

H. R. 279 (TAYLOR, Tennessee). Deport aliens not taking out first papers within 1 year.

H. R. 280 (TAYLOR, Tennessee). Deport aliens considered "inimical to the public interest."

H. R. 999 (PACE, Georgia). Exclude all aliens; deport all noncitizens.

H. R. 1650 (DICKSTEIN, New York). Deny naturalization to aliens who "believe in" any other form of government, or who belong to organizations advocating other forms.

H. R. 3029, 3030, 3031, 3032, 3033, 3051 (STARNES, Alabama). Cut all quotas to 10 percent; extend quota system to Western Hemisphere. Prohibit all immigration for 10 years or until Congress certifies there are less than 3,000,000 unemployed. Deport aliens on relief. Deport aliens "inimical to public interest."

H. R. 3241 (WHELCHEL, Georgia). Prohibit all immigration for 5 years.

H. R. 3245 (WHELCHEL, Georgia). Prohibit all immigration; deport all aliens.

H. R. 3392 (STARNES, Alabama). Compulsory registration and fingerprinting of aliens.

H. R. 4006 (BOLAND, Pennsylvania). Appropriate $100,000 for deportation drive against "anarchists," etc.

H. R. 4905 (DIES, Texas). To deport "Fascists and Communists," under definitions which would include any noncitizen disagreeing with DIES' well-known views on Americanism, economic change, and class enmity. "Fascist" definition narrowed down.

H. R. 4907 (DIES, Texas). Same definitions as H. R. 4905; would apply Government control to internal affairs of organizations.

H. R. 4909 (DIES, Texas). Prohibits direct or indirect Government employment of persons defined in H. R. 4905.

H. R. 4172 (RANDOLPH, West Virginia). Deport aliens not taking out first papers within 1 year.

H. R. 4496 (LESINSKI, Michigan). Prohibit commuting into the United States to work.

H. R. 4860 (DEMPSEY, New Mexico). Deportation of aliens advocating "any change" in Government—passed by House of Representatives; would apply even though constitutional method advocated. Bill really amounts to deportation for mere opinion.

H. R. 6138 (SMITH, Virginia). Federal sedition statute; registration of civilian military organizations; punishment for disaffection in armed forces; exclusion, deportation, nonnaturalization of aliens under a variety of shotgun provisions; provisions of the Hobbs bill; provisions of the Dempsey bill, with added touches, etc.

H. R. 5196 (McLEOD, Michigan). Compulsory registration and fingerprinting of aliens.

H. R. 5481 (BROOKS, Louisiana). Deportation of all aliens failing to file first papers within 30 days.

H. R. 5483 (EVANS, New York) and H. R. 5484 (SHAFER, Michigan). Registration of noncitizens employed by Government.

H. R. 5643 (HOBBS, of Alabama). "Internment" (concentration camps) for alien criminals and anarchists "and similar classes" whose native countries won't issue passports to them. (Passed by House of Representatives.)

H. R. 1651 (DICKSTEIN, New York). Bars singers, actors, dancers, who are noncitizens from practice of their professions.

S. 407 (REYNOLDS, North Carolina), Cuts quotas to 10 percent; puts Latin America and Western Hemisphere on quota basis.

S. 408 (REYNOLDS, North Carolina). Compulsory registration and fingerprinting of aliens.

S. 409, S. 410 (REYNOLDS, North Carolina). Identical with H. R. 3052, H. R. 3030.

S. 411 (REYNOLDS, North Carolina). Deport aliens "inimical to public interest."

S. 668 (McKELLAR, Tennessee). Ban aliens from civil service.

S. 1383 (BROWN, Michigan). Prohibit commuting into United States to work.

S. 1470 (McKELLAR, Tennessee). Registration and fingerprinting of aliens.

S. 1979 (REYNOLDS, North Carolina). Deport aliens found by any Cabinet member to be "inimical, unfriendly, hostile, or opposed or antagonistic to Government of United States."

S. 1980 (REYNOLDS, North Carolina). Deport aliens with "political philosophy contrary to or opposed to the theory of Government of the United States"; aliens who have in their possession firearms or explosives. (Would include farmers with shotguns, workers with industrial explosives, or any person into whose pocket or car a pistol is planted.)

I warn the Congress that there are dangerous sections in this bill to which your attention should be called. On page 18, section 2, line 13, may be found certain words which provide that prohibited books and articles "may be taken from any house or other place in which it may be found." On page 19, section 4, line 3, will be found this tricky little phrase: "it shall be unlawful for any person to attempt to commit (sic), or to conspire to commit (sic), any of the acts prohibited by any provisions of this title." Under the broad provisions of these words there would not be much chance for an alien to prove his innocence because the phrases "attempt to commit" or "conspire to commit" give such broad latitude that no limits can be conjured. Also in this bill will be found statements referring to "international political agency seeking to change the character of the Government of the United States or influence its policies." In this language can be included any liberal organization or political party which professes to extend public ownership or advocate progressive reforms or collective security in international relations as the phrase "international political agency" is so indefinite and hazy that any conservative judge might construe it so broadly as to crack down on liberal groups generally. On page 21 of the act, title II, lines 8 to 11, will be found provisions whereby any alien who is employed in any place of amusement or resort "habitually frequented by prostitutes or where prostitutes gather" may be deported. Under the broad phraseology of this section almost anything can happen.

In this bill, Mr. Speaker, in title III, we find on page 27 a section which I quote—

> It being the intent and purpose of this section that membership in any one of the classes of aliens enumerated in section 1 of this act, at any time, of no matter how short duration or how far in the past (sic), irrespective of its termination or of how it may have ceased, shall require deportation.

Words fail me in attempting properly to describe this section. It has no parallel in the law. It is sui generis. It stands by itself. Under its provisions I am aghast at the possibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask this House to pause before enacting this bill into law. Are we not guilty of deliberately insulting nations with whom we maintain friendly diplomatic relations? Are we not humiliating their nationals? Are we not violating the traditions and experiences of a century and a half? I regret that the paucity of time vouchsafed me by the gentleman in charge of this bill prevents me from dilating at greater length upon what I consider are the weaknesses and evils of such legislation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Will the gentleman grant me some more time?

Mr. CLARK. I regret I have no more time that I can give the gentleman.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I do not see why a gentleman making such a full exposition of the bill ought not to have more time. [Applause in the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair admonishes our guests in the galleries that under the rules of the House they are forbidden to give expression of approval or disapproval to anything said on the floor. That is the rule of the House and the Chair requests that our guests observe it. Does the gentleman from North Carolina yield the gentleman from Washington any more time?

Mr. CLARK. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but the time has been allotted among those to whom I have promised time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] 10 minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been very much misunderstood, I am afraid, by some Members of the House who are opposing it. If you will read the bill I do not think that you will find that it does any red baiting. It does not do anything to aliens that ought not to be done to them, according to any fair-minded person. The bill has been very much modified and changed by the Committee on the Judiciary, and I say to the House that after the bill was drafted and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, that committee made it a continuing order of business for something like a month. That committee went over it day after day and considered it and held hearings and gave everybody an opportunity to be heard and completely redrafted the measure. I believe that it is a splendid measure, one that no one can seriously object to. It is not as strong a measure as I think it ought to be, and I hope perhaps the House may make some changes.

Certainly I can see no ground for the statements such as were made by my good friend from Washington [Mr. COFFEE] that this was a bill that was doing a lot of things to aliens.

I am going to use the brief time that I have in trying, in my feeble way, to tell you what is in this bill. By that I mean to say I will tell you what is in it, and what I do not tell you will not be in this bill, notwithstanding what some Members of the House may undertake to say, who perhaps have not even read the bill.

I want to take it up title by title. The first title of this bill is one which provides that it shall be unlawful to spread sedition through the Army and Navy of the United States. That bill was drafted and sent down here by the Navy Department, and I included it in this bill. It was their earnest request that it be adopted. At the hearings on this bill representatives of both the Army and Navy appeared and urged the adoption of this measure.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry I will not have time to yield. I only have 10 minutes.

Representatives from both the Army and Navy urged the adoption of this bill. If you will look at the hearings you will find it on page 35. The representative of the United States Navy who appeared before the Judiciary Committee made this statement:

> The Navy Department so far has not seen fit to do that—that is, court martial them—has not wished to proceed in that way. We simply discharge them as undesirable. But I cite this situation as evidence of the fact that, whereas the last time we came before Congress with this request we were forced to say there had been no apparent damage done, I am afraid now, gentlemen, that we have to report that damage is being done, and that is the reason this measure was renewed after it was allowed to lie dormant during the Seventy-fifth Congress.

That is the request of the Army and Navy, and that is all I have to say upon title I of the bill.

The next title of the bill amends the law for the deportation of criminal aliens. It is rather astonishing to me that the Members of this House of Representatives would make serious arguments on the floor of this House against the deportation of flagrantly criminal aliens. This bill amends the present law in that respect and adds several classes to the deportable criminal alien class. For instance, it adds to that class those who are found guilty of carrying machine guns and sawed-off shotguns in violation of the law. It is a little difficult for me to understand why Members of Congress should object to the deportation of those folk who come here from foreign countries and indulge in the use of machine guns and sawed-off shotguns upon our population. It adds to those classes of people who violate State narcotic laws. It seems that we have one State which has a narcotic law. This makes it a deportable crime to violate a State narcotic law.

There are several similar classes of people who are made deportable for criminal offenses, who are not deportable under the present law. That is all that title does.

You will find in this title II a great many classes, but most of those classes are already deportable under the law, and if you will look at the report, you will see which part is new matter and which part is simply a repetition of existing law.

Mr. CASEY of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry, but my time is so limited and I do want to explain to the House just what is in this bill.

Title III amends existing law and takes care of the unfortunate situation in the Strecher case. Those of you who are familiar with that case know that the court held that a man could be a member of a party who advocated the overthrow of the Government of the United States, but could not be deported unless he was a member of that party at the time he was arrested for deportation. This amendment changes that so as to avoid the situation where a person who, upon being suspected, could resign from that organization and say, "I was a member of that organization last week but I have resigned and you cannot deport me." That is exactly the situation under the law in the Strecher case. This makes it plain that a person who advocates the overthrow of this Government by force, and belongs to a party that recommends that to its people, shall be deported whether he belongs to it now or whether he belonged to it yesterday or last year, if he is an alien.

Now, that is the fair and square issue, and those who want to keep aliens in this country who favor the overthrow of this Government by force ought to vote against this bill, and those who want to throw them out on their necks when they advocate the overthrow of this Government by force, ought to vote for this bill. That is the issue fair and square on title III of this bill, and that issue cannot be changed by anything anybody may say on this floor. You will see it if you will read the bill and compare it with the present law.

The last title of the bill is that title which provides for the fingerprinting in the future of those aliens who come to this country. It seems to me if I were going to a foreign country I would like to be fingerprinted for purposes of identification. I can see no reason why anyone should object to that. Personally I would like to see all of those who are here fingerprinted.

I would like to see them registered. The Committee on the Judiciary, however, did not see fit to go that far, and all this bill provides along that line is that when a person applies for a visa he shall be fingerprinted, one copy sent to the Department of Justice, one attached to his visa, and one kept in the office of the consul where he makes his application. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GAVAGAN). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; if it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made in the House a while ago.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the whole bill here, to me, is very distasteful. I am not quarreling with the author of the bill or with the Rules Committee that voted it out; I am quarreling because of a custom that has been inaugurated in this House to refer bills to so-called supercommittees of the House when they rightfully belong to the standing committee designated by the House for that very purpose. This bill properly belongs to the committee set up to consider bills dealing with immigration and naturalization, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. I submit to the intelligence of the membership that this bill is purely and 100 percent a matter of immigration. The Committee on Immigration and Naturalization has among its membership, I believe, just as many capable men as there are in the Committee on the Judiciary. We are willing to go into this question. This question, Mr. Speaker, is a rather broad and comprehensive one that should be studied by men who are experts in this particular field, and we count among the members of the Committee on Immigration, Mr. Speaker, a number of distinguished men who have served on the committee for many years with great distinction, men who understand the situation.

In view of the fact that matters dealing with immigration, naturalization, and deportation are highly technical, I shall now proceed to analyze the Smith bill, as I see it, for the benefit of the House.

Sections 1, 2, 3, and 4 of title 1 make it unlawful for any person, including an alien, to advocate, orally or in writing, to any member of the Army or the Navy or the Coast Guard, that he should disobey the orders of a superior or the regulations governing military forces.

Section 5 of the bill provides that any person who is convicted of violating any of the preceding sections shall be punished by the imposition of a fine or a term of imprisonment, or both, and in the case of an alien requires that he be deported from the United States upon his release from custody by the court in which he is tried.

Section 6 of the bill adds a number of classes of deportable aliens:

(1) Any alien who for gain smuggles or attempts to smuggle an alien into the United States.

(2) An alien who engages in espionage after entry into the United States.

(3) Any alien who after entry into the United States is convicted of violating a State narcotic law.

(4) Any alien who at any time after entry possesses without a license a machine gun or a firearm with a muffler or silencer.

Inasmuch as the classes described in the paragraphs designated as (2) and (3) above have to a large extent been included in the Starnes bill, which passed the House on July 6, it is believed that those classes of deportable aliens should be deleted from the bill.

This section also amends the existing provisions of law with respect to aliens who have committed crimes involving moral turpitude in this country and have been convicted thereof and have been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for 1 year or more therefor. Under existing law an alien who twice has committed offenses involving moral turpitude and has been convicted and sentenced for each for a term of more than 1 year may be deported, irrespective of the period the alien has resided in the United States.

Under existing law, the alien who has committed but one offense involving moral turpitude and has been convicted and sentenced therefor for a term of 1 year's imprisonment may be deported only if the crime was committed within 5 years after entry. The proposal in this section is to make any alien subject to deportation no matter how long he may be a resident of the United States if he commits one crime involving moral turpitude and is convicted and sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more. In other words, the purpose of the amendment is to remove from the statute books the so-called statute of limitations applicable to aliens when deportation is sought because of the criminality of the alien. Sight must not be lost of the fact that the enforcement of the proposed provision will result in considerable hardship to the members of the family of the alien.

Section 6 also provides that when an alien is deportable because of crime, his deportation shall take place immediately upon his release from confinement. The purpose of this amendment is to clarify a provision of existing law which was intended to have the effect of permitting the immediate deportation of alien criminals when released from confinement.

By another provision of this section, an alien may not be deported who is within the new deportable classes unless the act making him subject to deportation occurs after the enactment of the bill into law. That provision also directs that the amendments shall have no effect upon aliens subject to deportation under the law prior to amendment.

Section 7, which comprises title 3 of the bill, amends the anarchist act of October 16, 1918, as amended, so as to make subject to exclusion and deportation any alien who has at any time, whether before or after entry into the United States, been a member of the classes excluded by the anarchist act of 1918. The amendment is an attempt to meet the objection made by the Supreme Court in the Strecker case as to past membership in a proscribed organization.

Section 8, which is title 4 of the bill, provides that aliens of the immigrant class seeking an immigration visa for entry into the United States shall be fingerprinted. Presumably the thought which led to the proposal that aliens be fingerprinted prior to obtaining an immigration visa was that it would enable the consular officials to identify criminals. Considering the fact, however, that complete fingerprint records are not kept by all of the countries of the world from which immigrants come, it is questionable whether fingerprinting will be of any value.

The Committee on the Judiciary has overlooked the fact that this bill conflicts with present law. The Committee on the Judiciary did not even take the trouble to find out that only 2 weeks ago this House passed the Starnes bill, which would take care of sections 2 and 3 of the Smith bill, as I have pointed out. The Starnes bill is now in the Senate. This committee forgot that with the Starnes bill enacted, should this bill become a law, no one would know what law should actually be enforced.

What does this bill try to accomplish? Mr. Speaker, I am not supporting communism, I do not want racketeers or smugglers to be permitted to exist in this country; I want to stop smuggling. If the Committee on Rules which now sits here bringing up this rule would grant to the Committee on Immigration a rule for the consideration of a resolution that has been before it for 6 months, something the Committee on Immigration has been begging the Committee on Rules to grant them, smuggling would be stopped. Why do they not report that resolution and give us an opportunity to present definite laws to the Congress that would do something for America besides the alien-baiting propositions we get here day in and day out?

What does this bill do? Oh, yes! If a little boy who happens to be an alien should steal an apple worth about a cent and a half, he is guilty of moral turpitude and must be deported. Even the President of the United States could not pardon him. He could be pardoned only by a special act of Congress. They are going to pick up a lot of other innocent victims, aliens who do not know their rights in this country, because of a charge of alleged moral turpitude.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman be so kind as to point out where in this bill is found any provision that would cover the situation of a boy stealing an apple and his being ordered deported because of that? This bill provides that it must be a case where the sentence is for a term of 1 year or more, or for a certain type of crime involving moral turpitude.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If my good friend will just bear with me—I regret I have so little time—I think I can show the gentleman where he is mistaken, for I think he is not acquainted with the present law.

Mr. KEEFE. Point out where such provision can be found or such case covered by this legislation; that is what I am talking about.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Wait a minute, my good friend, I am trying to answer the gentleman's question.

Under present law he must be convicted of two felonies involving moral turpitude. Those convictions could take place at any time during his stay in this country. If he is convicted of one crime involving moral turpitude during the first 5 years of his residence after his entry he must be deported. Under the proposed plan an alien would have to be deported upon conviction of one crime involving moral turpitude, even a minor offense involving moral turpitude, whether he is here 2 years, 3 years, 10 years, or 20 years.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. CELLER. I may say to the gentleman from New York that in numerous States petty larceny is by State statute a crime involving moral turpitude.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BARNES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BARNES. Does petty larceny ever carry a penalty of one or more years?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That has nothing to do with it in this bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Petty larceny in New York City carries an indeterminate penitentiary sentence of from 1 day to 3 years.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, we are going into a very serious question that deals with very important statutes involving aliens, and I submit that the committee responsible for this legislation ought to have the opportunity to study and recommend to the Congress of the United States legislation which is sound in principle, sound in thought, and for the best interests of America.

(Mr. DICKSTEIN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GAVAGAN). The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-one Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 135]

Bland	Buckler, Minn.	Cluett	Crosser
Bolles	Buckley, N. Y.	Connery	Crowther
Bolton	Burdick	Cooley	Cummings
Boren	Chiperfield	Creal	Curley

Dies	Green	McLaughlin	Schwert
Disney	Harrington	Maas	Scrugham
Ditter	Hartley	Maciejewski	Secrest
Eaton, Calif.	Healey	Magnuson	Shafer, Mich.
Evans	Hendricks	Mahon	Shannon
Faddis	Hennings	Marshall	Smith, Ill.
Fay	Hunter	Massingale	Smith, Ohio
Ferguson	Jarrett	May	Somers, N. Y.
Fernandez	Jenks, N. H.	Mitchell	Sumners, Tex.
Fish	Kean	Norton	Thomas, N. J.
Fitzpatrick	Kelly	Patman	Tinkham
Folger	Kerr	Reed, N. Y.	White, Idaho
Ford, Leland M.	Lea	Rich	White, Ohio
Gifford	McDowell	Robertson	Woodruff, Mich.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and fifty-six Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. CLARK, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to this rule. I believe the matter should be fairly dealt with and frankly and fearlessly debated by both sides of the House. Personally, I am opposed to the bill itself because, although in its original form it was far worse than it now appears, there are many provisions contained in the so-called Smith bill which will bring untold hardship to the aliens of our land. In the short time allotted to me I cannot point all of them out. I heard with interest what the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] said with reference to guns, for example. He said he did not see how anyone could oppose the deportation of an alien who had an automatic shotgun or a sawed-off gun in his possession; but he failed to mention the fact that in many States it is not unlawful to have an automatic gun, it is not unlawful for a citizen to have such a gun, but the minute an alien has a gun, although he may not be persecuted or prosecuted under the State statutes, just because he happens to be an alien he may be sent, God only knows where, ofttimes to a strange land, because he may have been here for many years. He can be sent off without a trial, without a conviction, upon the mere order of an administrative official. I say that is wrong. I am perfectly agreeable to having him sent hence, but at least give him a chance for his white alley. Let him be convicted first.

Mr. HOBBS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. May I ask the gentleman if the bill does not provide that the carrying of any one of the arms defined in the bill must be without authority of law?

Mr. CELLER. That makes no difference. He may have failed to procure a permit. He can be sent hence, nevertheless, and deported without a trial. That is what I am objecting to. He at least should have the opportunity to present his side of the proposition before a judicial tribunal. Even before his hearing on carrying the weapon without a permit he could be deported.

Mr. HOBBS. But before he may be deported on that ground, he would have to be carrying or in possession of the arms in violation of the law.

Mr. CELLER. I do not agree with the gentleman's viewpoint. He may be violating the law. The citizen who does the same thing goes off without any kind of a penalty being vented upon him in some States. I am speaking, of course, of certain States.

Furthermore, I loathe communism. I hate communism with all the energy in me. Nevertheless, this bill, as far as communism is concerned, is retroactive. You could reach back for years and take a man out of the bosom of his family and send him where he came from originally. All right. It is well to say, "Send him back," but suppose that a man should become addicted to radicalism in a fit of despondency, or over a strike, or on account of a lockout, or as a result of penury, want, and desolation, he had no other choice—so he thought at the time—except to become a radical, and there are situations exactly like that; then he repents, he is no longer a Communist; he is a Republican, a Democrat, or a Socialist, but he is not a Communist. He actually has repudiated communism. Yet under the terms of this act, having been a Communist for only 5 minutes or 5 years, for ever so short or long a period of time, he can be deported. I say it is unjust. It is just such measures that add to the fuel of communism. They make for dissatisfaction. It is the fuel and tyranny upon which communism feeds.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How could an alien be a Republican or a Democrat?

Mr. CELLER. He may be addicted to the principles of republicanism or the principles of democracy, although he may not as yet have his final papers granted to him.

For these reasons, among others, I am opposed to the bill.

Furthermore, deportation may be had of an alien who has been imprisoned for a term of 1 year or more because of his having been convicted in this country for a crime involving moral turpitude, such conviction having taken place any time after his entry into the United States. This is a very serious situation. Let me call your attention to the statutes in New York. Section 97 of our penal law provides that any person convicted of a crime declared to be a misdemeanor, and for which no other punishment is specifically prescribed, is punishable by imprisonment in the penitentiary or the county jail for not more than 1 year, or by a fine of $500, or both. This is a common provision in most of our States and covers hundreds of cases. Now, please note page 20, lines 24 and 25, of the bill under discussion. There it is provided that any alien may be deported if he had been sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 1 year, or if he had been sentenced for a term of more than 1 year. This is in the alternative. Now, a crime involving moral turpitude may be a simple matter of theft, the stealing of a handkerchief from a counter in a department store. Putting a slug into a gas meter may be a crime involving moral turpitude. And since for these minor crimes imprisonment for a year or more may be provided as punishment, an alien under these circumstances could be deported.

Furthermore, the selling of liquor to minors is, in some States, not only a misdemeanor, but a felony. Under the old prohibition law, particularly the Jones Act, conviction for such an offense would result in a prison term of from 5 to 10 years—a felony. If we had a recurrence of prohibition and similar enforcement statutes, a violation thereof would mean deportation, ipso facto.

In many other respects the bill is violative of our liberties and of the Bill of Rights. See, for example, its application as it affects the Army and the Navy; severe penalties are meted out to anyone who would advise, counsel, or solicit any member of the Army or Navy of the United States to disobey the law or regulations governing the Army or the Navy, or to disobey the orders of a lawful superior. That is very laudable. I, too, want to scotch naval or military sedition. But we must carefully examine those words and see how far they go. The bill is so broad and indefinite that it threatens freedom of speech and freedom of the press on all matters affecting the Army and the Navy. I am quite convinced that the recent manifesto of the Methodist Church concerning pacifism would come within that ban, and if distributed would bring down on its authors severe punishment.

A pronouncement against the use of troops in a strike might likewise get one into serious difficulties. A plea for fewer airplanes could be construed, under the bill we are discussing, as advice to disobey some Army regulation. A soldier, at the close of his furlough, might be with a girl, and she advises him to stay on the junket "a little longer." This could be construed as advice to disobey the orders of a superior officer.

Aside from all this, the testimony before the House Judiciary Committee indicated that there is no danger of military disaffection. Such provision in the Smith bill is founded upon a fear which is not real. There is no danger of disaffection in our Army or Navy for which our present laws are not adequate. Thus Commander Albert M. Bledsoe, of the Bureau of Navigation, stated in his testimony before the committee:

In all fairness I must state that I do not believe these [radical] organizations have been very successful, but I think that this lack of success is due more to the type of men that we are recruiting nowadays than to lack of effort on the part of these organizations (p. 28 of the hearings before the House Judiciary Committee).

And Lt. Ira H. Nunn, in his testimony before the committee, said, in part:

We are having some trouble, a little trouble, and, as Commander Bledsoe said, I believe that our comparative freedom from things of this kind can be laid directly to the high character and the intelligence of the men that make up our armed forces (p. 35 of the hearings aforementioned).

Why all these antialien bills? I presume they are the result of a desire on the part of some to palm off on the alien all the ills from which we are now suffering. It is so easy to make the alien the scapegoat and to blame him for everything and anything.

Furthermore, let us not be so fretful and worried about the alien, for pretty soon the alien will have become a citizen, or will have died or left the country. For the 6-year period ending June 30, 1938, there was greater emigration from than immigration to the United States. Thus, during that period, 241,962 immigrants were admitted into the United States for permanent residence. During the same 6-year period, 246,449 immigrants previously admitted to this country for permanent residence departed from these shores for other countries. Hence, during this 6-year period, 4,487 more aliens departed than were admitted to the United States.

In the further discussion of this bill in general debate, I shall have more to state in opposition to the same. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, if I could forget that my grandparents were aliens, if I could forget that there are Members of this House who have been aliens, if I could forget that this Nation had been built largely by the work and the help of aliens and that Hitler went into office by the persecution of minority groups, and if I could forget my oath of office, then I could remain seated here and let things carry along.

We might go back into history just a little bit. Let us go back to 1798, when the alien and sedition laws were passed. What was the situation at that time? We had a group of people who were taking literally and seriously our fundamental document that all men are created equal. They were demanding that property qualifications be removed from the right to vote. They were demanding that education be universal. They were demanding that labor have something to say about government. At that time it became convenient to tie up the alien situation with the social-justice demands of those days. Thus we had our first alien and sedition laws, of which this flood of bills are the followers. Let me say that the Federalist Party, the party that put those alien and sedition laws on the statute books, went on the rocks because of those laws and because the so-called radical, Thomas Jefferson, demanded that the great body of the plain people of the Nation have something to say about its affairs.

A little later we had another rise of democracy. Those dispossessed persons of the West under Andrew Jackson began clamoring for a part in their Government. At that time there was serious agitation for other such laws, but due to the quick action of Jackson no such laws were passed at that time. Let us recall that at that time Jackson was fighting that sacred cow, the national bank.

In 1919, just after the World War, we had another flood of these so-called alien bills. These bills were commonly termed the criminal syndicalism laws. At that time also labor was awakening and demanding a limitation on hours, and the I. W. W. was at that time prevailing. So, again we had the appearance of un-American anti-alien laws. Now, again, when social justice is in the limelight, when the wage and hour bill is with us, when the National Labor Relations Board is doing something for the workingman, when the people are thinking in terms of old-age pensions, and when we are adding better housing and are thinking about our youth, we have this flood of anti-alien legislation.

Let us recognize this bill for what it is, an attempt to put to an end this trend toward real democracy. It is an attempt to break the labor movement that is just now gaining so fast in membership. It is an attack on a minority group, the alien. It is the striking of the man below the belt. The man who has no vote and cannot defend himself. Hitler rose to power on just this type of laws.

There are those who appeal for the passage of this law on the grounds of patriotism. This bill denies civil rights to one class. Gentlemen, you cannot safeguard democracy by denying its fundamental principles to a particular class of people.

I suggest that you who defend this on the grounds that it is in accordance with fundamental American principles, go to the great harbor of New York where the Statue of Liberty stands as a guaranty to all who see the shore of their adopted country for the first time. I suggest that you read the inscription on that statue, and then come back if you are in the same mind still and talk about Americanism in the same breath as you speak of this bill. This is what you will see inscribed thereon:

Give me your tired, your poor,
Your huddled masses, yearning to breathe free,
The wretched refuse of your teeming shore:
Send these, the homeless, tempest tossed, to me:
I lift my lamp beside the golden door.

[Applause.]

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I am for this bill and I am going to vote for it. Let me say to the gentleman from California that my grandparents were aliens, but that is not the reason I am voting for the bill, and the fact that his grandparents were aliens ought not to be the reason he intends to vote against it. I am voting for it because I believe the people of this Nation are entitled to the protection that is provided in this bill against the un-American activities of aliens. [Applause.]

I am unable to see why a certain group in this House rises in mortal terror every time a piece of legislation is introduced that has for its purpose the protection of the citizens of America, and why great solicitude is shown for aliens who come here and violate our laws with the purpose of ultimately destroying our form of government. [Applause.]

I have no objection to listening to some of the arguments of some of these gentlemen provided they base their argument on facts that ought to be known to men of understanding and intelligence wherever they may come from in the United States. Because of some of the statements that have been made by certain gentlemen upon the floor of the House this afternoon I have taken it upon myself to try to answer in just a few moments the two gentlemen from New York in regard to statements they made in referring to line 25 on page 20.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] shed a great many tears over the fact that a little child who might steal an apple and be sentenced to a year in the penitentiary might be jerked from the bosom of his family and be deported, and he made such an argument as that on the floor of this House. I direct the attention of the Members of this House to the fact that we should consider this measure sensibly, sanely, and dispassionately; and if we do, we cannot come to any such absurd conclusion as that.

I direct your attention particularly to that line because it was referred to by the eminent chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. The line reads:

Any alien who is sentenced to imprisonment for a term of 1 year or more because of conviction in this country of a crime involving moral turpitude.

What is a crime involving moral turpitude? The gentleman from New York tells us it is a crime which may involve the stealing of an apple; that mere petty larceny is a crime involving moral turpitude. Let me read you the law:

"Moral turpitude," as ground of exclusion of an alien, means an act of baseness, vileness, or depravity in the private and social duties which one owes to society, and as applied to offenses includes only such crimes as manifest personal depravity or baseness.

This is the definition of moral turpitude that every man who has studied law has known from his earliest academic days. It is the law of New York just the same as it is the law of Wisconsin and the law of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not care to yield at this time. If you have any law, you can get time and bring it up here, and I will now cite the decision to which I have referred (203 Fed. 153). I am not reading anything except what the Court has so held, and in that decision, contrary to what the gentleman from New York says, the courts refused to deport an individual who had been convicted of a crime and sentenced to a year in the penitentiary. The courts held that the crime of which he was convicted did not involve moral turpitude.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. I might say that a lot of the other arguments that have been advanced are just as baseless as some of the arguments that we have heard here, and I might call the attention of the House to the fact that if you have not read it, I think that every Member of this House ought to read the speech which was put into the RECORD by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], which is found in the Appendix of the RECORD, page 3292, which to me is the most brazen slap in the face of every Member of Congress who has dared to vote for the Hobbs bill or the Dempsey bill or who proposes to vote for this bill. I want the gentleman from New York to know that I read that speech and I have voted for those two bills and I expect to vote for this bill and I consider his statement to be an insult to me and to every Member of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. WALTER. I would like to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in a great many cases warrants of deportation have been refused where the alien has served sentences of upward of 1 or 2 or even 5 years.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is absolutely correct, and I am only calling the attention of the House to this fact. While I do not pretend to be an expert, as the learned gentleman from New York, who is the chairman of the Immigration Committee, yet I have some common sense and as a lawyer of 30 years' experience, I can go and find the law in the books, and in 2 minutes, by going to the Library, I find a statement of the law that completely disputes the statements made on the floor of this House by these distinguished gentlemen.

We ought to have truth and facts in the statements made here upon the floor and not emotional appeals. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I may state to the House that it has been decided we will not proceed further with the bill under consideration than the adoption of the rule this afternoon.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, what will be the parliamentary situation tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not in position to answer the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois. The Chair cannot anticipate what measure may be called up tomorrow.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, the House having adopted the rule, is not this bill the unfinished business of the House on tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily. The rule adopted by the House makes the bill in order for consideration, but it is not necessarily the unfinished business. It can only come up, after the adoption of the rule, by being called up by the gentleman in charge of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, a completely new theory of government debt and government expenditures was propounded by the Secretary of the Treasury, Henry Morgenthau, before the Senate Banking Committee considering the President's proposal for a $2,800,000,000 lending-spending program this week.

It will be recalled that President Roosevelt himself enunciated the theory that inasmuch as the national debt was money the people owed themselves, it made no difference if the debt was passed on to posterity because posterity would be paying the interest to itself.

The principal of the President's new spending bill is for the Government to set up corporations which will sell their certificates or bonds to the public and then lend this money to so-called self-liquidating projects sponsored by the States and municipalities, and also to make loans to small businesses and foreign governments.

Then came Secretary Morgenthau with this novel statement:

The principle embodied in the bill constitutes a real advance toward the goal of bringing our governmental expenditures within our receipts.

If this startling and novel theory of government debt and spending is correct, then the administration should go all the way and propose that we organize corporations to borrow from the taxpayers ten or twelve billions a year, then relend it and in that way balance the Budget immediately. If the Government going into debt to the people by guaranteeing the bond issues of governmental corporations is an advance toward the goal of getting the Government out of debt, then rain water is as dry as dust and black is as white as snow.

Under questioning by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] before the House Banking and Currency Committee today the Secretary of the Treasury admitted that under this act, as proposed by the administration, the President could put through his two pet projects, the Florida ship canal and the Passamaquoddy Bay development, and similar projects, which have been refused by the Congress.

The truth of the whole matter is that this $2,800,000,000 borrow-lend-spend scheme is designed to give President Roosevelt $2,800,000,000 to play with outside the regular debt of the Government and outside of the statutory debt limits.

The fact that these projects will not all be self-liquidating is evidenced in the bill itself by the provisions that if the assets held by the governmental lending corporations do not equal the amounts loaned, the Congress shall appropriate the difference to be paid to the corporations out of the general funds from the Treasury. It is obvious, of course, that if these projects were to be in fact self-liquidating, there would be no necessity for provisions in the act for the Congress to vote funds in the future to take care of anticipated deficits.

Of course, the possibilities of making a political pork barrel out of this $2,800,000,000 are almost limitless. Any conclusion as to whether or not any of this money would be used to play politics must be based upon the administration's attitude toward the Hatch bill, which seeks to take politics out of relief. Instead of lending the great prestige of his office in support of the Hatch bill, the President apparently has done no such thing, while his advisers and supporters have moved heaven and earth to kill the measure, and failing in that, to render it entirely innocuous.

Nobody in Washington is so naive as to believe the administration wants politics taken out of relief or relief out of politics, and the same situation undoubtedly would obtain if Congress gives Mr. Roosevelt $2,800,000,000 more to play with.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address delivered by myself last Sunday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a brief letter on the subject of Federal old-age pensions from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an article in the Postmasters Advocate of July 1939.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of business tomorrow and all other special orders I be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of all business on Tuesday next I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent that instead of speaking today I may be permitted to address the House for the same time next Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that the two rules that we have scheduled for tomorrow will be the only legislation considered.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is all.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

4805. Also, petition of the Central Trades Labor Council, New York City, opposing enactment of the Wheeler bill (S. 2009) and the Lea bill (H. R. 4862); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4806. Also, petition of the Order of Railway Conductors of America, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, urging support of the Lea transportation bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4807. Also, petition of the American Trucking Association, Inc., Washington, D. C., opposing the House transportation bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4808. Also, petition of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees, Detroit, Mich., urging support of the Lea transportation bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4809. Also, petition of the Mallory Transport Lines, New York City, opposing the Lea transportation bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4810. Also, petition of the International Longshoremen's Association, New York City, opposing the Lea transportation bill (H. R. 4862); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1939

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 18, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Blessed be Thou, O Lord God of our fathers, for that Thou hast called us out of every people and tongue to become a new nation, dedicated to Thy service and the welfare of Thy children. Make us and all those in authority mindful of the privilege we share. Give us help to rule ourselves in all justice and equity, that we may escape the condemnation which ever awaits those who oppress and despoil. Strengthen us with the sense of Thy ever-present guidance, and revive our Nation with a firm resolve to be a light to lighten the nations into a state of international law and comity. Through Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Wednesday, July 19, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. MINTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Reed
Andrews	Ellender	La Follette	Russell
Ashurst	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	Gillette	Lundeen	Slattery
Barkley	Glass	McCarran	Stewart
Bone	Green	McKellar	Taft
Borah	Guffey	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bridges	Gurney	Maloney	Thomas, Utah
Bulow	Hale	Mead	Tobey
Burke	Harrison	Miller	Townsend
Byrd	Hatch	Minton	Truman
Byrnes	Hayden	Murray	Tydings
Capper	Herring	Neely	Vandenberg
Chavez	Hill	Norris	Van Nuys
Clark, Idaho	Holman	O'Mahoney	Wagner
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Overton	Walsh
Connally	Hughes	Pepper	Wheeler
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Pittman	White
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Radcliffe	Wiley

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY] is unavoidably detained.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution of Typographical Union, No. 6, of New York, N. Y., protesting against certain provisions of the Works Progress Administration resolution relative to hours of work and wages, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of members of the Workers Alliance of America, of Pampa, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to restore the art and other so-called white-collar projects under the W. P. A., and to eliminate wage cuts and the payless furlough in the W. P. A. program, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from United Federal Workers of America, Local No. 2, Washington, D. C., embodying the results of a poll of employees of the Department of Agriculture on certain provisions of the so-called Neely retirement bill, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution of the Commercial Credit Co., of Baltimore, Md., favoring the prompt enactment of legislation to amend certain provisions of the National Labor Relations Act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of neutrality legislation to keep the Nation out of foreign war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a resolution of the Department of Maryland, Veterans of Foreign Wars, favoring further restrictions in regard to criminal aliens and aliens illegally in the United States, and requesting that the immigration laws be fully enforced, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution of the Baltimore (Md.) branch, National League of American Pen Women, favoring the return of the U. S. frigate Constellation to the port of Baltimore, and requesting that the frigate be assigned a permanent berth at Fort McHenry, Md., which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McNARY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4540) authorizing the restoration to tribal ownership of certain lands upon the Umatilla Indian Reservation, Oreg., and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 885) thereon.

Mr. VAN NUYS, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6614) to amend the Government Losses in Shipment Act, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 886) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to which was referred the bill (S. 2420) relating to certain inspections and investigations in coal mines for the purpose of obtaining information relating to health and safety conditions, accidents, and occupational diseases therein, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 887) thereon.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6505) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States," approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 888) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HOLMAN:

S. 2840. A bill to prohibit the immigration of aliens into the United States during the present period of abnormal unemployment and the expenditure of public funds for the relief of the unemployed; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

S. 2841. A bill to authorize the construction of buildings and other facilities for the use of the Government on lands conveyed to the United States by the city of Alameda, Calif., on what is known as Government Island, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

S. 2842. A bill to provide for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States from the decision of the Court of Claims in a suit instituted by George A. Carden and Anderson T. Herd; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. O'MAHONEY:

S. 2843. A bill granting easements on Indian lands of the Wind River or Shoshone Indian Reservation, Wyo., for dam site and reservoir purposes in connection with the Riverton reclamation project; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BYRD:

S. 2844. A bill granting an increase of pension to Mary W. Osterhaus; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 2845. A bill to amend section 355 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, to make permissive the acquisition of legislative jurisdiction over land or interests in land acquired by the United States; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WHEELER:

S. 2846. A bill to amend the act entitled "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, as amended; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado:

S. 2847. A bill for the relief of Tony Cirone; to the Committee on Claims.

LOANS FOR SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MEAD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2759) to provide for the construction and financing of self-liquidating projects, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

THE PRINTING INDUSTRY AND PROPOSED COPYRIGHT CONVENTION (S. DOC. NO. 99)

On motion by Mr. HAYDEN, memoranda regarding the probable effects on the printing industry of adoption of the Copyright Convention, with a foreword by Mr. HAYDEN, were ordered to be printed.

TRADE AGREEMENT WITH THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

[Mr. GIBSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD letters from Vice President Osmeña, Jacob Gould Schurman, and Francis B. Sayre on the subject of a trade agreement with the Philippine Islands, which appear in the Appendix.]

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2065) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5735) to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 153. An act to transfer jurisdiction over commercial prints and labels, for the purpose of copyright registration, to the Register of Copyrights; and

H. R. 6065. An act to authorize major overhauls for certain naval vessels, and for other purposes.

MARKETING QUOTAS FOR CORN

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, some time ago I introduced Senate bill 2694, amending section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, dealing directly with the marketing quotas for corn; and also Senate bill 2695, amending section 335 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, dealing primarily with the marketing quotas for wheat.

On Tuesday last both those bills passed the Senate after explanation and debate. On the same day the House of Representatives passed two companion measures, both arriving in the Senate immediately after we had passed Senate bills 2694 and 2695.

Yesterday by unanimous-consent agreement the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was discharged from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 342.

I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 342, which is on all fours with Senate bill 2694, and squares with it insofar as the objective is concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 342) relating to section 322 of the Agriculture Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUCAS. I now move that the vote by which Senate bill 2694 was passed be reconsidered, and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

MARKETING QUOTAS FOR WHEAT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, with respect to House Joint Resolution 343, which I have heretofore explained, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which that joint resolution has been referred, be discharged from its further consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. I now ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 343.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution will be read by its title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 343) to amend section 335 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LUCAS. I now move that the vote by which Senate bill 2695 was passed be reconsidered and that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, yesterday I canvassed some features of Senate bill 162. I see present now a number of Senators who were not in the Chamber at that time. I desire to refer briefly to the features of the bill which I canvassed yesterday. I stated at that time, and I wish now to repeat, that the principal matters of controversy in this bill are two. First, there is objection to a differentiation between new wool and reworked wool; and, secondly, there are certain manufacturers who are opposed to labeling of any kind at any time and in any way.

Yesterday I read from the American Wool Handbook, the standard publication in wool technology, the method of manufacturing shoddy and the effect of such manufacture upon the fiber of the wool and upon its length and its value. That matter is in yesterday's RECORD, of course.

Yesterday I also referred to the fact that early in 1938 it was the general consensus of opinion of technologists in the wool business that reworked wool cannot be distinguished from virgin wool in the manufactured cloth.

Then I proceeded to show that since early in 1938 the Department of Agriculture has been working upon that problem, and some of the leading technologists in private industry have been working upon the problem; and I set forth in the RECORD letters from the Department of Agriculture and tests made by private technologists showing that today not only may the presence of reworked wool and virgin wool in manufactured cloth be determined, but the respective amounts of each of those classifications may be determined with a reasonable and fair degree of accuracy.

I also stated yesterday and read from a report of the Federal Trade Commission on the matter of the expense involved in enforcing this bill if it becomes a law. I stated that last year it was asserted that the expense would be enormous. The communication from the Federal Trade Commission says that not only will the expense not be heavy, but, in their judgment, the enactment of the bill may reduce their present expenses, due to their efforts at this time to take care of the many complaints which come to them about unfair practices in reference to the textile trade.

When we had a similar bill before the Senate last year, and when it was passed by the Senate, a suggestion was made that we would be unable to control foreign imports; that foreign imports would come in here free from the requirements of our labeling law. We have a provision in the bill of this year which takes care of that matter.

I also read into the RECORD yesterday a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in which he sets forth the particular classes of additional employees, both in foreign shipping centers and in our ports, that will be necessary in order to see that there is no violation of the Labeling Act, or, if there is a violation, at least that it will be reported. The Secretary of the Treasury says that the additional expense, both here and abroad, including house rent abroad, will amount to a total of only about $55,000. That is a very nominal sum indeed when we consider the enormous amount of imports, not only of rags from abroad, but particularly of shoddy and of manufactured garments which come over here on the strength of the old theory that in order to get a nice cloth it is necessary to get it from England. It comes over here and passes for virgin wool, when as a matter of fact it has in it a large percentage of reclaimed wool.

I also mentioned yesterday that the use of rags and shoddy in this country is increasing rapidly; that whereas a few years ago, of the amount of wool taken by the mills about 25 percent was shoddy, at this time 40 percent is shoddy. In other words, of the wool taken by the mills, 60 percent is virgin wool, and 40 percent, or possibly a little more at this time, is shoddy or reworked wool.

I also stated that within the past year the importation of rags from Great Britain has increased about 1,550 percent, so that we probably are getting to a point where very soon, as a result of the process of reworking rags abroad, the rags of Europe will be clothing the American public, and especially American men.

It has been frequently asserted that if this bill is passed, sharpers—who evidently are not sharp now, or they would be doing the same thing—will buy a cheap grade of virgin wool and make it into a virgin-wool fabric and label it virgin wool, and thereby destroy the value of virgin wool labeled by the good manufacturers who now make virgin-wool products in the United States. If that were possible to be done, of course, the same supposititious set of sharks or cheaters would be at that practice now.

I demonstrated yesterday, I believe, that the values and uses of various grades of virgin wool and reworked wool are comparable. In other words, a cheap grade of virgin wool is used in such manufactures and for such purposes that if a reworked wool is used in substitution the same grade of reworked wool is used for that purpose; and when a high grade of virgin wool is used, if reworked wool is used in substitution it is necessary to have a high grade of reworked wool. So the only method by which to compare values is to compare like with like and kind with kind.

Mr. President, while I was talking yesterday the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] asked me to what extent and what sort of labor organizations were supporting Senate bill 162. I told him I would endeavor to obtain that information, and I have gotten it from the hearings.

Francis J. Gorman, president of the United Textile Workers of America, appeared in support of the bill, and his testimony appears on pages 38 to 43 of the hearings. I understand that last year when he testified his organization was associated or affiliated with the C. I. O. At this time, I believe, it is again in the fold of the American Federation of Labor.

I desire to read a very brief paragraph from Mr. Gorman's testimony. In the first place, I should say that he is specifically in favor of this particular bill.

He says:

The old caveat emptor basis of doing business has been discarded by a decision of the United States Supreme Court. Our business slogan need no longer be, "Let the buyer beware." With better identification of the portion of virgin wool, reclaimed wool, and other materials used in wool manufacture, the wool worker can take greater pride in his craft, the manufacturer can afford to build a reputation on quality merchandise, the clerks in the stores need not qualify as bunco artists, either purposely or through their own lack of information, and the consumer will get what he asks for.

Because the label will disclose it.

He goes on, and says:

We are not opposed to the use of reclaimed or shoddy wool or of cotton or rayon for mixture purposes. Many materials, which are neither originals nor pure in quality, have their uses, and these uses may be valid and admirable. What we contend is that there should be accurate identification so that the purchaser may know what is being purchased.

There also appeared before the committee Mrs. Maie Fox Lowe, president of the Women's Auxiliary to the National Federation of Post Office Clerks. Her testimony begins in the hearings at page 80. I wish to read just a short paragraph of her testimony at page 83. Mrs. Lowe is testifying:

There was one other thing which I should like to say: The opponents of this bill say that other fibers are necessary in wool goods besides virgin wool. If those things are necessary and if the addition of those other fibers makes a better garment, why be afraid to put it on the label and let the consumer be the judge? That is what we want to know. We think we are entitled to know what we buy. If we have to buy or choose to buy a garment that has other things in it than wool, that is perhaps our business or our misfortune. But if we want to buy all virgin wool we should be entitled to know it.

Then I asked Mrs. Lowe this question:

I suppose it would be true that if you bought a garment with 50 percent virgin wool and 50 percent reclaimed wool and it proved to be satisfactory, then you would have no objection to buying another one?

She said:

I certainly would not, and I would be glad to know just what it was, so I could ask for another one next time.

In the record also appears the statement of May Peake, international president of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the International Association of Machinists. That is an American Federation of Labor organization, I understand. Her statement appears at page 82.

There is also in the hearings, at page 124, a letter from I. M. Ornburn, secretary-treasurer of the Union Labor Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, and also the testimony of John M. Baer, who testified last year, and who is connected with that department. I wish to read, for the benefit of the RECORD, just a few paragraphs from the letter of Mr. Ornburn, secretary-treasurer of the Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor, addressed to me:

DEAR SIR: My absence from Washington prevents a personal appearance before your committee. I am, therefore, requesting that the following statement be included in the record of the hearing on S. 162, the wool-products-labeling bill of 1939.

The Union Label Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor urges the passage of this measure, as it has supported previous bills aimed at protection of the consumer, especially the provisions that would force disclosure of the reclaimed wool or shoddy content of wool products.

Our department represents 51 directly affiliated international unions of the A. F. of L. with a membership of over 1,000,000, including the Sheepshearers' Union which is directly interested in this legislation. In addition, our department's activities have the loyal support of the 4,500,000 members of the American Federation of Labor. Furthermore, the American Federation of Women's Auxiliaries of Labor, representing 2,000,000 women, is organized under our department.

I will not read the remainder of the statement; it is rather long.

Mr. President, at the hearings it was contended by some of the garment manufacturers from New York City, and possibly one or two from some other points, as I recall, though I am not sure, that in the application of the provisions of the bill it would be a physical impossibility, or at least it would present a great and onerous burden, to keep the labels on the goods from the time the manufacturer makes the goods until the goods are sold at the retail store. Some effort was made to show that in the process of manufacture the identity of the particular piece of cloth would be lost, and, because of the loss of its identity, it would be impossible to attach the proper labels which the manufacturer had given for a particular piece of cloth.

Mr. President, if this were a good objection, to my mind, it would be a very serious one, because certainly we do not want to enact a bill which cannot be enforced. So, because that presented a serious question to my mind, I sought and secured from one of the leading garment manufacturers of New York City a technical statement as to just what the procedure is from the time cloth is made until it leaves the hands of the manufacturer, where the loss is supposed to occur. Because that is an important question, and because it is one which would appeal to Senators, I shall take a few minutes this morning to read the statement I received, because I am not a manufacturer of wool, and I am not familiar with the wool business, except as I have studied it for the past few years. Therefore, in order to keep the record straight, I shall take the time to read this statement. It is as follows:

GARMENT MANUFACTURING

The production of garments is operated on two basically different principles: (1) Inside manufacturing, and (2) the contracting system. Wages are also based on two systems—(1) weekly basis and (2) piece-work basis. Of the two wage systems, by far the largest volume of garments are made on the piece-work system. Inside manufacturers represent a restricted group of higher-priced garment manufacturers, whose output is limited and whose product is made on their own premises. These manufacturers make garments against order only and cut from one to four or five at one time. All goods moving through their factory from the time the piece goods are received until the goods are shipped are specifically identified as to source and quality of materials, color, style, and price.

By far the greatest volume of garments sold by so-called garment manufacturers is made for them by contractors, comprising independent firms who work for a number of garment manufacturers making garments according to specified prices which are agreed upon between the garment manufacturer and the contractor. This system is followed by both manufacturers of better and medium grade garments and by volume manufacturers making the lowest priced garments. The sole difference between the better and medium grade garment manufacturers and the cheaper volume manufacturers is that the former, as a general rule, cut garments against actual orders, while the latter accumulate a stock of garments and then sell them from their racks. In other words, the volume manufacturer speculates on the probable market for particular styles of garments, and as a selling inducement offers customers a lower price and "immediate delivery" as against the normal period of time required by the better and medium grade manufacturers to produce against orders received.

As a general rule, manufacturers of the better and medium grade garments accumulate a number of orders which are taken in their showrooms or by traveling salesmen from individual retail customers. When a sufficient number of orders have been accumulated for what is termed a "cutting" the total quantity represented by this order are assembled according to the style and quality and color of fabric and are listed on what is known as the "cutting ticket." (See exhibit A.) This cutting ticket lists explicitly the order number, the quality and color of fabric, and the quantity of each size garment which is to be made. This is the order which goes to the contractor and is, in effect, his specifications. The contractor obtains from the garment manufacturer the necessary quantity of fabrics and linings which are to be used to fill his order. The woolen fabrics and lining specified on the cutting ticket are charged at a fixed price to the contractor, and he includes the cost of these materials in the price which he quotes the garment manufacturer for making the garment. This is the identical system followed by the volume manufacturer of lower-priced garments, except that instead of making garments sold he makes garments he expects to sell.

Because different sizes of garments in the same style made of the same fabric require different amounts of yardage, garment manufacturers specify on the cutting ticket the exact yardage to be used in each garment according to both the style and size. This very careful record is made of the materials when they are sent by the garment manufacturer to the contractor, for the following reasons:

(1) To make certain the contractor receives the correct yardage.

(2) To enable the garment manufacturer to make an accurate check of the finished garments when they are returned, to be certain that the order has been correctly filled in all details.

(3) To prevent contractors from substituting cheaper imitations of the fabrics sent them by the garment manufacturer.

(4) To prevent contractors from making and delivering sizes smaller than those which have been ordered. This latter check has been necessary because it has not been an uncommon practice in the past on the part of contractors to deliver sizes 12 and 14 against orders for sizes 16 and 18, thereby using a smaller amount of yardage than would otherwise be necessary.

I may say parenthetically that that is stated in the testimony of some of the garment manufacturers who are opposed to labeling. That is one of the principal troubles they have had, one of the reasons for the conciliation agreement, in which 266 members and corporations are associated, and under which they spend the sum of $280,000 a year in endeavoring to patch up their differences.

The testimony also shows that sometimes there will be a faulty place in cloth, or a faulty color, or some other defect, and it will come back, perhaps from a retail store in Wyoming or California, and will finally get to New York, where demand will be made of the manufacturer of the cloth to make good. Evidently, therefore, there is no trouble in telling who manufactures cloth, no matter how far the cloth goes.

I continue the statement:

Where this has been done—

That is, where sizes 12 and 14 have been delivered against orders for sizes 16 and 18—the contractor has either sold the surplus goods or has made it up into garments in his customer's styles which he has sold on his own account to retail stores.

Contractors manufacturing garments operate almost entirely on the piece-work system, on a basis rigidly established and maintained by the very powerful and effective men's and women's garment manufacturing union. The prevailing system in both the men's and women's wear garment industry is for an operator to make the garment, a finisher to add the final details and inspection, and a presser to steam and press the garment prior to its delivery back to the garment manufacturer. (In certain parts of the country the garments are manufactured in what is known as sections—that is, certain specialists make sleeves, others make the body, and a final operator sews the parts together. This, however, is not the prevailing system, and the details of its operation will be explained later.)

When the cutting ticket (exhibit A) for a given number of garments to be made either of the same fabric in the same color, or of different fabrics and different colors in different styles, reaches the contractor, together with the necessary materials, the following is the sequence of operation:

(1) The goods are checked to make certain that necessary materials are all there.

(2) A work ticket (exhibit B) for each garment which is to be cut is made out according to the information indicated on the cutting ticket. This work ticket thereafter accompanies the garment from the time the different parts are cut and assorted until it is returned to the garment manufacturer.

(3) This work ticket, it will be observed, comes in four sections, which not only maintains the identity of the garment so far as the quality, kind, color, and style of garment are concerned, but it is also the basis on which the operators concerned in making the garment collect their piece-work pay. Each of the four sections of the ticket is numbered identically. Three of them read, "operator," "finisher," and "presser." These are the three workmen who make the garment. The fourth section is the master section for the records of both the contractor and the garment manufacturer. Its final disposition is when this stub is sewn into the lining of the garment for the information of the garment manufacturer when he receives the finished garment from the contractor. The garment manufacturer's receiving clerk checks this work ticket stub containing the order number, the style, the size, the color, the quality and kind of fabric used, the fur (if any), and all the other details needed to be recorded. Having assured himself that the details of the order have been fulfilled, the receiving clerk of the garment manufacturer rips out this work ticket stub and replaces it with the garment manufacturer's own hanging ticket, containing information identical or similar to that on the work ticket stub itself.

(4) After the work tickets are made out against the specifications of the cutting ticket they are placed in the hands of an assorter, and the materials to be cut into garments go to the cutter, who lays them out on the cutting table in various thicknesses of cloth numbering from 10 to a maximum of 50 thicknesses, according to the weight and thickness of the fabric, and the size of the order. As the end of each piece is laid on the cutting table it is marked across with heavy chalk marks which signify (a) that this is the end of a single piece of goods; and (b) that according to the number or other symbol marked in chalk it is the end of a particular piece of goods from a particular mill. After the "lay" is completed a pattern is chalked on the top layer and the thicknesses of goods are cut through in one continuing operation with an electric cutter.

The assorter with the work tickets picks up from each layer the different parts of one complete garment, tying them in a bundle and affixing to each bundle the work ticket with its serial number and other specifications as to the quality and color of fabric and style and size of garment to be made. The assorter watches carefully for the chalk marks in the different layers, signifying the beginning or end of a new piece, because, even in handling goods of the same quality, pattern, and color from the same mill, there is danger that one part of a garment may be taken from one piece and a second part from another piece. This must always be avoided, because, even in the same goods from the same mill, there is always sufficient variation between pieces of the same quality and color to make it impossible to sew them into one garment without this fact being at once apparent when the garment is finished. Errors of this character are occasionally made, and they are always discovered either by the inspection of the contractor himself or during the later inspection in the receiving room of the garment manufacturer.

The assorter further guards himself against errors by making up a detailed chart (see exhibit C), which in a measure is a replica of the cutting ticket, except that on the right-hand side opposite the listing of the specific quality of fabric to be used in the styles to be made up there is pinned or pasted a sample of the fabric. As each bundle of garment parts is made up and the work ticket affixed the assorter refers to this illustrated guide to be sure that there has been no error.

(5) The bundle parts of the garment next go to the operator, who makes the garment and cuts off that section of his ticket on which his piece-work wage is paid. This ticket goes to the foreman, who credits the operator with one finished garment and sends his stub to the accounting or bookkeeping department.

(6) This same procedure is followed by the finisher and presser, each one of whom detaches his section of the work ticket after he has completed his task.

(7) When completed, the garment, with the stub of the work ticket sewed into the garment, is returned to the garment manufacturer.

SECTION WORK

There is a slightly different process in what is called section work, although it is basically the same.

In some garment manufacturing centers there is a certain amount of so-called section work on garments, made both for men and women; that is, certain operators make sleeves, others make bodies, and still others may sew the different parts together into a complete garment.

The procedure in the section work factories is practically identical with that in the other factories where the entire garment is made by one operator and is finished and pressed by specialists. The work ticket merely includes more parts designating the operations used in completing a garment. In section work the same care must be observed to avoid making one garment out of different pieces of goods. To prevent this, as the section worker makes his particular part of the garment he refrains from breaking the thread as each part is finished so that when they go to be assembled the different parts are all attached to one another by threads. Each part bears an identical serial number showing what piece of goods it came from, and they are matched when the parts are put together. At no time is the specific identity of the particular fabric or the particular piece of goods from any mill lost. Should this occur the garment would be worthless because the difference in the texture or the color in various parts of the garment would be immediately discernible. This is true even though the fabrics are of an identical quality, type, and color, and come from the same mills. It is much more true when the same types of fabrics in identical colors come from different mills.

MILL IDENTIFICATION

Every piece of goods delivered by any mill or jobber to any garment manufacturer or contractor bears a piece-goods ticket which is firmly attached to it by a strong cord, giving the piece number, the quality number or kind, the color number, and the exact yardage. In addition, most mills stamp their names and trade-marks on the back of the goods every yard or so or on the selvage.

There was testimony that the selvage is always cut off and lost; and that the identification ticket would be attached to the selvage and then it would be lost.

The selvage is rarely, if ever, cut away, in manufacturing. It is used wherever possible at the seams. The mill identification stamp on the back or on the selvage, however, is merely a collateral and not the chief means of identifying the goods. This identification, which begins with the cutting ticket, is continued on the work ticket and ends with the stub on that work ticket sewed into the lining of every garment of the manufacturer for whom the contractor has made the garment.

IDENTIFICATION OF DIFFERENT FABRICS BEING MADE IN THE SAME STYLE BY THE SAME CONTRACTOR IN ONE CUTTING

Volume garment manufacturers who order one particular style of garment to be made in four or five different fabrics have a very simple and effective method of maintaining the identity of these fabrics. In making out the cutting ticket (see exhibit A) a specific style is always identified by number. For example, a particular style will be numbered, let us say, No. 485. This is a style to be made in the fabrics of woolen manufacturer No. 1. Where a second, third, fourth, or even a fifth fabric of different mills is to be made in the same style, at the same cutting, the basic style number is maintained and the different fabrics are identified by prefixing to this basic style number the numerals from 1 up; i. e., style No. 485 is made in the fabrics of mill No. 1. The same style cut at the same time from the fabric of another woolen manufacturer will be listed as style No. 1485; style No. 485 made in the fabric from a third mill will be identified as style No. 2485, and so on. These fabric and style identification numbers are transferred from the cutting ticket to the work ticket, and these numbers are on the stub of that work ticket when it is sewn into the completed garment. They are further checked by the garment manufacturer when the garments are delivered to him by the contractor and the fabrics are compared against actual samples to verify the fact that there have been no errors or substitutes in delivery.

Mr. President, I ask to have included at this point as part of my remarks in further explanation of the statement I have read, two sheets, which are marked "Exhibit A" and "Exhibit B," which show in detail how the mill identification is carried right along. Exhibit A contains a cutting ticket, and exhibit B contains work tickets. I also ask to have printed an order sheet marked "Exhibit C." It contains a line of swatches or samples, which, of course, will be excluded from the RECORD because they are samples of cloth, and the Government Printing Office is not able to reproduce them. I also offer two other exhibits, 1 and 2, and ask that they be printed at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matters referred to are as follows:

EXHIBIT A—CUTTING TICKET

As explained on the preceding page, this cutting ticket is for style No. 485 in eight different fabrics, which are identified as to their mill source by numerals placed in front of the basic style number.

This number must appear on your invoice: No. 246 A
Mr. JOHN SMITH.

All merchandise must be manufactured exactly in accordance with the instructions herein contained, and if, upon delivery, found to be unsatisfactory, for any reason whatsoever, in whole or in part, such garments as are unsatisfactory shall be rejected; if any garments on this order are sold by us and rejected by our customers, for any reason, such garments shall be returned to the contractor, who agrees to make payment therefor.

Any advances that shall be made by us to the contractor shall not be construed to be approval and acceptance of any merchandise delivered.

EXHIBIT B—WORK TICKET

These work tickets are attached to the assembled parts of individual garments. The style numerals indicate (a) the basic style and (b) the fabric in which the style is made. The stub is sewed into the garment on completion so that the garment manufacturer may check deliveries and be certain that the order has been filled correctly in all details, including the quality and kind of fabric ordered.

VARIATIONS IN CUTTING TICKETS AND WORK TICKETS

Exhibits A and B, illustrated in the preceding memorandum, represent the cutting tickets and the work tickets used generally by contractors working for volume lower-priced garment manufacturers.

Contractors working for the better and medium-grade garment manufacturers use basically the same system, but the cutting tickets and the work tickets provide a trifle more information.

The cutting ticket of a better-grade garment manufacturer, it will be noted, specifies in succeeding columns the exact cloth to be used, the sizes, the number of the piece from which the fabric is to be cut, the yardage and lining required, and the furs, if any. The final column is reserved for the price which will be paid to the contractor and includes the price charged the contractor by the garment manufacturer for the materials furnished him.

EXHIBIT II

This particular work ticket is for a suit. It is the same as the work ticket shown in exhibit B, except that the stub which is sewn into the garment when it is completed contains explicit information regarding the exact fabric and color used.

The last possibility of any confusion regarding fabrics used in garments made by contractors would be eliminated by a universal adoption by contractors of this work ticket (exhibit No. II), the stub of which specifies the exact fabric and color used in making the garment.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I have a memorandum which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks. I recall that when the question of canned beef was being discussed in the Senate the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] called attention to the fact that the Navy had been making its own cloth for a great number of years, and he suggested tentatively that possibly it might be necessary at some time to make a similar provision in order that the Army might get proper beef. I have here the Navy specifications as to officers' uniforms, uniforms and overcoats for enlisted men, miscellaneous garments, shirts, jumpers, socks, and so forth. They are all made of virgin wool with the exception of socks, which contain a 50-percent cotton mixture.

I also have the specifications of the War Department for the Army, and with the exception of two heavy types of overcoats the garments are all made of virgin wool. The lighter overcoats are made of virgin wool, and the suits are made of virgin wool, as well as the sweaters and the shirts. The drawers are made of a combination of virgin wool and cotton. The gloves are made of virgin wool. Under the item "Gloves" there is added this notation:

The use of reworked wool, card strippings, card fly, or similar waste is prohibited.

And so on down the line. For the two heavy overcoatings, in which alone there may be the use of any reworked wool, the specifications are as follows for the 32-ounce olive drab—and this comes down from the time when there was an insufficient supply of wool to furnish garments to the American soldiers in the World War:

4. Overcoats (32-inch olive drab): Woolen yarn, composed of 55-percent wool, grade 44s or finer; 10-percent wool, grade 58s or finer; 35-percent reworked wool or noils.

They have the option to use the reworked wool or noils.

5. Overcoats (slate blue, 30-ounce): The wool shall be fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 56s, United States standard. Not more than 35 percent of the blend may be reworked wool and/or noils of the same grade.

I ask that the memorandum be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM—WOOL CONTENT SPECIFICATIONS FOR CLOTHING PURCHASED FOR THE UNITED STATES ARMY AND NAVY

I. ARMY

1. Uniform (serge, slate blue, 11/12-ounce): "The wool for warp and filling shall be shorn from live sheep and be not lower in grade than 64s, free from kemp; shall be sound in staple and of superior character."

2. Overcoats (melton, slate blue, 18-ounce): "The wool shall be fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 64s, United States standard. The use of noils and/or reworked wools is prohibited."

(b) Enlisted men

1. Uniform coats (serge, olive drab, 18-ounce): "The wool for warp and filling shall be fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 64s, United States standard."

2. Uniform trousers (elastique, olive drab, 18-ounce): "The wool for warp and filling shall be sound staple fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 64s, United States standard."

3. Uniform coat and trousers (serge, slate blue, 18-ounce): "The wool for warp and filling shall be fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 64s, United States standard."

4. Overcoats (32-ounce olive drab): "Woolen yarn, composed of 55-percent wool, grade 44s or finer, 10-percent wool, grade 58s or finer, 35-percent reworked wool or noils."

5. Overcoats (slate blue, 30-ounce): "The wool shall be fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 56s, United States standard. Not more than 35 percent of the blend may be reworked wool and/or noils of the same grade."

(c) Miscellaneous

1. Sweaters (worsted, olive drab): "Shall be sound staple fleece, or pulled wool, of not lower grade than 56s, Department of Agriculture standards."

2. Shirts (worsted, olive drab): "The wool for warp and filling shall be sound, staple fleece and/or pulled wool not lower in grade than 60s, United States standard."

3. Drawers (cotton-wool, mixed): "The finished fabric shall contain not less than 50-percent wool by weight. The fabric for subtypes 5 and 12 shall be knitted in such a manner that neither the cotton nor the worsted yarns will be thrown wholly to the face or back. The finished fabric for subtype 15 shall contain not less than 36-percent wool by weight."

(NOTE.—"Attention is invited to the fact that requirements for texture and wool content for these garments specify the minimum, and manufacturers should take note of the fact that it may be necessary for them to knit the garments to a higher texture than specified, in order that they may finish the garments to these requirements; similarly, as to wool content, it may be found necessary to use more than 50-percent wool in order that the finished garments may be at least 50-percent wool.")

4. Gloves (woolen, olive drab): "The wool used in the manufacture of the gloves shall be found, strong staple fleece, or pulled wool not lower in grade than 56s, current United States Department of Agriculture standards. The use of reworked wool, card strippings, card fly, or similar waste is prohibited."

5. Gloves, nurses (woolen, olive drab): "Sound, staple wool not lower in grade than 56s (three-eighths blood)."

II. NAVY

(a) Officers

1. Officers' uniforms (blue, dark): "Shall be fleece wool, of a grade not lower than 70s (United States standard); staple shall be of sufficient length to meet the hereinafter-described requirements, and shall be free from the admixture of vegetable matter, reworked wools, waste, or any other adulterants."

(b) Enlisted men

1. Uniforms (Melton, dark blue, 16-ounce): "Shall be fleece wool, of a grade not lower than 64s (United States standard); staple shall be of sufficient length to meet the hereinafter-described requirements, and shall be free from the admixture of vegetable matter, reworked wools, waste, or any other adulterants."

2. Overcoats (kersey, dark blue, 30-ounce): "Shall be fleece wool, of a grade not lower than 60s (United States standard); staple shall be of sufficient length to meet the hereinafter-described requirements, and shall be free from the admixture of vegetable matter, reworked wools, waste, or any other adulterants."

(c) Miscellaneous

1. Shirts and jumpers (dark-blue flannel): "Shall be wool, fleece, pulled or scoured, of a grade not lower than 58s (United States standard); staple shall be of sufficient length to meet the hereinafter-described requirements and shall be free from the admixture of vegetable matter, reworked wools, waste, or any other adulterants."

2. Jerseys: "Shall be not lower than 56s (United States standard); combing wool, free from the admixture of vegetable matter, reworked wools, waste, or any other adulterants. The yarn shall be two-ply worsted. No pulled wool shall be used."

3. Socks (wool and wool-cotton mixture): "The blend shall be composed of wool, not lower in grade than 64s (United States standard) of sound, strong fiber and cotton. The blend shall be so proportioned that the finished socks, exclusive of the heel and toe, shall analyze not less than 50-percent wool."

(NOTE.—"Attention is invited to the fact that the requirements for texture and wool content for the finished socks are minimum. Therefore, manufacturers should take note of the fact that it may be necessary for them to knit the socks to a higher texture, and to use more than the specified wool content in order that the finished socks will meet the minimum requirements.")

4. Undershirts (cotton-wool, mixed): "The finished fabric shall contain not less than 50-percent wool by weight. The fabric for subtypes 5 and 12 shall be knitted in such a manner that neither the cotton nor the worsted yarns will be thrown wholly to the face or back. The finished fabric for subtype 15 shall contain not less than 36-percent wool by weight."

(NOTE.—"Attention is invited to the fact that requirements for texture and wool content for these garments specify the minimum, and manufacturers should take note of the fact that it may be necessary for them to knit the garments to a higher texture than specified, in order that they may finish the garments to these requirements; similarly, as to wool content, it may be found necessary to use more than 50-percent wool in order that the finished garments may be at least 50-percent wool.")

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, the Schwartz bill requiring woolen manufacturers to disclose to consumers, by means of labels, the fiber content of their products, already has the active support of consumer, farm, trade, and labor organizations with a combined membership of more than 12,000,000 persons. In contrast to this, the opponents are comparatively limited in number.

The supporting organizations include, among others:

General Federation of Women's Clubs.

New York City Federation of Women's Clubs.

Chicago and Cook County Federation of Women's Organizations.

American Farm Bureau Federation.

National Grange.

National Farmers' Union.

National Cooperative Council.

National Wool Growers Association.

Texas Sheep and Goat Raisers Association.

United States Live Stock Association.

American Federation of Labor.

Women's Auxiliary, National Federation of Postoffice Clerks.

United Textile Workers of America.

The vital importance of informative labeling legislation for consumers is emphasized in a bulletin entitled "Informative Labeling," issued in June 1938, by the Consumer-Retailer Relations Council organized under the auspices of the National Retail Dry Goods Association. This council includes in its membership the American Association of University Women, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National Retail Dry Goods Association, the National Association of Better Business Bureaus, Inc., and the National Better Business Bureau, Inc.

Among the representatives of national and regional groups of women's clubs who appeared in support of the Schwartz bill, was Miss Julia K. Jaffray, representing the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs. Miss Jaffray declared that a substantial number of the members of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers recognized the desirability of the proper labeling of wool products with a differentiation between virgin wool and reclaimed wool.

Representatives of labor, including the American Federation of Labor, through the union label trade department, and of the United Textile Workers, also urged the passage of the Schwartz bill. In a statement to the House committee considering the Martin bill, I. M. Ornburn, secretary-treasurer of the union label trades department of the American Federation of Labor, declared that:

> The union label trades department represents 51 directly affiliated international unions which have a membership of over 1,000,000, including the Sheep Shearers' Union, which is directly interested. Our department has the loyal support of the 4,500,000 members of the American Federation of Labor. In addition, I represent 2,000,000 members of women's auxiliaries in the American Federation of Labor. Consequently, I speak for both men and women in the American Federation of Labor, and I speak for them as consumers.
> We are particularly concerned that wool garments be so labeled that the consumer may know within reasonable limitations how much actual virgin wool was used in the manufacture of the cloth of the garment. If substitutes for virgin wool are used—reclaimed wool or rayon or cotton or other fibers—the consumer is entitled to know of their use. * * * We see no justice in * * * delaying passage by Congress of any legislation necessary to strengthen the hand of the Federal Trade Commission in protecting the public from unfair trade practices.

Woolen manufacturers also strongly urged the passage of the Schwartz bill for the protection of the consuming public and for their own protection against manufacturers of adulterated products. They stated that reclaimed wool is an inferior substitute for virgin wool, and results in an inferior product. Some 75 of the most important and representative manufacturers of women's garments, in letters filed with both the Senate and the House committees, declared that this legislation is not only necessary for the proper information of the public, but is essential for their own protection against widespread unfair competition.

The Forstmann Woolen Co., which is located in New Jersey, through its representatives also urged the passage of the Schwartz bill, stating in briefs filed with the Senate and House committees, as follows:

> It is a matter of common knowledge in the wool industry that for years the undisclosed use of reclaimed wool in wool products has been increasing steadily, and that this increase has been greatly accelerated whenever prices for virgin wool have shown an upward tendency. During this same time the undisclosed use of fibers other than wool has also increased tremendously. The net result has been that the wool-manufacturing industry, the only customer of the great American wool-growing industry, today uses more than 50 percent of fibers other than virgin wool in products which it sells to the public as "wool" or "pure wool."
> A law which will assure the public necessary information regarding the fiber content of wool and part-wool products must establish as a fundamental a clear differentiation between virgin wool fibers and reclaimed wool fibers. Consumer organizations argue quite correctly that from the standpoint of family economy it is particularly important that wool products be reliable in character, providing adequate protection against climatic conditions, and giving long and satisfactory wear and service. * * *
> The wool manufacturer—and not the intermediate jobber, wholesaler, or retail merchant—is responsible for the wear, service, and protection which his products give to millions of consumers, to whom their purchase represents an important part of the family budget. It is the manufacturer, and the manufacturer only, who knows from his records the kind and quality of wool fibers or other fibers which he has utilized in his products. Therefore, he, and he alone, should provide this information in a complete form through all channels of trade up to and including the consumer, and he should be held strictly accountable for any false or deceptive claims which he makes, either by inference or direct statement in the sale of his products.

I want to point out here, Mr. President, that this comes from a very large wool manufacturer, who makes absolutely clear that the manufacturer should have this responsibility. He, as a manufacturer, wants to have it. I stress this point because it has been urged, and probably will continue to be urged, that a manufacturer can only with great difficulty protect the public after the product has left his woolen mill. This very responsible manufacturer says that it can be done and should be done. The Senator who is in charge of this bill has described how it may be done, how it may be done positively and actually. This is simply another instance, obviously, of a reputable manufacturer who is seeking to protect the public saying he can do it, and that other manufacturers can do it and should do it.

Following the unanimously favorable report of the House committee on the Martin bill, on June 16, 1938, Mr. LEA, chairman of the committee, issued a statement to the press declaring that the testimony revealed a situation demanding remedial action by Congress to protect the consumer, the American wool grower's market and legitimate woolen manufacturers.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very glad to yield to my dear friend, the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AUSTIN. Has the Senator based his argument principally upon the Martin bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. My answer is "No." But I would have to qualify the answer by saying that I want to know just what the Senator means by "principally." I know there is a difference between the Martin bill and the Schwartz bill; but in fairness to the Senator, I must say that in a certain measure or degree what I say is based on the Martin bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BARBOUR. The principles embodied in the pending Schwartz bill have been upheld repeatedly in the United States Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has declared that a manufacturer or vendor "has no constitutional right to sell goods without giving the purchaser fair information as to what is being sold," and has stated further that "the rule of caveat emptor should not be relied upon to reward fraud and deception." The standards of business conduct to be observed by manufacturers and vendors in the marketing of products are set forth in the following excerpts of recent decisions:

* * * And it is too plain for argument that a manufacturer or vendor has no constitutional right to sell goods without giving to the purchaser fair information of what it is that is being sold. The right of a manufacturer to maintain secrecy as to his compounds and processes must be held subject to the right of the State, in the exercise of its police power and in promotion of fair dealing, to require that the nature of the product be fairly set forth.

The chief objections to informative labeling legislation for the wool industry have always come from the National Association of Wool Manufacturers. For more than a quarter of a century the association opposed all legislation which would give the consumer any information at all regarding the fibers used by its members in the manufacture of their products. The failure of these measures was noted by the association in its annual reports as an accomplishment on behalf of the industry. Under the pressure of public demand the association has modified its attitude within the past 2 years. It has now agreed to disclose the use of substitute fibers other than wool but opposes disclosure of the use of reclaimed wool as a substitute for virgin wool.

At the present time, and for the past several years, the spokesman for the association has been Arthur Besse, its president. In the short time elapsing since June 1937, Mr. Besse has made various appearances before congressional committees and the Federal Trade Commission and has issued numerous statements defining the attitude of the association toward informative fiber identification legislation for the wool industry.

In the light of the position taken by the organizations to which I have referred, the great labor groups and many other groups who favor this proposed legislation, in the light of the able and detailed speech in behalf of the bill by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. SCHWARTZ], whose name the bill bears, I will not delay the Senate longer, unless anyone wants to ask me any questions. So I conclude, Mr. President, by simply saying that I believe that all the foregoing requires no further comment than the assertion that obviously it provides conclusive proof of the necessity of the passage of the Schwartz bill in the protection of the public.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. I have received a letter from Mr. Millard Brown, president of the Continental Mills, Inc., manufacturers of textiles, Armat and Lena Streets, Philadelphia, Pa. I wrote to him sometime ago about the bill and asked him to give me some suggestions so that we might be able to perfect the bill. I quote from his letter as follows:

Let me say to you that this bill cannot be perfected. It is an attempt to benefit one class of the people of the United States at the expense of another section of the people in the United States by men who are absolutely ignorant of what they are attempting to do. The result of this bill will be loss and chaos to the wool grower, on the one hand, and loss and chaos for the employers and employees of the wool textile industry on the other hand, nobody benefiting by it.

Is the Senator sufficiently familiar with the industry to give me his opinion as to the value of that statement?

Mr. BARBOUR. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that I cannot believe all the organizations which I enumerated in the beginning of my remarks can be wrong in any such great degree as that, or could so misstate the fact. I admit to the Senator that there are manufacturers who are very much against this proposed legislation—manufacturers who use shoddy or other substitutes for wool. On the other hand, there are many other manufacturers, of my own knowledge, who use only pure wool, who feel that the passage of the bill would be a great benefit to the trade, not only to their business but to the trade as a whole.

The same argument I think might possibly be used in connection, say, for an example, with milk. In other words, if there is required a standard of purity for milk, which I mention just by way of illustration, it does have a tendency to monopolize that product or commodity in the sense that others who may be adulterating milk cannot longer sell it as pure milk. Some of the largest wool manufacturers, one of them, anyway, in my State, advocate this bill. They say as manufacturers that they can label their goods and see that the wool is traced straight through by a system of ticketing, so that in the final disposition of the article by retail in the sale of a suit of clothes it will carry a label which will guarantee what the cloth really is. The suit in that instance will be made of real, pure wool and so marked.

I, myself, never was in the woolen business, but I was in the manufacturing business for 25 years, and my father and grandfather and great-grandfather before me were in the same business. I mention this only because it indicates that I, myself, and my forebears, have had, may I say, some manufacturing experience. We knew that in the production of our product there could be, if we would stoop to such a practice, the addition of other inferior fibers. Ours is a long-length product, such as yarn, thread, and twine, and we were always glad to show—and we did and do show—on the label that it was pure flax if it was pure flax. The label in that case has always been a guaranty of quality. I, myself, cannot believe that the mere labeling, I would say to the Senator from Pennsylvania, would ruin the trade, unless that trade were improperly labeling their product.

I do not impugn the sincerity of the statement that has been made to the Senator by the manufacturers in his State, but I can show the Senator letters equally strong from other manufacturers, saying that this bill, when it passes, will greatly help increase the production of wool in the United States, will help the wool grower in the United States, and will help the laborer in the factories. I cannot answer technically the Senator's question, but I think I have answered it truthfully.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Brown is a very prominent manufacturer of textiles in Pennsylvania; he is president of the Continental Mills; and he informs me that, probably, if we would introduce a bill similar to the British merchandise marks act and substitute it for Senate bill 162, it would be far better for all concerned.

Mr. BARBOUR. I cannot say as to that, but I should like to have the Senator, if he would be so good, inquire and ascertain whether or not Mr. Brown's concern is not a user of shoddy which it is selling today as wool, or even pure wool. Certainly, the passage of the bill would embarrass any such situation as that, because the producer would have to label his product properly hereafter. I do not say Mr. Brown's factory is doing that, or is doing anything wrong. I do not suggest any such thing; but this proposed legislation does not mean that anyone cannot produce cloth out of anything he wants to. It would not stop a man using reclaimed wool or reworked wool, rayon, cotton, or anything else. It simply says when he does that the cloth so manufactured has to carry that information on its label. It cannot be called something else.

Of course, if a man has been—and I do not charge, as I have said, that this gentleman has been—as I said in my speech, perhaps before the Senator came into the Chamber—if he has been purporting to produce a wool product, and even in some cases has designated it as even pure wool, and it has not been wool or pure wool, this bill, if enacted, would create some chaos in his business until he changed his method of labeling.

Mr. DAVIS. Can the Senator tell me what effect the passage of the bill would have in our own market upon importations that may have shoddy in them? Probably British importations of cloth would have to be labeled, would they not?

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not know just exactly, in all its details, what the situation is in relation to labeling imported articles. Certainly, they should be labeled; and I think—though I am not sure of all the details, as I have said—that they do have to be labeled properly.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARBOUR. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I think I can explain that matter. The bill provides that articles imported from abroad, when they come in, must be labeled according to the provisions of this bill; and that information must appear upon the manifests which are required under other sections of the general law, the tariff laws. Under the bill those provisions will be enforced by the Treasury Department, and not by the Federal Trade Commission, until after the products get into this country.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in a letter which I received from this very prominent manufacturer in our State he says:

> To comply with this act would be extremely uneconomic and would severely handicap the wool textile industry in the fight which is facing it against the importation of British fabrics.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. As a matter of fact, it would protect us against the importation of British fabrics, because there is a delusion abroad in the United States that if one wishes to get a nice piece of cloth he has to get it from Great Britain. As a matter of fact, most and nearly all of the product that comes in is not a high grade of virgin wool but is largely a reworked wool. It is foreign rags worked up into reworked wool. Under the provisions of the bill, there will have to be a labeling to show the contents of the goods, and the importer will have to stand behind the goods, and the investigations and administration of the law will be carried on by the Secretary of the Treasury and the customs officers. So, as a matter of fact, on that particular point the enactment of the bill will be a great service to American manufacturers.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator is familiar with all the testimony that was presented. I wonder if there was presented to him a chart such as I have here. If the Senator will examine the chart, he will find that at the top of the chart is 100-percent virgin-wool fabric, which is the best fabric of wool, having a fabric merit of 90 percent; and going down on the chart the Senator will find that there are four other fabrics of 100-percent virgin wool which have fabric merit ratings of 76 percent, 61 percent, 58 percent, and 57 percent, respectively.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; the chart was based on some kind of theoretical merit ratio. We do not know where the cloth comes from. We do not know who selected it. We do not know what its relative weight of wool is. We do not know whether one was a closely woven piece of cloth and whether another was loosely woven. From my study of it, I do not think the chart amounts to anything except as an additional boost to those who are opposed to any kind of labeling.

Mr. BARBOUR. Let me interject here that the subject of so-called merit—the broad, elusive subject of the embracing term of merit—is not the point we are discussing. It is not the point of this legislation. We are discussing wool content—virgin wool content as against reworked wool and substitutes for wool, and the necessity hereafter of truthfully labeling materials so as to show the actual product or substance of which they are made.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, can the able Senator from Wyoming tell me the difference between the British bill and the bill of which the Senator is the author?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The British bill, as I understand, provides that if a manufacturer labels, he must tell the truth; but he does not have to label if he does not want to. Is not that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is what I understand the situation to be.

Will the Senator answer this question: Does the Senator understand that the British law has been eminently successful?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I do not know whether or not it has been eminently successful.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator know that the record shows that that kind of a law can be and is enforced?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Oh, yes; surely; and this kind of a law can be enforced.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; too much.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It will not be enforced too much to suit some people.

Mr. AUSTIN obtained the floor.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

WAGES OF RELIEF WORKERS

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I am grateful to the Senator from Vermont for yielding to me.

I desire to again respectfully warn Senators concerning a situation which will arise on September 1 in the Work Projects Administration unless Members of Congress are able to prevail upon the Administrator to set aside what seems to be a decision to cut the wages of relief workers on W. P. A. projects in the North and in the West.

I called this matter to the attention of the Senate on one occasion during the past week, and now I note in the Hartford Times of July 18, in an article by Bruce Catton, in which he is referring to the Works Progress Administration, the following:

> Nor will it have any discretion on September 1, when two far more drastic provisions go into effect—the 30-day payless "holiday" for all reliefers who have been on the W. P. A. rolls for 18 months or more—

I should like to say, parenthetically, that I opposed that provision when the bill was under consideration, and I am opposed to it now—> and the proviso that wage differentials between northern and southern sections be abolished, which will mean wage cuts for somewhat more than a million W. P. A. workers.

Mr. President, I should not be much excited about this matter if the threatened wage cut were not going to affect the man who is a certified relief worker, and who, in my section of the country and in all of the North, and I understand in most of the West, is receiving in the neighborhood of $60 or less per month—$60 per month to support a family!

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONEY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It may be interesting to remark at this point that in many instances the compensation received by relief workers is substantially less than $60 per month.

In region No. 1, from which the Senator comes, the range is from $40 per month to $94.

In region No. 2 the range is from $32 to $79.

In region No. 3 the range is from $26 to $79.

So a false impression is given if one speaks of an average of $60 per month. It is my understanding that there is no such widespread average. The fact of the matter is that hundreds of thousands of relief workers are receiving the minimum, which varies from $26 in the South to $40 in the North and in the West.

I am very glad indeed that the Senator is expressing his opposition to the attitude which apparently is being adopted by the W. P. A. in supporting the amendment which originated in the House, which fixes the 130-hour-per-month schedule.

Mr. MALONEY. I am grateful to the Senator. When I spoke of $60 per month, I was referring to what seemed to be the maximum wage of the relief worker.

I offer no criticism of Colonel Harrington. I think Colonel Harrington shares the view I hold, and that he himself is distressed because he seems to feel it necessary to put into effect this wage cut. I have pointed out to Colonel Harrington, as I reminded the Senate a few days ago, that I think the law provides a sufficient leeway to allow him to maintain the existing wages in the North and in the West. The word "substantially" is used in the law, and I think he might properly keep wages at their present level in the North by a liberal interpretation of the word "substantially."

Further in the law—and I specifically quoted the law in the Senate a few days ago—provision is made concerning the cost of living in the various parts of the country. I know it is difficult to determine accurately what the cost of living is; but I know that in all the United States there is no place where the cost of living is higher than it is in the section of the country from which I come.

To show that Colonel Harrington is sympathetic, I should like to read briefly from his testimony in the House hearings, in which Representative CANNON of Missouri asked him this question:

> You think you are operating this program as economically as it can possibly be operated to meet the actual needs?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. The only big economy I can see in operating the program is to cut the wages.
> Mr. CANNON. What effect would that have on the standard of living of those being paid out of these funds?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. The reports I get state that the standard of living under W. P. A. is low. We know that in many areas the people whose income is from W. P. A. employment are not getting enough to eat. I do not mean to say that they are starving. I do not want to exaggerate it, but they are on a subnormal diet at the present time.
> Mr. CANNON. The wages they get are below what is necessary to provide actual food needs?
> Colonel HARRINGTON. I believe that is true; yes, sir.

Mr. President, if that is true, and if that is the opinion of the head of the Work Projects Administration—and it is—I say it is the responsibility of Members of Congress, and particularly Members of the Senate, to express their opinion during the next few days. In my opinion it is possible that we shall be gone from here in 10 days; and, in my opinion, unless the Members of Congress emphasize to Colonel Harrington how they feel about the language of the law, and point out to him what they feel was the intent of the law, there is a continuing danger, as the daily press constantly points out, that these wage cuts will become effective.

I shall delay the Senate only a moment more, to point out something which has come to me from the press of my State. I was very sorry to read in the Hartford Times of July 18 that "At least 5,000 W. P. A. workers will be permanently dropped from Connecticut projects under terms of the Federal Emergency Relief Act, it was learned today," and from the New Haven Register of the same date I learn that the Work Projects Administrator for my State has just returned from a conference at Chicago, a conference called by Administrator Colonel Harrington—at which W. P. A. administrators of the various States were in attendance. Immediately upon the return of the administrator to my State he called a meeting of the sponsors in Connecticut, and the New Haven Register has this to say about it:

> Mr. Sullivan listed five major points upon which special emphasis must be placed immediately. They are: Immediate separation of all project workers who have had continuous employment on such projects for 18 months or more, excepting war veterans.

I should like to say again that I am very hopeful that Congress will make an effort to correct the very serious mistake it made. I pointed out at the time the bill was under consideration that it was a mistake, that it was wasteful and extravagant, and that it was going to have a cruel effect upon men who had been denied a chance to save money because of their meager wages.

I should like to continue this brief article—and this is one of the five major points to which I wish to call special attention:

> A continuous review of certification of all project employees of W. P. A.; readjustment of the security wage, which will lower wage rates in this area.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that, as a result of the conference in Chicago, there is a possibility that the administrators were instructed to cut the wages at this time; so I make a special and final plea to the Senate, and more particularly to those Members of the Senate who represent northern and western States, that unless they do something about this matter, unless they make their opinions known—and in this instance I call as a witness Colonel Harrington—there will be serious suffering after September 1.

Mr. President, I have concluded, and I wish to express my special thanks to the Senator from Vermont in permitting me these few moments of his time.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

MONTHLY WAGE SCHEDULE IN DANGER

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I merely want to add a word to what has been so well said by the Senator from Connecticut.

I think the attention of the Members of the Senate and of the House, and that of the public, should be drawn to the fact that there are two questions involved in this matter of W. P. A. wages. The first of these has to do with the so-called prevailing rate of wages. The second has to do with the rearrangement of the monthly security wage schedule which apparently is now in progress. The two are absolutely independent of each other and should not be confused with one another. If there has been any dissatisfaction in the land as a result of the abandonment of the prevailing-wage provision which has been in all the relief bills up to date, it will not be a patch upon the dissatisfaction which will become apparent when on the 1st of September relief workers in the West and in the North come to a realization that the present miserable monthly schedule of security wages now being paid has been reduced and that a provision of law which was intended to abolish differentials is being used to cut monthly wages.

Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that these questions arise by reason of the provisions of section 15 (a) of the act which was approved by the President on the 30th of June last. The first sentence of that section reads as follows:

> The Commissioner shall fix a monthly earning schedule for persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part from funds appropriated by section 1—> which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Work Projects Administration.

Then come these words:

The phrase "which shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person" was understood by members of the Committee on Appropriations and by Members of the Senate to mean that the average monthly payments should not be substantially reduced. Instead of being interpreted in that manner, it apparently is now being interpreted as a direction to the Work Projects Administration to reduce the security wage paid in the West and in the North in order to raise the security wage which is paid in the South.

LAW IS BEING MISINTERPRETED

If this language should be interpreted to mean that the monthly wage schedule shall be dependent upon the number of relief workers, then obviously it will be necessary to change the schedule of payments almost every month in accordance with the number of persons on relief, because otherwise there will be no possibility of fixing the average, under the interpretation which is being placed upon the law by the Work Projects Administration. This, however, is not the necessary meaning of the language. It could not be the meaning. The language was inserted in the House, when the prevailing-wage formula was abandoned and was clearly intended to prevent a lowering of the monthly payments as a result of the reduction of the hourly rate. The purpose of the provision was to prevent exactly what is now threatened. Congress wanted to be sure that the present monthly schedule should not be substantially reduced. It is my firm opinion that the Administrator of W. P. A. can, without any question, interpret the law as the Senator from Connecticut has so well stated it should be interpreted.

Following the sentence of section 17, which I just read, is this sentence:

After August 31, 1939, such monthly earning schedule shall not be varied for workers of the same type in different geographical areas to any greater extent than may be justified by differences in the cost of living.

Obviously the intention of that was to provide that all differentials except those based upon the cost of living should be abandoned. It is admittedly understood that the cost of living in the South is less than the cost of living in the North and in the West, and for the Work Projects Administration to say that, in order to evade this injunction with respect to a differential based solely on the cost of living, wages should be reduced in the high-cost living areas in order to bring up the wages in the low-cost living areas is, to my mind, perfectly absurd.

ORIGINATED IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. President, I wish to make it perfectly clear that, with the exception of the second sentence, section 15 of the relief bill originated in the House of Representatives. The last sentence of this section, which was also written in the House, reads as follows:

The Commissioner shall require that the hours of work for all persons engaged upon work projects financed in whole or in part by funds appropriated by section 1 shall (1) be 130 hours per month except that the Commissioner, in his discretion, may require a lesser number of hours of work per month in the case of relief workers with no dependents and the earnings of such workers shall be correspondingly reduced, and (2) not exceed 8 hours in any day and shall not exceed 40 hours in any week.

SENATE DEBATE JUNE 27

Because this provision was unsatisfactory, when the bill came to the Senate, this body adopted an amendment presented by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN], the purpose of which was to retain the prevailing-wage provision, abolish the 130-hour schedule written into the bill in the House, and make certain that differentials based on population were abandoned. This amendment was substituted for the House language by a viva voce vote. The House conferees refused to yield, and because the bill had to be signed before midnight on June 30 the Senate gave way.

Mr. President, in order that the interpretation which I have placed on the language may be perfectly clear, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point the colloquy which took place upon the floor of the Senate on June 27, 1939, when an amendment offered by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] was under consideration. This was the amendment which provided for the cost-of-living rule. In the colloquy will be found the statement of the Senator from Georgia that the amendment, if adopted, would not result and need not result in any reduction of the monthly schedule of wages paid in the West and North where the cost of living is high.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming?

There being no objection, the colloquy was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In the preparation of the amendment, did the Senator have in mind the fact that, under the present method of administering W. P A. wages, the country is divided into three so-called wage regions, and that the basic schedule is different in each of the regions?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not as much impressed by that difference as I am by the differences which obtain within the several States. Of course, I desire to eliminate that injustice. The argument has previously been made that there are great differences in the wages paid in the several sections of the country. The argument has heretofore been made that on a deficiency bill we should not disturb the situation during the course of the year. This time we are preparing to legislate for all of the year 1940, and this provision is designed to eliminate the glaring discrepancies which have heretofore appeared in the compensation of those doing the several types of work in the various geographical areas referred to by the Senator from Wyoming, as well as the differences in wages paid within the several States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My reason for alluding to the matter is to secure the benefit of the Senator's judgment as to what the eventual effect of his amendment would be if it were enacted. According to some information I have now received from the Works Progress Administration, the monthly range of earnings in region No. 1 is from $40 to $94, depending upon the type of work which is done. In region No. 2 the range is from $32 to $79, or $8 lower on the minimum wage. In region No. 3 the range is from $26 to $79. Region No. 3 comprises the States of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, and a part of Texas. Is it the Senator's judgment that the effect of his amendment would be to require the reduction of the wage schedules in regions 1 and 2 to that of region 3?

Mr. RUSSELL. I hope that will not be the effect. It is my hope that the wages of the lower-salaried group will be raised. Of course, if the cost-of-living yardstick were applied, there might be some reduction in wages in region 3. As I recall, whenever wage-and-hour bills have been before us, there has been violent objection to any differentials being allowed in wages in private industries between the several sections of the country, and it has been urged that there are great differences in living costs. If that view should be sustained when the Works Progress Administration goes into the question, wages in region 3 might be reduced; but I believe my amendment would tend to equalize the compensation between the several sections of the country for American citizens doing the same type of work.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the great discrepancy is that to which the Senator referred a moment ago, within the same State, and within the same region.

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would the Senator seriously object to an amendment by which, after the word "areas," in line 17, page 19, the words "in the same wage region" would be inserted? That amendment would eliminate all possibility of pulling the wages down. I am informed that these three wage regions have been established upon the basis of the living costs. The Senator's amendment is based upon living costs. Therefore, it would seem to me to be an improvement if the words "in the same wage region" were inserted after the word "areas" in line 17. It would eliminate all danger.

Mr. RUSSELL. I could not agree to that amendment. The effect of the suggested amendment would be to have the Administrator empowered to fix a wage scale in one region without regard to the cost of living, so long as he equalized it within the several States in the region. I think the wage scale should be equalized on a national basis, on the basis of the cost of living, because that is one of the standards said to have been used in fixing these scales.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. HUGHES. What is a wage region?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is not my definition. I am accepting the fact which has been established by the W. P. A. in dividing the United States into three different wage regions. This division is based upon the experience and studies of the W. P. A. with respect to the cost of living and the rate of wages in these areas.

A moment ago I recited the names of the States which are in region No. 3. In region No. 2 are the States of Delaware, Maryland, West Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas, and a part of Texas. All the other States which I have not mentioned are in region No. 1, which is the region having the highest scale.

Mr. HUGHES. We are in very good company.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator be good enough to state again the rates established by the W. P. A. in regions Nos. 1, 2, and 3?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall certainly be very glad to do so.

In region No. 1 the range of monthly earnings is from $40 to $94.

In region No. 2 it is from $32 to $79.

In region No. 3 it is from $26 to $79.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; the Senator has the last figure wrong in region No. 2. The last figures are not the same for region No. 2 and region No. 3.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me repeat the figures:

Region No. 1, $40 to $94.

Region No. 2, $32 to $79.

Region No. 3, $26 to $79.

The maximum is the same in regions 2 and 3, but the minimum varies.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. In view of the fact that section 15 of the joint resolution apparently is the only provision in the joint resolution which attempts to fix the amount of compensation or earnings a person on relief may receive, and this is left wholly to the discretion of the Commissioner, so that at this time we have no means of knowing what he would pay under this very wide grant of discretion, can the Senator from Georgia give me any indication of how many persons can be employed under the proposed appropriation of $1,477,000,000; or is it possible to approximate it, in view of the wide discretion we are giving the Commissioner in fixing compensation for those on relief?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I cannot answer that question without knowing something of the wage schedules which will be fixed by the Commissioner. The chairman of the subcommittee, in charge of the bill, may be able to answer the Senator's question, but I doubt whether any member of the committee can answer it.

Mr. BONE. I will ask the Senator from Colorado if he can give us any information at all concerning the number of persons who may earn money under this joint resolution. Section 15 is so broad a grant of discretionary power in the Commissioner to fix compensation that it seems to me there is not any possibility of determining the number of persons who may secure employment. It may be a million, or three-quarters of a million, or a million and a quarter. He may fix wages anywhere from zero to $150 a month. There is no rule set up in this language indicating a limit.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, yes, Mr. President. Let me suggest to the Senator that his right to fix compensation is limited by the provision that it "shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person of the Works Progress Administration."

Mr. BONE. Well, what does that mean—"the national average labor cost per person"? That is not a yardstick for wages.

Mr. ADAMS. It means that the amount paid shall not affect the average that the W. P. A. is now paying.

Mr. BONE. There is nothing in this language to tie it to or identify it with any standard we have legislatively adopted. Congress has never set up a yardstick in the form of any legislative language. I am not criticizing this provision, the Senator will understand; I am merely pointing out the situation.

Mr. ADAMS. We did not put it in.

Mr. BONE. Well, we ought to know what this language means. We have nothing to guide us.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator that this language is here. It embodies the recommendations of the President and of Colonel Harrington and of the House. It is the administrative desire as to compensation.

Mr. BONE. The language is, "shall not substantially affect the current national average labor cost per person." The man does not live who can tell what that language means. There is nothing in the rest of this section, or in the joint resolution, which sets up a standard.

I am not saying this in a critical spirit. I am simply saying that there is nothing in this language which the average human being, let alone lawyers here, would understand. What does "average labor cost" mean? It has no meaning. It has no significance whatever.

Mr. ADAMS. I think it is perfectly obvious, because the labor cost is $61 per month per man.

Mr. BONE. Where does the Senator find that in this joint resolution?

Mr. ADAMS. It is in the testimony.

Mr. BONE. Yes; but the testimony is not law.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator said nobody could find it. I am telling the Senator where he can find it.

Mr. BONE. But where can it be found after the joint resolution is enacted? The only place anyone will look for a yardstick or a rule is in the law that we pass.

Mr. ADAMS. This provision lays down the standard of the average labor cost per person of the Works Progress Administration, which over and over and over again has been testified to as $61 per month per man. That is the national average referred to in this section as it came from the House.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HUGHES. What is the meaning of "geographical areas"?

Mr. ADAMS. I refer the Senator from Delaware to the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], who drew the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in simple language it means that in the Senator's State of Delaware, under the present wage scale, a common laborer in the county of New Castle is paid 41 cents an hour. In the county of Kent a man doing the same type of labor is paid 25 cents an hour for unskilled labor. That is, in one geographical area one man is paid 41 cents an hour, and in another geographical area, in the town of Dover, he is paid 25 cents an hour. This amendment says that if that difference in wage scale can be justified on the difference in the cost of living, it cannot be touched, but that if there is no difference in the cost of living in the county of New Castle and the county of Kent that will justify 100-percent differential under some of these wage schedules, then the authorities shall either raise the pay of the man in Kent County up to the amount that is being paid in the county of New Castle or else they shall reduce the pay of the man in the county of New Castle to the amount that is being paid in the county of Kent.

I may go further, and say that so far as bricklayers are concerned, if one of the Senator's constituents living in the county of New Castle is fortunate enough to get on the W. P. A. rolls, he is paid $1.50 an hour. A man living in the county of Kent, doing exactly the same work, is paid 75 cents an hour, or one-half the amount. I am endeavoring to eliminate some of those discrepancies.

Mr. HUGHES. I may say to the Senator that there is not the difference in wages of which he speaks in the two geographical areas. There is in the city of Wilmington; but in the rest of New Castle County, which is more than nine-tenths of the county, the same wage scale prevails as in Kent and Sussex Counties.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if I may interpose at this point, I think I can explain how this differentiation is brought about. I think it will bear out what the Senator from Delaware has said, and I think it will raise a question for the Senator from Georgia to answer.

The difference in the rate of wage now being paid to workers even within the same region is based upon population statistics. In each wage region there are five different schedules according to population. There is one rate for communities the population of which is under 5,000, another for communities having a population of between 5,000 and 25,000——

Mr. RUSSELL. Is that for communities, or is it for counties having cities of that population?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. For counties having cities of that population.

Mr. RUSSELL. I so understood it. Of course, the figures given me by the Works Progress Administration may be entirely erroneous, and the Senator from Delaware may be correct; but those are the figures that were furnished me.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I want the Senator to have in mind the fact that in my State, in the county of Kent, in the northern part, where the two counties come together, right on the border line, a school library is being built by the W. P. A. The wage scale in the county of Kent is 25 cents, and right across the line, in the county of New Castle, the wage scale is 41 cents, as the Senator says. That has created a great deal of difficulty in working out the problem, because one man would be working on the project and getting 45 cents, and another would be working on the project and getting 25 cents. That arbitrary fixing of the scale of wages causes a great deal of trouble when it comes to working out the problem, owing to the fact that New Castle County is one region and Kent County is another region, and Sussex County is still another region.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That experience is duplicated all over the country, in practically every State. The Senator from Georgia is referring to a table which shows, apparently, grave injustices in the wage rate. In order that the statement may be clear in the RECORD, however, at this point I should like to continue to identify the different schedules.

The third division is counties in which the largest municipality has a population of between 25,000 and 50,000; the next, population between 5,000 and 100,000; and the next, all over 100,000.

The question I want to direct to the Senator from Georgia is whether the words "geographical areas" will have the effect of doing away with this population schedule.

Mr. RUSSELL. It will, absolutely, unless the discrimination can be justified by differences in the cost of living. If the difference referred to by the Senator from Wyoming can be justified by differences in the cost of living, it will not affect the wage scale; but if it cannot be justified by differences in the cost of living, then it will be the duty of the Administrator of the Works Progress Administration to eliminate the differential.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then, is it the conclusion of the Senator that the result of the adoption of this amendment would be that if the cost of living in the three wage regions which have been set up by the W. P. A. justifies different rates of pay, the W. P. A. would be entitled to arrange for different rates of pay?

Mr. RUSSELL. They not only would be entitled to do so, but it would be their duty to do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. But that there could be no justification whatever for any difference in rates if the cost of living did not appear of record in the studies of the W. P. A.?

SENATE DEBATE JUNE 28

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in order to make it clear that the Senate substituted for the House provision an amendment which was designed to maintain the old prevailing-wage formula, and also to prevent discrimination in the security wage, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD also the debate on June 28, which followed the presentation by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] of the amendment to which I have referred. It will be observed that this amendment proposed to strike out all of section 15 as it came from the House and to insert in lieu the language offered by the Senator from Nevada.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 19, line 11, it is proposed to strike out all of section 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations made in this joint resolution shall not be less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Commissioner of Works Projects: Provided, That not less than the minimum rate of pay established by the Fair Labor Standards Act (Public Law No. 718, 75th Cong.) for private industry shall be paid to any person engaged upon projects under this joint resolution: Provided further, That in fixing the monthly earning schedule of persons employed upon Works Projects projects, the Commissioner of Works Projects shall consider differentials in such earnings according to the various classes of work only and shall not give consideration to differentials between cities, counties, or other areas upon the basis of degree of urbanization, or any other factor that will tend to discriminate against the less urbanized areas."

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, we commenced discussing this question in 1933. We have been carrying on the work ever since. It is proposed to maintain in America the wage standard for American living as established by American labor. If the Senate of the United States does not want those who are especially interested in wage standards to advise, then I would say that the Senate should disregard the views of the President of the United States, because following nearly 7 weeks of debate in 1933, at the conclusion of which we were defeated in the prevailing-wage amendment, the President of the United States caused an investigation to be made out of which three great zones in America were established looking to the carrying out of the prevailing wage in each of those zones.

The amendment offered takes into consideration first of all the President's executive proclamations following the battle that he conducted in 1933 for the continuation of the prevailing wage.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Is the second paragraph or section of the Senator's amendment, relating to the eliminating any differential, a new principle?

Mr. MCCARRAN. It is not a new principle, if the Senator has in mind a principle that has been worked out and is now in the law.

Mr. WALSH. I understand fully what the Senator said in reference to the first paragraph and the application of the prevailing rate of wage during the years that have passed; but I have wondered whether the second paragraph was likewise in the law.

Mr. MCCARRAN. The second paragraph or the second proviso?

Mr. WALSH. The latter is a better expression.

Mr. MCCARRAN. That is not in the law, but is in the Executive order.

Mr. WALSH. So that the Senator contends that both the first proviso and the second proviso are now, by reason of the Executive order, the law and the manner in which the wages are adjusted and determined under W. P. A. appropriations.

Mr. MCCARRAN. The Senator is entirely correct. In the President's executive order is involved the security wage. So the security wage has been established, after a study resulting in an Executive order by the President. And then involved in this matter is something more, namely, the wage and hour provision. In other words, we established a floor below which wages could not go, namely, 25 cents per hour.

Mr. WALSH. Does that floor increase with the years, as the wage and hour law provides?

Mr. MCCARRAN. It does not increase.

Mr. WALSH. It remains for the present year at the minimum wage fixed in the wage and hour law, namely, 25 cents?

Mr. MCCARRAN. That is correct. But may I bring to the mind of the Senator the three zones established by the Executive order in which the particular minimum-wage scales prevail? There are four wage scales.

Mr. WALSH. Is the minimum wage the same in all those regions?

Mr. MCCARRAN. They are not the same. They cannot be the same, because the wage and hour measure does not contemplate that they would be the same.

Mr. WALSH. The wage and hour measure makes the minimum wage uniform throughout the whole country?

Mr. MCCARRAN. Yes, sir; uniform over the entire country. That is true. But remember that the Executive order provides for three zones, and those zones with their particular classification of hours and the particular classification as to monthly earnings, must be contemplated.

I may say, Mr. President, that while we started the battle for this amendment in 1933 with the idea of establishing a wage in conformity with what the labor class of the country had evolved by experience, we have now worked into the amendment not only that experience but also the law as it has been evolved by the Congress. I submit it to the Senate with the hope that it may be adopted as a substitute in place of the present section 15.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MCCARRAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. As the Senator knows, I am strongly in favor of the prevailing wage principle. I should like to ask the Senator whether the words in the amendment "or other areas" mean that there shall be no difference in pay or in rates of pay between the various sections of the country?

Mr. MCCARRAN. In that regard, if the Senator will bear in mind in connection with my answer the three zones, each of which carries its particular rate of pay——

Mr. LODGE. That is what the W. P. A. calls a wage region.

Mr. MCCARRAN. A wage region. With that in mind, if I catch the Senator's question, I think my answer is that within the zone there is no differential.

Mr. LODGE. This would not act as a prohibition to a differential between different zones, would it? There would be a differential between different zones, but there would not be a differential within the zones; is that correct?

Mr. MCCARRAN. There would be no differential within the zone.

Mr. LODGE. But there would be one between the zones.

Mr. MCCARRAN. That is correct. In other words, let us assume we are in the first zone, and let us assume, if I may go home, that the principal city in my State, with a population of 30,000, has established a wage scale which is recognized by the various methods by which recognition is accomplished. Now let us assume that a project is outside that particular city. Then the wage scale of that city shall prevail in that project which is outside. But let us assume that over in Idaho, an adjoining State in the same zone, a different wage scale is attempted to be established. Then the amendment carries the idea that the same wage scale shall prevail within the zone in the same district.

Mr. LODGE. But it does not require that the same wage shall be paid in Nevada as is paid in Massachusetts, let us say.

Mr. MCCARRAN. I am not certain whether or not Massachusetts is in the same zone.

Mr. LODGE. Assume that they are in different zones.

Mr. MCCARRAN. I am assuming that. I would say "no." I rather think, if I hold in my mind the zones as they have been portrayed, that New England is in the same zone as Nevada.

Mr. LODGE. Then that is a poor illustration. The point I am trying to get at is that there is no attempt in this amendment to iron out all the rates on a uniform basis.

Mr. MCCARRAN. The Senator is correct in that regard.

Mr. President, I submit the amendment and ask for a record vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the first prevailing-wage scale was approved by the President of the United States on March 3, 1931. During the years I have been in the Senate I have consistently upheld the principle of the prevailing wage. In 1931 I was actively identified with the movement which finally resulted in the enactment of the Davis-Bacon bill. I have followed this principle through in its application to industrial firms doing business with the Government under the terms of the Walsh-Healey Act. I favored and voted for the essential principles of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The American Federation of Labor over a long period of time has held a consistent position in these matters.

Mr. President, I ask that a copy of the Davis-Bacon Act, approved March 3, 1931, be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The act is as follows:

"[S. 5904]

"An act relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed on public buildings of the United States and the District of Columbia by contractors and subcontractors, and for other purposes

"Be it enacted, etc., That every contract in excess of $5,000 in amount, to which the United States or the District of Columbia is a party, which requires or involves the employment of laborers or mechanics in the construction, alteration, and/or repair of any public buildings of the United States or the District of Columbia within the geographical limits of the States of the Union or the District of Columbia, shall contain a provision to the effect that the rate of wage for all laborers and mechanics employed by the contractor or any subcontractor on the public buildings covered by the contract shall be not less than the prevailing rate of wages for work of a similar nature in the city, town, village, or other civil division of the State in which the public buildings are located, or in the District of Columbia if the public buildings are located there, and a further provision that in case any dispute arises as to what are the prevailing rates of wages for work of a similar nature applicable to the contracts which cannot be adjusted by the contracting officer, the matter shall be referred to the Secretary of Labor for determination and his decision thereon shall be conclusive on all parties to the contract: Provided, That in case of national emergency the President is authorized to suspend the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. This act shall take effect 30 days after its passage but shall not affect any contract then existing or any contract that may thereafter be entered into pursuant to invitations for bids that are outstanding at the time of the passage of this act."

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I am for the pending amendment and hope it will be enacted into law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. In order to perfect the amendment and to make clear the point which was raised by the question of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I move that the amendment be amended by inserting after the word "city" the word "or" and by striking out after the word "county" the words "or other areas." That modification makes clear the interpretation which the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Massachusetts have agreed upon.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator so modifies his amendment.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, may we have the amendment as now modified reported?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], as modified, will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The amendment, as modified, proposes to strike out, on page 19, line 11, all of section 15 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The rates of pay for persons engaged upon projects under the appropriations made in this joint resolution shall not be less than the prevailing rates of pay for work of a similar nature in the same locality as determined by the Commissioner of Work Projects: Provided, That not less than the minimum rate of pay established by the Fair Labor Standards Act (Public Law No. 718, 75th Cong.) for private industry shall be paid to any person engaged upon projects under this joint resolution: Provided further, That in fixing the monthly earning schedule of persons employed upon Work Projects projects the Commissioner of Work Projects shall consider differentials in such earnings according to the various classes of work only and shall not give consideration to differentials between cities or counties upon the basis of degree of urbanization or any other factor that will tend to discriminate against the less urbanized areas."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] as modified. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, yesterday I gave notice that at the proper time I would make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the House amendment to Senate bill 188 was agreed to. I now enter the motion.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now reconsider the vote by which the House amendment was agreed to. I am proceeding by authority of the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. ASHURST], who is unavoidably detained and who asked me to present the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I do not believe I understand just exactly what it is the Senator desires to have done. Is this the question debated by the Senator from Indiana yesterday?

Mr. BURKE. No; this is another matter altogether. We will not go into that question.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is this the matter to which there were objections yesterday?

Mr. BURKE. There were no objections made to this on yesterday. The Senator is referring to another matter, having to do with the administrative courts, about which the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Kentucky and others were arguing. This is an altogether different bill, one referring to an administrative officer of the court.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understand.

Mr. BURKE. The Senate passed the bill and the House passed the Senate bill with an amendment, and when the amendment came to the Senate we had the feeling that it was not material, so the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

Thereafter, upon a more careful study, some of us felt that the amendment should be examined more carefully, and therefore we asked to have the action of the Senate rescinded, and that has been done. I now move that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. BURKE, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. DANAHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

PASTOR MARTIN NIEMOELLER

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the free independent spirit in man is a source of pride in the heart of every true American. We admire the man of courage and heroic stature. Such a man is Pastor Martin Niemoeller, now held, so we are told, in a concentration camp at Sachsenhausen, Germany. Niemoeller is in a concentration camp because he dared to uphold his right of religious liberty as minister of a German Lutheran Church. He has braved suffering for his faith. His free spirit and loyalty to conscience have stirred with admiration the hearts of millions of free people who have no special identity of interest with him in race, class, or creed. Today as a champion of human liberty Niemoeller is an unquestioned power. In his concentration camp he is silently fighting for all free men the battles of intellectual and moral integrity.

Martin Niemoeller is under the laws of his country. I do not seek to interfere with those laws, for they are completely subject to the will of a foreign power. I would not by any slightest inference wish to be placed in the position of meddling with the internal policy of a country not my own. However, I believe I speak for millions of my fellow countrymen when I say that should Martin Niemoeller and his family come knocking at the doors of America they would find a hearty welcome here because of the admiration we hold for the Niemoeller spirit of liberty.

As I understand, Martin Niemoeller, his wife, and seven children are permitted, under the provisions of subsection (d) of section 4 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended, to enter this country as nonquota immigrants. This section reads:

> An immigrant who continuously for at least 2 years immediately preceding the time of his application for admission to the United States has been, and who seeks to enter the United States solely for the purpose of, carrying on the vocation of minister of any religious denomination, or professor of a college, seminary, or university; and his wife, and his unmarried children under 18 years of age, if accompanying or following to join him.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point, as a part of my remarks, the editorial of Paul Block, published in the Pittsburgh Post Gazette, July 8, 1939, entitled "A Godless Nation Cannot Long Endure."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

A GODLESS NATION CANNOT LONG ENDURE

The second anniversary of the imprisonment of Pastor Martin Niemoeller, marked by his clerical colleagues from all parts of Germany and by 3,000 loyal German Protestants, recalls once more this brave clergyman's fight against the Nazi regime's efforts to dominate the church.

The Nazi war on religion has been waged on all fronts; no creed has been safe from the brutal attacks of Hitler's followers. All ranks of Catholics, from cardinals and bishops to village priests and Sisters of Mercy, have been subjected to indignity. Their homes have been stoned and invaded, they themselves have been injured and imprisoned—all because they have refused to worship Hitler before God.

The treatment of the Jews in Germany is known to the whole world, and there is no need to repeat it here.

Hilter and the atheists around him have not spared from their attacks the Protestant Church which has the largest membership in Germany. This should be proof, if any is needed, that the Nazis are determined to destroy religion and the church just as it has been destroyed in Russia.

In the course of the attempt to nazify the Lutheran Church, more than 700 Lutheran pastors were arrested. The best-known of these was Pastor Niemoeller, not only because of his patriotic record as a submarine commander in the last war, but because of his outspoken refusal to tolerate state interference with freedom of religion. But the Nazi fury has not stopped at Niemoeller himself. An attempt has now been made to oust from the parsonage which they have long occupied Niemoeller's wife and seven children.

That the resistance to such dastardly acts has not abated while Niemoeller and a number of his fellow pastors languish in concentration camps is shown by the bold defiance issued by Pastor Friedrich Mueller, who has been substituting for Niemoeller in the latter's pulpit during his imprisonment. Mueller, who has himself seen the inside of a Nazi prison, has charged the Nazi leaders with "waging a battle against Our Lord Jesus Christ."

If there were nothing else against Hitler and his henchmen, this attempt to destroy the church would alone be enough to condemn them and will eventually lead to the defeat and destruction of the Nazi regime. For religion and the church have been attacked for nearly 2,000 years, yet are stronger today than ever before.

EXPORTATION OF SCRAP IRON

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, while I am on my feet I wish to say something about the exportation of scrap iron. I am informed on good authority that during the last 5 years 13,000,000 tons of scrap iron have been exported from the United States. This is enough scrap to produce 8,500,000 tons of finished steel. Instead of being processed in this country, this steel was made abroad. If this scrap were made into finished steel in this country it would provide 52 man-hours of work for every ton processed. This would be the equivalent of work for 250,000 American workers, working 40 hours a week for 52 weeks in the year.

By the exportation of this scrap for refinishing in other lands American workers of many kinds are being deprived of employment. This is true of furnace men, finishers, salesmen, and thousands of men in transportation industries.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I wish to address a question to the Senator from Pennsylvania. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for that purpose?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator spoke about jobs which could be furnished to idle workmen in America. The Senator, as I understand, does not propose to send the finished armaments to Japan?

Mr. DAVIS. No. What I said does not apply to finished armaments.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator merely wishes to have the scrap iron processed into pig iron, as I understand?

Mr. DAVIS. Yes. It affects also the iron-ore miners in the State of Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I so take it, and I value the remarks of the able Senator in that respect, because if we are to export these products, let us do so in such a manner that we shall benefit our own workmen in the United States. I could join the Senator in that sentiment, because we have a rather serious unemployment situation in the United States, and if we could find 250,000 jobs for American workmen I should be in hearty accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I cannot now occupy more of the time of the Senator from Vermont. I had expected to go into this matter more fully, but I shall not undertake to do so today. At a later time I may do so; but I do not now wish to take the time of the very able and distinguished Senator from Vermont who desires to speak on the pending legislation.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I observe four Senators on the Democratic side of the aisle and five Senators on the Republican side of the aisle. I have been on my feet approximately 45 minutes. I have been interrupted by discussions of all kinds and varieties of subjects, including junk, I think some six times, and I call the attention of the world to the lack of interest of the United States Senate in the passage of Senate bill 162.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator realizes, of course, that the lack of interest is due to a realization upon the part of the Members of the Senate that the bill is overwhelmingly approved in this body, and that it is not necessary to remain on the floor while the Senator leads the filibuster against its adoption.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am complimented by this attempt to blow up wind. I know that the colleague of the author of the bill needs to do something to keep up his courage, for this bill in principle has been defeated during the past 25 years many times.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have observed that whenever any attempt was made to protect consumers in the United States, as, for example, when the Pure Food Act was under consideration, there were men who made the same argument that the very able Senator from Vermont is now making. Whenever it becomes necessary in order to protect the consumers from deleterious food or shoddy cloth, someone is sure to take the floor and make the arguments which the Senator from Vermont is now about to make, and, of course, Senators do not want to listen to that kind of argument, and therefore they do not come on the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, again I am complimented by the colleague of the author of the bill. He is evidently a mind reader. He thinks I am possessed of an argument against the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I think I indicated that the Senator is not possessed of an argument. The Senator, to use his own phrase, is merely trying to "get up the wind."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have not commenced the argument, and if the distinguished Senator from Wyoming will remain patient a little while, he may listen to an argument.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator has just revealed the inaccuracy of his statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am not at all disturbed by interruptions; and I shall be glad to have the colleague of the author of the bill interrupt me at any time, even after I have commenced my argument.

I am about to mention to a nearly vacant Chamber some of the reasons why this type of legislation has not been passed during the past 25 years, and some of the reasons why it should not be passed now, not with a view of changing the mind of any United States Senator, many of whom have now come into the Chamber, and are complimenting me to the extent of listening to what I have to say, but with the view perhaps of affording those who sit in the gallery, who have propagated the evidence which has been cited here, some reasoning, some facts, which I believe they have never had under consideration, and so that the RECORD at least will contain an amplification of the minority views which were very briefly stated and contained on one page alone of the report of the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understood the Senator to refer to the minority view.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe the Senator has correctly understood the statement.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator was in the minority in the committee; and he is in the minority on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Vermont finds himself in the minority of the Senate. Unfortunately, he has been in that position ever since he came to the Senate. Often there has been cause for discouragement, Mr. President, because of the impossibility of holding back the attack upon fundamental principles which has been made throughout all the time the Senator from Vermont has been in the minority; but he has never been discouraged. He is not now discouraged; and if he stood alone on this question or on any other question in which he believed he would make the fight for principle, believing that ultimately sound principle will prevail in the United States of America, and that in the end we shall clarify our views by the kind of proceeding which is going on at this instant; that is, by discussion. Of course, I take no offense at the charge which is expressed that I am filibustering against the bill. I believe those who listen to me will find that I shall talk about the proposed legislation all the time I shall occupy the floor.

I am opposed to Senate bill 162, not because its authors desire to have goods truthfully labeled. I am for that principle. I believe that principle can be written into law if necessary. However, I assert that it is not necessary to add anything to the present law. Already our statutes contain sufficient provisions to enforce a proper labeling of goods which go on the shelves of our markets; and if any complaint is to be made that the laws are not enforced, I say the failure cannot be charged to the Congress of the United States, but can be charged to the law-enforcement officers of the United States.

Moreover, Mr. President, I think all know that the Federal Trade Commission is now considering the amplification and strengthening of its rules, which under the law it has the right and the power to make, with respect to branding all fabrics, both in their manufacture and in their merchandising.

Even though I hold the view that our present law is adequate, I am willing to go still further. I am perfectly willing to make the gesture necessary to show how much Congress is interested in fair trade and in protecting the interests of the consumer in obtaining the right kind of goods, the goods he thinks he is buying. I am willing to enact laws which would accomplish that purpose; but I am opposed to this particular bill because it goes far, far beyond such a purpose. I am opposed to the pending bill because, at a most unfortunate time in our history, it undertakes to add to the control of a great Government at Washington over the small, intimate affairs of the people of the country. I am opposed to the bill because it imposes upon agriculture a control from which agriculture will feel injury in the future.

The pretense that this is the bill of the wool growers of America is absurd. The wool growers of America would profit nothing from the enforcement of Government control to the extent contained in Senate bill 162.

In the first place, I think the most outstanding element of that control is setting up a mark possessed by only a few manufacturers in the entire world. I refer to the mark "virgin wool." The significance of that mark is so defined in the bill that only Mr. Forstmann and men like him can have the benefit of the proposed act just so long as the small group of society which can afford to buy superior products is still able and willing to pay the price for goods marked with the trade-mark "virgin wool."

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. Am I to understand that the gentleman just mentioned by the Senator has a trade-mark on the term "virgin wool"?

Mr. AUSTIN. No; he has not. However, he would have if the bill were enacted. He is the man who is especially interested in Senate bill 162.

We are providing, on page 2 of the bill:

(c) The term "virgin wool" means wool which has never been reclaimed from any spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured product.

Virgin wool is wool from the back of the sheep. If anyone uses the label "virgin wool," and more than 5 percent of the total weight of wool in the garment is reclaimed wool, and that fact is not specifically noted, he is subject to imprisonment.

We have trade-mark laws in this country which up to this time we have supposed were ample to protect the special privilege granted to a person who has gained merit and who has devised a mark which is arbitrary in its character—that is, the product of art—and which, when attached to his product in commerce and used until it has acquired a goodwill in the United States, is entitled to protection as a trade-mark. But whoever heard of a man who owned a trade-mark being able to have a fellow citizen who infringed it put in jail as a criminal? Nobody.

Let me ask another question, Mr. President: Whoever before heard of a citizen of the United States being granted a trade-mark of a name which was not artificial, not the product of his genius, not attached to his goodwill, not a part of the business that he had built up? Nobody; until we find these words, which belong to all mankind because they are not artful, given a practically exclusive privilege by the fact that there are only a few in this country who can manufacture, or who are in the business of manufacturing, textiles of virgin wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator has changed his original statement. He said that the designation "virgin wool" was a trade-mark to Mr. Forstmann. As a matter of fact, the designation "virgin wool" is available to any manufacturer in the United States.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. There is no reason why a wool manufacturer cannot make a garment of virgin wool if he wishes. There is nothing in the technique of his machinery which would prevent him from doing so.

Mr. AUSTIN. Not at all.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I should also like to have the Senator tell me under what provision of the bill a man is liable to criminal prosecution if the tag required to be put on the goods is inaccurate.

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 16, line 13, we find section 10, which reads as follows:

CRIMINAL PENALTY

SEC. 10. Any person who willfully violates sections 3, 5, 8, or 9 (b) of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing herein shall limit other provisions of this act.

Whenever the Commission has reason to believe any person is guilty of a misdemeanor under this section, it shall certify all pertinent facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of this section against such person.

Now, Mr. President, turn back to section 3 to which section 10 says to turn back, and what do we find?

The introduction—

The introduction, or manufacture for introduction, into commerce, or the sale, transportation, or distribution, in commerce, of any wool product which is misbranded within the meaning of this act, or the rules and regulations hereunder, is unlawful and shall be an unfair method of competition.

And so forth, and so on. We need look no further, although similar provisions are found in other parts of the bill. Those two sections make the violation of the labeling provision a misdemeanor for which a man may be imprisoned.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, in section 4 there is no criminal penalty, and as to section 3 or any of the other sections there has got to be a willful violation. "Willful," of course, means that there must have been abiding in the man an intent to violate the law. Are we to have a law that a man can intentionally violate and then be subject to no criminal action?

Mr. AUSTIN. Certainly we have such laws under our free institutions. For instance, we allow a man to violate a trade-mark willfully without throwing him into jail.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. This is not a trade-mark matter.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the point exactly. Never before have we made it possible, when a man or group of men who by virtue of their economic circumstances were able to secure from the great, powerful sovereign a mark, that for a willful violation of that mark by another the violator or infringer could be thrown into jail. Never before has that occurred, and I hope we will not see it occur now.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I hope we are making progress. It is undoubtedly true that in the past, if someone was great enough, if someone had money enough, if his business was widespread enough, and his conscience was evil enough and he violated the Trade-Mark Act, all that could be done to him would be to slap him on the wrist and tell him not to do it again. But we are getting beyond all that. People who intentionally violate a law cannot merely pay the damage, change their names, and come back and do it again.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am glad the Senator is frank about it. He is the author of this bill; he has carried out his attitude toward the citizen, toward our style of government, toward our free institutions by what he has written in this bill and what he now says about the violation of trade-marks.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Of course, the Senator does not really contend that there is any possible analogy between the provisions of this bill and the trade-mark law? The trade-mark law, as the Senator well knows, merely authorizes any person engaged in commerce to select for himself a mark which shall identify his goods. This is a provision which makes it unlawful for a person to attach a false label to goods. This bill, like many others which have been enacted into law, is intended to prevent misbranding for the protection of the consumer.

The argument the Senator is making would be an excellent argument before a jury that might not be familiar with principles of law. I doubt very much whether it is especially designed to convince the intelligence of Members of the Congress. It boils down to this: The Senator's contention is that those who use shoddy shall be free to mark it "all wool."

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that is a good deal of an assumption. I cannot recall making any such argument or any such claim, and it is evident that there is enough to what I have pointed out with respect to the effect of this bill, if it should be enacted into law, to provoke a very earnest reply from the author of the bill and his colleague. I believe that it will need reply from more than them to change the clear, legal, and factual consequences of that provision in the bill.

We have listened to the reading of a long list of supporters of this proposed legislation. Mr. President, in 25 years much literature has been circulated all over the country, but who is there who comes to the Congress of the United States after 25 years to urge the passage of Senate bill 162? Are they people in general or are they those who have been inspired or excited to come here by propaganda emanating from centers such as this great center, the Capital of the United States?

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as the Vice President of the United States said the other night, according to reports, let us be practical. I understand from the argument of the Senator that if this bill were passed it would practically give a monopoly to a few who manufacture virgin wool. Is that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. WILEY. I wish the Senator would amplify that statement so that we may understand clearly not only the implication involved but the result upon the producer of wool and upon the manufacturer who employs labor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well, I will do that.

Mr. President, I take my own little State for example. By far the largest number of mills in my State are small mills located on little shining rivers. Some of them have been able to live and carry on for more than a century. I know of one mill which a year ago celebrated its one hundredth anniversary, a mill conducted throughout all those years in the name of one family and still conducted by the direct lineal descendants of that family. Those mills manufacture goods that the plain man and woman wear. They are not high-priced goods; they are low-priced goods. The mills do business on a very small margain of profit. Throughout the depression some of those mills had to close. Some of them have experienced the fear that the closing might mean the permanent ending of constructive work in small communities in Vermont. It would be utterly impossible for them, from an economic point of view, to convert those factories into mills that could compete with Mr. Forstmann and a few large institutions that are able to manufacture fabrics from nothing but virgin wool.

In the first place, they would have to find a market. Mr. Forstmann has the market now. They would have to go out in competition with him. I ask the Senator, being a businessman, what chance for the future would there be for those little mills in Vermont if they undertook to enter the market for virgin-wool fabrics? They would have to give up their own market to do it. Their market is a moderate-price market. People for a century and a half have bought their goods at moderate prices, mackinaws, for example, for $2 apiece. They are not made of virgin wool, and, as a matter of scientific fact, we were informed that some fabrics made of wool and other fibers mixed together are better goods for the workingman, for the man who wears a mackinaw, than would be the virgin-wool garment, because the mixed fabric holds up better, is stronger, and wears longer, and is warmer.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. What is to prevent, even under this bill, the manufacturers the Senator is now talking about from continuing in the business in which they are now engaged?

Mr. AUSTIN. I am coming to that.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. They have been in the business——

Mr. AUSTIN. I am answering first the question of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. They have been in the business for a 100 years and have an established line of customers.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will answer that presently. I might briefly say "price."

Mr. SCHWARTZ. This bill will not affect the price of the article which they sell.

Mr. AUSTIN. It will not?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator think that they could undertake the bookkeeping and inspection required to conform to the terms of this bill without adding anything to the cost of production of these cheap garments?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. They know what they make; they know what they put in the goods, what percentage of wool they put in, and the only extra cost involved will be to attach additional labels or a few more lines of printing on the same labels they now use.

Mr. AUSTIN. I believe the Senator is overlooking history when he undertakes to claim that Government control of business does not add to its cost. Our experience universally proves the contrary. But I am being diverted from my answer to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin. It is a matter of practical competition. Who can afford to provide the looms and the mills, employ the skilled labor, buy the raw material, and go out and get a new market in competition with those who now have it? When we look the field over and see on what a close, thin margin these small mills throughout the United States are now operating it can readily be seen how small an added burden it will take to put them out of business.

That is where the monopolistic effect comes in. As they go out of business, the strong manufacturers grow stronger. That is the evolution of pernicious monopoly. Put this label by law on the goods of a few men today and they will grow richer, their goods will grow more costly, and their customers will become less numerous. The small mills that now manufacture reprocessed wool into garments will be unable to compete with them, because of the anathema which this bill puts upon them in the market. If a woman must choose between virgin wool and reprocessed wool, or reused wool, or some other inferior wool, and pay a higher price than she is now paying, she will cease to purchase wool, and will find other types of textiles. There will be substitute materials which do not have to carry the burden of Government control.

This is only one step in a grand scheme; this is only one more step toward having the lash of criminal punishment put upon those who transgress the monopolistic privileges it is proposed to grant; this is only one step in the process of centralization at Washington of control over all business.

Do you think, Mr. President, that in the long run substitutes for virgin wool will escape control? Oh, no, indeed. Very soon after virgin wool has had the sun of beneficence of a powerful sovereign smiling upon it, substitutes will also have to come under the control and the monopolistic beneficence of the Federal Government.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. I notice in section 3 of the bill that the manufacture for introduction into commerce, or the sale, transportation, or distribution in commerce of any wool product which is misbranded, and so forth, is declared unlawful.

I can well understand how a manufacturer might be able to tell the quality of the wool which he processes into a fabric—that is, how he might tell whether it was virgin wool or reworked wool—but I have been told that there are absolutely no tests which can be applied to the completed fabric to determine whether there is virgin wool or reworked wool in the fabric. Is that a correct statement?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I believe it to be correct. There are those who claim they can do it. On the other hand, our Bureau of Standards says it cannot do it.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. Permit me to finish the question. Assuming that to be true, of course we could check closely, and we perhaps could prevent the manufacturer within the jurisdiction of the United States from putting into the fabric anything but virgin wool unless he marked it according to the quality or kind of wool which went into the garment.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; it can be done here by injunction, and it can be done by criminal prosecution.

Mr. WHITE. But what I am coming to is, what about the foreign manufacturer? By our reciprocal-trade arrangements we are undertaking very greatly to increase the importations into this country of wool fabrics of one kind and another. How are we going to reach the foreign manufacturer? How are we going to know whether he has used virgin wool or reworked wool, or what he has used? And when his product in the fabric reaches this country, what are we going to do about it? What can we do about it? Under the terms of the bill, as a matter of fact, have we not placed a premium upon the foreign manufacturer of woolen fabrics, and correspondingly placed a burden upon the domestic manufacturer of woolen fabrics?

I am asking a question rather than making an assertion.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, assuming that we cannot with certainty ascertain the relative quantities of virgin wool and reworked wool in a garment, probably we could not enforce this law against imported wool products; but I will add that probably we never could enforce it against goods domestically merchandised, goods that come from the farm through the factory and the store to the consumer, all within the United States. But in section 8 of the bill there is an attempt to exclude misbranded wool products. I should like to postpone the discussion of that subject until later, because it is quite an important one, and I should like to keep my discourse as nearly regular as I can. I desire to conclude the point I started on with respect to monopoly.

I have dealt with the manufacturer, and have undertaken to point out the practical effect of having a few men or a few factories in the United States that are able financially and because of their mill set-up and because of their markets to enjoy the exclusive benefit of the label "virgin wool," and how all the other manufacturers in the country would be at a great disadvantage. Some of them possibly might be lifted up in some way to the same level, and be able to compete to some extent; but the natural effect of the law would be to consolidate the position of the strong and make him stronger, and to consolidate the position of the weak and make him weaker.

But someone else is involved in this proposal, and that is the sheep raiser. What is going to happen to him as this law goes into effect, and this monopoly, this superiority that is given to the product of a few manufacturers, gains possession of the market? He will be in the hands of a few buyers who will control the entire situation. He will get the small end of this stick. His prices will not concern the manufacturer, except on the question of how cheaply the manufacturer can get his product. If the manufacturer is the wool grower's only market, and there are only a few manufacturers, what opportunity will the wool grower have, by a broad market with many competitors, to offer his goods here and there until he gets his price? He will have to take what is given to him; and, what is worse, he will have a market for only the quantity of virgin wool which the people of the United States will take, which quantity, I claim, will be lessened by the effect of this bill; for the price controls the quantity, and the price will go up; the number of consumers of virgin-wool goods will go down; the number of substitutes for that line of fabrics will increase; and in the long run the seller of virgin wool will feel the hard heel of the oppressor, the hard heel of the man who enjoys an injurious monopoly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, before this heel chokes me off, will the Senator yield? [Laughter.]

Mr. AUSTIN. I hope the heel gets into the right place. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is a sort of back-handed method of approach, is it not? The Senator is following that approach throughout his argument. As I now understand him, he is trying to convince the Senator from Wisconsin that the greater the market for shoddy, the poorer the market for virgin wool. It is very clear.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, how easily that word slips over the lips of the proponents of this bill. They have used that type of propaganda from the beginning to the time of this discussion in the Senate. They use the word "shoddy" because it reflects upon reprocessed goods; and that is part of the game. They want to put goods which are manufactured from reprocessed wool in an inferior position to goods which are manufactured of virgin wool; and they will do it just as surely as the sun rises in the morning.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Well, let us use the Senator's euphemistic phrase.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am addressing the Chair, and I still have the floor. The effect of the aspersion cast upon anything less than virgin wool will drive that great, needy market of buyers of moderate-priced goods to something else than wool; and who will suffer? The group of our society that always suffers, namely, the producers of the raw material. No segment of American society has felt depression anywhere near so much as has the farmer, because practically all the wealth that is produced comes from the farmers' hands and out of the soil. At least a third of all the people in the United States who are engaged in gainful occupation are engaged in agriculture. Is it any wonder that the Senate is keen to uplift agriculture from the depression as much as it can? Is it any wonder that I, who have throughout my service in the United States Senate consistently aided agriculture in every way in which I thought the Constitution would permit, should be now supporting agriculture, at a time when I am persuaded firmly that a blow is being dealt to agriculture from which it can rise only after the economic evils which flow from this legislation shall have been rectified by new legislation, and after the small mills of this country, which constitute the backbone of the market for the wool of the sheep shall be reestablished, and regain their market from those materials which will be substituted under the operation of this proposed law?

I am for the support of agriculture in my opposition to that part of the bill which sets up a monopoly, an injurious monopoly. I do not regard all monopolies as injurious.

Now I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Do I understand the Senator to contend that by promoting the use of reworked wool—I will adopt his euphemistic phrase, saying "reworked wool" instead of "shoddy"——

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it should not be dubbed "euphemistic." At least one body of Congress has adopted it, in its bill relating to this subject; and, by the way, it is a bill less subject to the criticism I am now making than is the pending bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Does the Senator contend that to promote the use of reworked wool is a defense of agriculture?

Mr. AUSTIN. What is the question—is it a defense of agriculture?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator's argument for the last 5 or 10 minutes has been that he is a defender of agriculture, and particularly of the sheep grower.

Mr. AUSTIN. Not particularly; I did not say that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then I misunderstood the Senator. Of course, I do not believe he is a defender of the sheep grower at all.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a charge which is not justified.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is merely an expression of opinion.

Mr. AUSTIN. There are sheep growers in my State, and my State has been famous for raising some of the best breeds of sheep bred in the United States.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly——

Mr. AUSTIN. And we export them to Australia, whence they first came to America.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then let me ask the Senator, will it aid the sheep growers of his State, who have produced such excellent wool, to promote the use, in the manufacturing establishments of his State, of reworked wool which comes from every other State in the Union?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to have the Senator develop that argument.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The tearing up of rags and the putting of those rags into the manufacture of woolen garments, instead of the virgin wool from the backs of the sheep of the citizens of Vermont will, in the Senator's judgment, be beneficial to those sheep growers?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is a very interesting point of view, which I think should be developed.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is exactly what I claim. I maintain that the effect of the monopoly created by the pending bill would drive consumers of cheap garments, moderate priced garments, away from wool. Thereby it would put the market of those who have wool pieces and cuts and garments which have been laid on the shelves of merchants and have not been worn outside of America, and the mills would be put out of business because of the competition of other fabrics which are not loaded down with serious obstacles to the freedom of their operations. Our little mills would be gone, and the market for these pieces, these rags, would be elsewhere. I would see the vans going up Route No. 7 through Vermont into the province of Quebec. I can imagine ship after ship taking those pieces over to England, where the people recognize the value of a fabric made of reprocessed and reworked wool, and where they make some of the finest so-called woolen garments in the world.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Speaking of taking things to Quebec, and sending the rags to England, I wish to remark that within the last year the importation by Americans of British rags has increased 1,550 percent; in other words, the British are sending their rags over here; we are not sending ours over there.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator for his remark, except that he is so far from right that it is almost amusing.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I will produce the official figures.

Mr. AUSTIN. I will tell the Senator exactly what the situation is, and I will tell him what he ought to do to remedy a bad situation here with respect to wool: Protect the sheep grower; protect the man who raises wool from competition from abroad. Do away with the New Deal trade agreements, and there will not be the thing to which the Senator has referred, but referred to in such mild terms that it is like cutting a man's throat with a feather.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President——

Mr. AUSTIN. As a matter of fact, the increase in importations of wool rags is a much higher percentage than that mentioned by the author of the pending bill, and I will give him the figures.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. As I understand the Senator's position, it is that when I stated that the importation of rags from Great Britain had increased within the last year, or the last 3 months, probably, fifteen hundred and fifty percent——

Mr. AUSTIN. I did not hear the Senator say fifteen hundred and fifty percent.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is nearer correct. I understood the Senator to say 15 percent. Now we are getting together on a simple fact. Let us use it rationally.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If the Senator would pay attention to what I state he would not rise and say I do not know anything about what I am discussing.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator is probably justified. I thought I was looking at him and listening to him, and I thought that my comprehension was fairly good; but I misunderstood him, and I beg his pardon most humbly.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In these importations from Great Britain under the designation "rags," what is included?

Mr. AUSTIN. I will refer the question back to the distinguished gentleman who furnished me the information, and who, singularly enough, is in favor of Senate bill 162. This comes from Mr. Fred Brenckman, a friend of mine, and I am happy to agree with him in most of the positions he takes with respect to agricultural legislation. He is the Washington representative of the National Grange. Let me read his entire letter. It is dated May 17, 1939.

Over 2 months have elapsed since the hearings were concluded before the subcommittee considering S. 162, introduced by Senator SCHWARTZ, of Wyoming, and commonly known as the wool products labeling bill.

As I stated when I appeared before the committee on behalf of the National Grange, we have for many years earnestly advocated legislation of this character for the benefit of the wool grower and for the protection of the consuming public.

That is a good objective; I am for it. I should be willing to add to the legislation already on the books in order to get it; but I am opposed to doing it in the way here proposed.

We are reliably informed that the manufacturers of so-called woolen products today are using more reworked wool or shoddy and other substitute fibers than virgin wool.

There cannot be any confusion about his being clear mentally as to the distinction, just as we are clear.

To further aggravate the situation, in the reciprocal-trade agreement with Great Britain we cut the duty on woolen rags in half. Under our unconditional most-favored-nation policy, this tariff concession is generalized to every other nation in the world except Germany.

According to the Department of Commerce, imports of woolen rags during January, February, and March, the first 3 months during which the reduced duties were operative, totaled 2,505,330 pounds, an increase of 2,338,069 pounds over the corresponding months of last year. This represents an increase of 1,397.8 percent in quantity and 938.7 percent in dollar value.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one observation?

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me complete this, and then I will give the Senator an opportunity to interrupt.

Imports of wool wastes have increased 377 percent in quantity and 229 percent in dollar value for the period already indicated.

All of these cheaper and inferior wastes and rags are used by the American manufacturers as undisclosed, lower-cost substitutes for new American wool. This raises the question, Shall the American people be clothed in European rags without knowing it?

This increased importation of European substitutes for American-grown wool makes it imperative that Congress enact the wool-products labeling bill at this session. We sincerely hope that this measure may be favorably reported from committee in the near future and that it will be passed at this session of the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
By FRED BRENCKMAN.

Mr. President, I know this man to be a clear thinker. I believe him to be a sound man. I believe he would not espouse Senate bill 162 for this cause if he understood what it does and what it does not do, but so far as this particular point of his goes it is an utter futility. The provision relating to the exclusion of importations will not touch this product at all. It will not touch rags. Senators, hear the language of the bill. See what it is dealing with.

SEC. 8. All-wool products imported into the United States except those made more than 20 years prior to such importation—

I will read the rest, if necessary, but those few words show that it will not block rags. Who can dispute the claim that rags brought to our shores were made more than 20 years ago? What an absurd idea that we can overcome——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me finish the sentence.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; but the Senator travels from one thing to another and does not yield when he has completed his sentence.

Mr. AUSTIN. I insist that while I have the floor I should have the respect of the Members for the rules of the Senate. I will yield, as I said before, at the end of a sentence, but not in the middle of one.

I say it seems to me absurd to say that by passing a bill such as this we can overcome the effect of the trade treaty with Great Britain by which we cut down the tariff protection to wool growers 50 percent ad valorem. Anyway, this is not the whole story. I will now call the attention of the Senate to some other facts as to the kind of competition we are meeting.

I yield to the Senator now if he wishes.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I merely wanted to make two observations. One is rather minor, and that is that whereas Mr. Brenckman says that the increase is 1,300 percent, I stated it to be 1,550——

Mr. AUSTIN. Is the Senator still hurt about that?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No; I have not been hurt at all. I do not know of anything that the distinguished Senator can do——

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot do more than I have.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. If the Senator will now permit me to complete my statement, I think we will be even. I merely wish to remark that the official letter from which I quoted carried the matter down a month or two later than Mr. Brenckman did. Furthermore, I will say that Mr. Brenckman testified before the committee in favor of the bill. What the Senator has read is not all he said. He is in favor of the bill. Furthermore, the purpose of the bill is not to reduce the tariff. It might be agreeable to some if we were to abolish the reciprocal-trade agreements. The purpose of the bill is, for the information of the American consumer, to provide for the labeling of goods that leave the factory.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator has entirely missed the point of my argument. Mr. Brenckman pointed out, as a cause for favoring this bill, that there were importations from foreign countries that would be prevented if we passed this bill. That is the point. I am undertaking to say that Mr. Brenckman does not understand the effect of the bill as to that. If he did he would not in writing make such a claim. That is all there is to it. I make the further claim on my own responsibility that we cannot remedy the wrong that has already been done through trade agreements, we cannot remedy the wrong done to the sheep growers of this country by undertaking to create this monopoly for Mr. Forstmann and others in a similar situation to that occupied by him.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I should like at this time to make an observation. I have received a letter from one of the woolen mills in my own State. We are situated somewhat like the Senator is. We have a number of small mills. This letter comes from the Appleton Woolen Mills, and perhaps it may answer some of the questions that may have been asked. The letter is addressed to me, and is as follows:

We have noticed from various sources that this labeling regulations subject is again up in Congress. When the bill comes up for action we would appreciate your giving weight to the following items:

1. No fair manufacturer objects to a practical truth-in-fabric bill if such can be worked out.
2. The impracticability lies in the fact that research laboratories are unable to distinguish virgin from reworked wool.
3. This statement is acknowledged by all reliable laboratories, including the Bureau of Standards.
4. Because identification is impossible, such a law invites rather than stops unfair labeling of fabrics by those manufacturers who take advantage of this situation.
5. Therefore, the honest manufacturer is punished through being compelled to compete against an unfair fabric; also,
6. There are two sources of wool:
(a) As clipped from the sheep;
(b) As pulled from the pelt of slaughtered animals.
7. Proposed bill unfairly excludes pulled wool from being labelled virgin wool.
8. Fair-practice rules must be workable or they are a decided detriment rather than a help.

If the Senator will pardon me further, I have a letter from another small manufacturer, and I ask particularly the attention of the Senators from Wyoming, because in that letter a statement is made which particularly pertains to their State. I quote it verbatim:

The State of Wyoming enacted a law a few years ago requiring that all garments be marked as to their virgin-wool content. Wyoming is one of our great wool States. This law was passed with great enthusiasm. All manufacturers and wholesalers shipping into that State were informed by circular letters and by letters from their dealers that this State law must be complied with. I asked one of our Wyoming dealers about the present status of this law. He answered that it was entirely dead, though he didn't know whether it had been repealed or not. There is no pretense, even in that great wool State, of trying to enforce this law. The difficulties of enforcement and the infinite ramifications caused it to fall of its own weight. It is of very great importance in this country that we cease multiplying laws only to have them disregarded.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am most grateful to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] for calling my attention to something of which I was not aware.

Mr. President, I shall make a unanimous-consent request. I ask that all the interruptions which have occurred during my discussion follow my address, so that my remarks will all appear together. I do not refer to the discussions that preceded it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand the Senator's request to mean the interruptions which were irrelevant to his discussion.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am afraid that would take everything out. I did not quite mean that, Mr. President. [Laughter.]

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Well, the Senator's whole speech, of course, would go out on that interpretation.

Mr. AUSTIN. I mean, Mr. President, those interjections of matters which did not refer to the subject under discussion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Wisconsin and——

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. Not now. I shall be glad to yield when I shall have finished this sentence.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I wish to ask a question.

Mr. AUSTIN. In a moment I shall be glad to permit questions on anything and everything.

Mr. President, I appreciate the information which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] gave the Senate about the experience of the State of Wyoming, so ably represented by the author of this measure [Mr. SCHWARTZ] and his colleague [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who are supporting Senate bill 162.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, our inability to enforce the legislation was due to the fact that it interfered with interstate commerce, and we could not compel compliance with the law on the part of a manufacturer of shoddy in Vermont in connection with something which was not labeled according to its contents and which was shipped into the State of Wyoming.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it can be seen how useful the word "shoddy" is.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I will take that back. I will use the words "reworked wool."

Mr. AUSTIN. There is nothing more potent to excite antipathy than an opprobrious name. If we name a thing, a remark, or a person "shoddy," the effect is derogation of the thing, the remark, or the person. It is really an attempt to gain force by something which is not reason and which ought not to persuade the mind, although it may affect the feelings.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Of course the words "reworked wool" are more euphonious. The designation of those who make the reworked wool—I will not say "shoddy"—is equally so. They call themselves the National Association of Wool Fiber Manufacturers. When that name appears on the records of the prosaic Bureau of the Census, which is not interested in the bill, the words "shoddy makers" are placed underneath.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the kind of thing which may appeal to legislators, although I doubt it. I think it is much better taste to use the language of the bill before us and the language of the bill pending in the other branch of the Congress. The term "reclaimed wool" is used in the pending bill, and the words "reprocessed wool" and the words "reused wool" are employed in the bill pending in the other branch of the Congress. In any event, I myself should prefer to use those terms, regardless of the lack of sportsmanship which is involved in the use of an opprobrious epithet.

Mr. President, why does the Senator from Wyoming, having had the experience about which he now tells us with an attempt to regulate intrastate commerce and interstate commerce by means of a State statute, come to the Federal Congress and ask it to undertake to control intrastate commerce by a Federal statute? It seems to me that regardless of his profound learning and his knowledge of the Constitution—which should forbid it—his special experience in his own home State, for which I have great regard, ought to have prevented him from bringing to the Congress Senate bill 162, which provides, on page 4, lines 2 to 5:

> Or who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver—

Why did he use those words when he was defining who is a criminal, and what are misbranded goods? He defines misbranded goods as goods which are in intrastate commerce; and he defines the malefactor as one who is reselling. That is, the transaction is entirely inside the boundaries of a State. By that penalty clause he would have the Congress undertake to put a man in jail if he should offend against section 3 of the bill. Could it be done? I say "No." I say that any court in the land would grant habeas corpus to a prisoner undertaken to be held for violating that provision of the bill. That provision should not be in the bill. It contaminates the whole bill. It is not in the House bill. Neither are the words "virgin wool" in the House bill. There are many things in the House bill which constitute a great improvement over Senate bill 162.

Mr. President, I was diverted. Interruptions are likely to divert us. I wanted to complete the picture of the situation of wool in this country in competition with processed wool from other countries, a condition brought about by New Deal policies and New Deal laws, a condition brought about by transgressing the barrier which the people of the country set up between the White House and the Capitol when they said that treaties between this country and foreign countries must have the sanction, consent, and agreement of the Senate of the United States, and turning over to the President of the United States, as was done, the power to enter into treaties. Sometimes they are called trade agreements. Sometimes they are called treaties, as was the case with a bill which was before us the other day. In the bill relating to an exchange of critical materials for our agricultural materials, the word "agreements" was changed to "treaties."

What is the effect on wool? The imports of woolen and worsted piece goods since the rates of duty were reduced on January 1 have shown a very substantial increase over the quantity entered in 1938. The total imports for the months of January and February compare as follows:

January and February 1938, 1,476,00 square yards. January and February 1939, 2,695,000 square yards. What does that mean? It means an increase of 83 percent.

Mr. President, why not go right to the heart of the trouble? Is it because a New Deal policy is going wrong, and we do not want to admit its error? I think that is not good ground for the Senate to take, regardless of the existence of an aisle between Democrats and Republicans. I take no position on the bill which reflects a purely partisan standpoint; and I think there are many Democrats in the country and in the Senate who, when they contemplate an evil result of a policy put into effect under the present administration, are big enough, broad enough, and high enough to change it. That ought to be the attitude of the Senate. Instead of undertaking another control over agriculture by the great, powerful Government at Washington, another grant of a monopoly which tends to concentrate government and economy in Washington, let us adhere to the traditional economy of the United States, a free economy under a capitalistic system, depending principally upon free trade in the United States and a controlled trade abroad. Now that we have discovered the pecuniary injury to us from reversing the policy, why should we not take notice of it and act upon it?

We have reversed the ancient economy of the United States. By this method of control of business between and among the States of the United States, and by trade treaties cutting down the tariff walls and removing the protection to our industries from those which are operated by cheap labor abroad, we have reversed the economy of 150 years and have set up an economy which is ruled by free trade abroad and restricted trade at home, bringing all things under an all-powerful Government.

First, we go after coal, and we fix the price of coal. Then we must go after oil, because oil is in competition with coal. These actions have repercussions which we cannot foresee. If we fix the price of one article, we must fix the price of another. If we impose restrictions, investigations, and espionage upon one commodity, we must load down another commodity with the same sort of burdens, clogs, hindrances, regulations, and control in order to try to bring back the equilibrium which was created by a free business, a free government, and free commercial competition. We should have regulation by the Government; but we should have regulation so limited as to insure the highest degree of competition without making it an unlicensed, unjust, and unfair competition.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President——

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I take it the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Vermont in relation to the New Deal include policies, not simply centralizing power in Washington but centralizing that power in the Executive. Perhaps the Senator knows that one of the New Deal spokesmen last night, speaking over a national radio hook-up, suggested the abolition of the United States Senate?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not think I could become calloused to such suggestions, for I always feel astonished when anybody suggests such a thing as making a unicameral legislature for our Nation. I find it hard, after our own experience, to countenance the idea at all with respect even to one of our States. We have lived through such an experience in my own little State. Vermont started off with a unicameral legislature. We had the parliamentary notion, but we thought we could conduct the business much better than old England, with two houses of Parliament, had done, and could improve on her system. So we set out with one house and we tried it for a number of years. We tried all the so-called new-fangled ideas, such as the recall of judicial decisions and the recall of judges. We went through that mill a hundred years ago, and we know from experience the fallacy of such theories and proposals.

Mr. President, I am going to try to hasten along, for I am not filibustering. In connection with my claim that this is a bill to create monopoly, I call attention to who it is that stirs up propaganda and interest in this measure. Look at this brochure by Julius Forstmann [exhibiting]. Read it, Mr. President, and you will find there the source of the identical language of many of those who have written to the committee; you will find there the source of the identical paragraphs in the testimony of some of the witnesses who testified in favor of Senate bill 162. But, Mr. President, should you need any more proof of the extent to which this man goes in securing, if possible, a monopoly in the United States which would deal a lethal blow to the small factories of this country, look at this envelope that I hold in my hand [exhibiting] with the address cut out of it for fear of what might result to the addressee. The man who received that envelope dare not have his name presented to the Congress and to the world. He has endorsed on it:

I do not know how I happened to be on their mailing list, but thought the enclosed would interest you.

What is it? It is an envelope bearing in one corner what pretends to be a wool source, a sheep grower's source. It says "Consumers' League." You see, Mr. President, we get a little something out of that; because that is a popular thing to do; it refers to the consumer as well as to the wool grower.

Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling, 824 Transportation Building, Washington, D. C.

It bears a stamp canceled by the post office at Washington February 18, 9 p. m., 1939; and down in the corner another stamp, reading:

An important message. Read it carefully and act at once.

When it is opened there is found inside a brochure of only a few pages. It can be readily and quickly read, and it concludes with this admonition:

As a consumer you are vitally interested in the enactment of this legislation.

It will be seen that it is addressed to consumers.

Write, therefore, immediately to your Senators and to your Representatives in Congress urging them to support and vote for the Schwartz Senate bill, No. 162, and the Martin House bill, No. 944.

Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling.
Washington Office, 824 Transportation Building, Washington, D. C.

How artless! "Washington office," implying that there is another office somewhere else. For, Mr. President, is not Washington a strange place to have a Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling?

I happened to have an opportunity to ask a few questions about that, and I am sure the Senate will be interested in what this league is, because it will determine whether this is not an ancient trick spoken of in Holy Writ. It will be remembered when wool was once used to play a trick. A distinguished and great patriarch said, as he felt, blind as he was, and had to feel in order to identify his son, "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau." Is this a more modern method of fooling Senators of the United States and Representatives in the other body? Is this another use that has a literary backing of sheep's clothing to cover up something that is not a sheep? Well, listen to this: J. B. Wilson, who now sits in the Senate gallery, on the witness stand being examined by me, testified as follows:

Senator AUSTIN. I understand you have already testified before the subcommittee.

Mr. WILSON. That is correct.

Senator AUSTIN. I did not have an opportunity to listen to your testimony. Do you have an office here in Washington?

Mr. WILSON. Do I have an office here in Washington?

Senator AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. No.

Senator AUSTIN. Do you rent office space here in Washington?

Mr. WILSON. We rent, and when I say "we" I mean some of my friends in Wyoming and I subrent some office space here, at 824—I think it is—Transportation Building, Senator.

It will be recalled that "824" is a familiar number. That is the number on the envelope; that is the number given on the brochure.

I am not even certain of the number of the room. I go over there quite frequently, and I think it is 824.

Senator AUSTIN. Whom do you rent from?

Mr. WILSON. From Miss Ruth D. Stiles, who has been doing my secretarial and stenographic work here for the past 10 years.

Senator AUSTIN. During those 10 years what has been your business here?

Mr. WILSON. My business here has been to represent the wool growers on various matters, such as tariff, truth-in-fabric, land legislation, and dozens of other things.

Senator AUSTIN. Do you mean representing them before committees of Congress?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir; before committees of the Congress.

Senator AUSTIN. Have you been doing this for pay?

Mr. WILSON. Well, I have been paid by my association. That is a part of the work that I am paid to do by the two associations I represent; yes.

Senator AUSTIN. Do you have any other employment?

Mr. WILSON. I have no other employment.

Senator AUSTIN. Have you received pay from any other source?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. I mean except the two wool growers' associations.

Mr. WILSON. By the Wyoming Wool Growers' Association, of which I am secretary, and the Wyoming Wool Cooperative Marketing Association, of which I am treasurer.

Senator AUSTIN. And from no one else?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. Either directly or indirectly?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. You have no contract for pay from anybody else?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. Either paid to you now or to be paid to you in the future?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. Is there any such thing as Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling?

Mr. WILSON. The Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling, Senator, is the outgrowth of organizations we have had in Wyoming for some 19 years that we have been attempting to secure truth-in-fabric legislation. The organization you speak of is an organization of which I suppose if there be a head I am the directing head, but there are no salaries connected with it, and it is just an organization to disseminate information regarding this particular bill that is now under consideration before your committee.

Senator AUSTIN. What kind of organization is it?

Mr. WILSON. Well it is just a loose organization of friends of mine from Wyoming with no dues.

Senator AUSTIN. Is it incorporated?

Mr. WILSON. No.

Senator AUSTIN. Is it a copartnership?

Mr. WILSON. No. It is just—well, you can call it a propaganda organization if you like. I expect that is what it is as much as anything else, and I want to be perfectly frank with you in saying so.

Senator AUSTIN. Who else is a member of it besides you?

Mr. WILSON. Oh, a number of people in Wyoming. We associated ourselves together. Really it is a trade name, to be frank with you.

Senator AUSTIN. To be perfectly accurate is it not yourself doing business as the consumers' league?

Mr. WILSON. No, sir. It is myself and some friends in Wyoming.

Senator AUSTIN. Who are they?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Hadsell, of Wyoming.

Senator AUSTIN. What is his name and address?

Mr. WILSON. K. H. Hadsell, Rawlins, Wyo.

Senator AUSTIN. Anybody else?

Mr. WILSON. Yes. There is Mr. LeRoy Moore, of Ross, Wyo.; Mr. John A. Reed, of Kemmerer, Wyo.; Mr. H. D. Port, and numerous others.

Senator AUSTIN. Yes; and who else?

Mr. WILSON. I will be glad to submit a list of names for the committee if you desire it. I do not recall them at the moment.

Senator AUSTIN. Yes; I would like to know their names and addresses.

Now I want to call your attention to this envelope, postmarked at Washington, D. C., February—some date—1939, the contents of which purport to be a 4-page pamphlet entitled "Honest Wool Labeling. Why enactment of Schwartz Senate bill No. 162 and Martin House bill No. 944 are necessary to protect the consuming public from fraud and deception in the purchase of woolen products," and ask you who is the author of that pamphlet and who mailed it.

Mr. WILSON. As to the pamphlet, I am partially the author of it.

Senator AUSTIN. What is that?

Mr. WILSON. I say, I am partially the author of it. I helped to author it, if I may use that expression, or I collaborated in it, if that is the proper expression.

Senator AUSTIN. Well, now——

Mr. WILSON (interposing). May I make a rather extended answer to that question?

Senator AUSTIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Julius Forstmann, of the Forstmann Woolen Co., prepared a rather large booklet on the wool-labeling question. It was too large for average consumption. By that I mean the average person would not take long enough to read it. I suggested to Mr. Forstmann that I should like to have his help in condensing it, I mean the booklet, for general circulation, and I collaborated in the preparation of this pamphlet with Mr. Forstmann.

Senator AUSTIN. And who provided the funds with which to print and publish it?

Mr. WILSON. I presume Mr. Forstmann's company did. I am not certain as to that. But the Forstmann organization I would say.

Senator AUSTIN. Who paid for it?

Mr. WILSON. I presume if it is paid for they paid for it. I could not testify as to that. I asked him to furnish the pamphlet, and they did.

Senator AUSTIN. Then you did the mailing, did you?

Mr. WILSON. I did only a part of the mailing.

Senator AUSTIN. How much of the mailing did you do?

Mr. WILSON. I think I mailed out probably 300 altogether.

Senator AUSTIN. In a general way describe the addresses to whom you sent this pamphlet.

Mr. WILSON. Oh, to various people I was writing to in regard to this bill. They were pretty well scattered over the United States. Frankly, even if I referred to my files I could not tell you to whom they were mailed because they were sent out in some instances without a covering letter.

Senator AUSTIN. Did you accompany that pamphlet with a letter in some instances?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. Did you stamp on this envelope this information: "An important message. Read it carefully and act at once"?

Mr. WILSON. It was stamped on the envelope, but I personally did not do it.

Senator AUSTIN. Where was it stamped?

Mr. WILSON. I think perhaps in New York, but I do not know.

Senator AUSTIN. That is to say, Mr. Forstmann provided the envelope with its return address on it, and this stamp, did he?

Mr. WILSON. He provided the booklet, the envelope, and the stamp. I have not seen the stamp. May I look at it?

Senator AUSTIN. Yes. This is the first time you have seen one of these?

Mr. WILSON. I did not happen to see this stamp. The ones I have been mailing out have been mailed out under another cover.

Senator AUSTIN. You have seen the stamp now, have you not?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

Senator AUSTIN. Can you tell whether that particular envelope was mailed from your office or desk room?

Mr. WILSON. I cannot.

Senator AUSTIN. You will observe that it was mailed in Washington, D. C. That is to say, the stamp on it says that. I do not know whether it was or not.

Mr. WILSON. I presume it was, but I would not know.

Senator AUSTIN. Is it probable, knowing what you do know about the transaction, that it was mailed from your office?

Mr. WILSON. I imagine it was mailed from the office in the Transportation Building; yes, sir.

Finally he was asked about the contents:

"As a consumer you are vitally interested in the enactment of this legislation. Write, therefore, immediately to your Senators and to your Representatives in Congress urging them to support and vote for the Schwartz Senate bill 162 and the Martin House bill 944."

That is the part you referred to in your answer, is it?

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir.

* * * * * * *

Senator AUSTIN. Now, what action did you expect from that pamphlet?

Mr. WILSON. We expected from that—well, the booklet itself is, I think, the best evidence of what we expected.

Senator AUSTIN. Well, that is a fair answer.

So that is what this pamphlet refers to—that they expected everybody to write in.

The pamphlet was marked as an exhibit and is here for inspection. It would be rather interesting reading. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read it, but any Senator who wishes to do so may take it and read it. It establishes the point that this communication pretended that a consumers' committee or organization interested in honest wool labeling had sent out and sponsored those statements, whereas the fact is that they were sent out by Mr. Forstmann, acting through this gentleman who was a witness before the committee advocating this bill, and who, as he said, has been occupying the same desk room here for 10 years doing service similar to this.

What does the innocent person understand who receives that letter? I leave it to you, Mr. President. But what shall we take from the communicant when he comes to us with his communication and says he is for Senate bill 162? He believes he has been approached by consumers who are interested in honest wool labeling, and he has been induced to write to us. Of what value, I ask, is that kind of material which comes to us as representing actual public opinion, founded upon facts and founded upon a knowledge of the law?

Before leaving the subject of consumers, to which reference has been made by those who have preceded me in their remarks supporting the bill, I desire to call attention to the fact that consumers who understand the import of Senate bill 162 are not all for the bill. Many consumers may be for the principle, as I am for it, of truth in labeling. Whenever a merchant makes a representation respecting his goods by a label, by an advertisement, or by his word of mouth, it must be truthful. If it is not, and injury flows from it, the contract may be rescinded under the law as it is today; and if damage has flowed from it, damages may be recovered for the false representation. I will go further than that. I will add to the common law which has always protected the public a statute which will implement the common law with definitions, provided the proponents of the measure do not, by means and under the guise of definitions, set up a monopoly that amounts to more than trade-mark because it has behind it a sanction of criminal prosecution.

Now listen to some of these consumers. I shall not weary the Senate with many of them:

BROOKLINE, MASS, June 25, 1939.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: I wish to protest against the passage of S. 162.

Consumers feel it will be a great injustice to them if this legislation is passed. A label giving information is to be desired. A label that is misinforming, as this label will be, is definitely not to be desired.

Consumer education is a slow process, and the prejudice that will be instinctively felt for something marked reclaimed will be most unfair, since really beautiful material can be made from reworked wool. Conversely, the sanctity and quality given to the word virgin by common usage, implies a property that may not be present in a material made of virgin wool.

Yours very truly,

MARGARET T. CAHILL.

I have selected that letter because it contains a reasonable statement. It contains an appeal to sense and reason. There are a few others here which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading. I ask unanimous consent that they be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GURNEY in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters are as follows:

DORCHESTER, MASS., June 21, 1939.

Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: Please take into consideration my protest, as a consumer, against S. 162.

My husband earns average wages, and I clothe a family of five. I cannot afford to buy the most expensive clothes, but must get both attractive and good-wearing garments at a modest price.

If this bill is passed I feel it will raise the price of the garments that I can afford to have, since virgin wool will be at a premium and reworked wool prices follow in trend.

Strong, durable garments can be made from reworked wool at a price the average wage earner can afford to pay. Why penalize this good material so that those who can afford to may have a label "all virgin wool" on their clothes?

Yours very truly,

MARY LEONARD.

WEST ROXBURY, MASS., June 20, 1939.

Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: The school in which I teach is on the borderline between well-to-do and poor districts, and we have children from all sorts of homes. I am more interested in the poorer class, and for their interests watch industrial legislation.

I wish to protest against S. 162 as discriminating between classes. Because poor people cannot purchase luxury fabrics is no reason for their clothes to bear a label which to them means inferior merchandise.

Studying the process of woolen manufacturing I am convinced that virgin wool does not always mean good wool, whereas reworked wool does not always mean inferior wool. Besides, there is no chemical test to prove conclusively that a fiber is virgin or reworked, since both are animal fibers and chemically and physically identical. So, until there is a scientific proof, I feel that this legislation is untimely, as well as discriminating.

Very truly yours,

SARAH ANNE QUINN.

BOSTON, MASS., June 17, 1939.

Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: I wish to protest against the passing of S. 162.

After studying the bill, I am convinced that it is unfair to industry and misleading to consumers.

Yours very truly,

LOUISE MORRISEY.

EAST DEDHAM, MASS., June 23, 1939.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: I herein protest against S. 162 as discriminating legislation. It furthers the interests of the wool growers and puts the burden of increased prices upon the consumers.

Retailers and manufacturers feel that it will be unfair, inasmuch as it will be impossible to enforce. When scientific tests fail to identify whether a fiber is virgin wool or reclaimed wool, how can proof be brought that a label is correct? I understand mill records will be resorted to, but does not that bring the whole issue back to the integrity of the manufacturer? If so, the increased prices of fabrics will be the only good the consumer will get from the passage of the bill.

Is this fair to the larger group of consumers—to be exploited for the good of a smaller group of wool growers?

Yours very truly,

ELLEN J. MCGOWAN.

LOWELL, MASS., June 16, 1939.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: As a resident of a mill city, I wish to protest against the passage of S. 162.

It is both discriminating and misleading legislation.

Yours very truly,

(MRS. P. J.) KATHLEEN LEAHY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 27, 1939.

Senator WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: I am enclosing herewith an editorial in Capitol Daily, which appeared on February 21, 1939, which I know will prove most interesting to you, and which, I am sure, you are personally concerned about.

For your information and as one of your constituents, I take the liberty of sending you this article, which I hope you will read and digest.

I personally have been present at this hearing on S. 162 and H. R. 944, and do hope that before a bill of this kind is railroaded through your committee that you will do everything in your power to see to it that the Senate is not used as an advertising agency for one man's fabric, namely, J. C. Forstmann (who seems to be the only one in favor of the bill).

Very truly yours,

MARIE SWANN.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have heard the claim made here that the Federation of Women's Clubs are behind this bill. Are they? Let me read a letter from one of them. I know some of them favor the bill; I have letters from some of them supporting the bill, or, rather, supporting the principle of honest labeling—and I am for the principle of honest labeling.

I have a letter here from Marion Lane Sweeney, Mrs. F. R. Sweeney, who is shown on the letterhead to be chairman of the division of social welfare of the Massachusetts State Federation of Women's Clubs. The letter is dated June 17, 1939, is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

As chairman of the division of social welfare of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, as a member of many executive boards dispensing welfare in my community and State, I wish to protest against the passage of S. 162.

I feel that it is both misleading and mininforming and will react in an advance in prices to the consumers.

Women are coming more to feel that this legislation will be detrimental to manufacturers and retailers, that it is advantageous only to the wool growers and the manufacturers of luxury fabrics, and that it is impractical of enforcement if it is passed.

I believe in labeling and would support a bill to differentiate between fibers, where such fibers can be identified by scientific tests. I feel the time is coming soon when natural fibers are going to have great competition from synthetic fibers, and that this legislation, if passed, will be greatly regretted by those who now seek to support it.

Senate bill 1496, introduced by Senator WALSH, seems to me far more timely and intelligent.

Very truly yours,

MARION LANE SWEENEY.

Mr. President, I have had a little insight into the claims respecting the same type of women's organizations. It is a very distinguished organization and one for which I have great respect. I do not argue from the specific to the general—I think that is one of the fallacies of logic—but I call attention to a certain specific thing which I think qualifies the support given by this particular woman's organization to which I am going to refer.

A lady called on me, because I was on the subcommittee, and advocated the support of Senate bill 162. I discussed the matter with her and pointed out the element in the bill which I claimed would create a monopoly, whereupon she made some investigations and then wrote me a letter dated May 5, 1939, which reads as follows:

Thank you so much for your time yesterday morning when I called to see you regarding Senator SCHWARTZ' bill for the labeling of wool products—S. 162.

Although I feel I didn't persuade you to change your opinion to any extent, still I certainly enjoyed meeting with you and having the few minutes' talk that we did. The question which you brought out concerning monopoly in regard to this bill rather intrigued me because I had never considered it from that angle, and so, on returning to the hotel, I checked with Miss Julia Jaffray, of the New York City federation, and she states that as the result of a questionnaire sent to 125 woolen manufacturers throughout the country 29 of them are definitely in favor of the labeling of woolen material as to its content of virgin wool, reclaimed wool, cotton, and rayon.

I am sure you will be interested to know that there are two manufacturing companies in Vermont among those who favor this legislation. Does this information by any chance soften a little your opposition to the bill as a whole? Copies of their letters to the New York City federation are enclosed.

Hoping that you will see that this bill provides knowledge as the right of every consumer, I am,

Very cordially yours,

DOROTHY KRAUS.

Let me call attention to the type of questionnaire the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs sent out and the time of its sending. It was in March 1938, and the questions did not refer to a bill which defined a mark indicating virgin wool. It referred to the general subject of truth in labels. Listen to this:

The members of the New York City Federation of Women's Clubs, as purchasing agents for their homes, are vitally interested in the fiber content of the fabric merchandise which they buy. Therefore, in buying wool fabrics, we have taken the stand that we want to know whether we are buying virgin wool, reclaimed wool, or a mixture.

The federation is most anxious to know how you, as a manufacturer, feel on this subject. Would you, therefore, be kind enough to inform us on the following points:

1. Do you use reclaimed wool in manufacturing your product?
2. If you do, what percentage do you use?
3. Do you consider reclaimed wool as serviceable in a fabric as the virgin wool which it replaces?
4. And, most important, do you favor a labeling act which would require manufacturers of wool products to inform consumers whether their products contain reclaimed wool?
5. If you do not, will you please tell us why not?

May we ask for your answer at the earliest possible date?

With appreciation of your cooperation,

Sincerely yours,

MRS. (ANDREW J.) KATHERINE E. NOE,
President.

JULIA K. JAFFRAY,
Chairman, Department of Economic Adjustment.

This lady who called on me went to Mrs. Jaffray, so Mrs. Jaffray tried to help her out with some letters received from two manufacturers in Vermont which she said supported Senate bill 162.

Never was opportunity afforded anyone to throw light upon an error as there is in this instance. Let us take the Bridgewater Woolen Co. It is a manufacturer of virgin-wool products, and let me read their answer. It does not contain one single thing which can be said to support Senate bill 162. What it says amounts to approval of the principle, upon which I think we all agree, that there should be labeling, and that it should be honest labeling:

We acknowledge receipt of your favor of March 13, signed by the above-named members of your federation—

He has quoted the names, Mrs. Andrew J. Noe, president; Julia K. Jaffray, chairman—

Your interest in the content of woolen fabrics is an intelligent manifestation of public concern, and we feel, as makers of woolens, that you are entitled to know all about the fabrics that are sold to the women in coats, dresses, and other articles of apparel alleged to be made of woolen cloth.

As manufacturers of woolens with a background of almost 200 years in the country, we have been guided by principles that rest upon truth in action, in production, in selling, and in dealing with our patrons. Further, we have believed that truth, as the dominant or underlying principle, would permanently survive the influences of misleading and misguided practices, however brilliantly portrayed, which are limited at most to the period when the mask is removed and the truth is disclosed.

We answer your questions frankly:

1. No.

2. This is answered by our reply to No. 1.

3. Reclaimed wool possesses no service ability of worth. It is much like gathering the broken pieces of a dish, cementing them together, and offering the reconstructed dish as a real plate. The rewelded plate is a constant liability.

4. Yes; we are thoroughly in favor of a label, of an act compelling a declaration in truth.

While this is an answer to all of your definite questions, may we add in closing: Wool has no substitute of worth or merit. There is no animal fiber—and certainly no vegetable fiber—that contains properties at all comparable with the properties in virgin pure wool. The fabric constructed exclusively of virgin pure wool possesses lively magnetic properties far beyond any corresponding in reworked wool, which is practically dead wool, its vitality being exhausted.

We hope this satisfactorily answers your inquiries. We assure you of our sincere desire to further assist your federation in its search for information or legislation, and we beg to remain,

Very truly yours,

BRIDGEWATER WOOLEN CO.,
Per R. M. SHARPE.

That is an advertisement for virgin wool. It also knocks out, as this measure is intended to knock out, anything else. Reworked wool put into a fabric is like a broken plate mended together. The Ethiopian is out of the wall. There is the best evidence we could possibly have of it. Put together a piece of legislation that will destroy the production of reworked wool in the form of gowns, coats, suits, and there will not be any competitor of the manufacturer of virgin wool. Yet this correspondent does not refer to Senate bill 162 at all. That is one letter.

The other letter was from James F. Dewey, of the A. G. Dewey Woolen Manufacturers, Creechy, Vt., a firm established in 1836, and still operating, thank God. They manufacture clothes which the poor man can buy and out of which he can get some wear. Mr. Dewey's reply was as follows:

This letter is addressed to Mrs. Jaffray:

Replying to your letter of the 13th, it is a pleasure to answer your various questions as follows:

As the first manufacturer to use reclaimed wool in our product in this country, we would answer question 1 by saying that we have used it since 1836.

Under question 2, we use all the way from 5 to 90 percent.

Under question 3, we believe that the reclaimed wool which we use is more serviceable in a fabric than short fiber of virgin wool which it replaces. In fact, we consider it a great deal more serviceable than any so-called all-wool fabric.

Answering question 4, we would say that we always have favored a labeling act requiring manufacturers to state just what percentage of virgin wool is in their product. We think the word "wool" on a fabric should relate only to virgin wool.

Evidently his principle has been carried into the language of the House bill.

We have been hurt many times by mills calling a product all wool when it was only reclaimed wool. We are willing to have our product stand on its own legs and state what it is made of and stand back of the product, but we can't compete with the public when certain chain stores call their fabric 100-percent wool when many times it is of poorer quality than ours. We do not claim ours as all wool.

Trusting this has answered your questions, I am

Yours sincerely,

A. G. DEWEY CO.,
JAMES F. DEWEY, President.

Mr. President, it was a strange coincidence that on the same day on which I received that letter from Mrs. Kraus making the claim that these two manufacturers in my State favored S. 162, and sending the two letters to which I have referred, neither of which expressly refers to S. 162, I should receive a letter from the writer of the last letter I read, namely from James F. Dewey, which is dated May 25, 1939, and the first half of which reads as follows:

Replying to yours of the 24th, I have read the new bill known as the Wool Products Labeling Act. I agree with you that it is all foolishness. If they ever try to enforce it, it will cost them more than they will ever get out of it, and the public won't be helped one bit. Your minority report has said everything that I think anyone could say. I appreciate your efforts, although they probably won't help any, as they seem to pass anything that they want to down there.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I have been called out of the Chamber several times during the afternoon, and so do not know whether an answer has been given to the question propounded by the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] as to whether the establishment of these standards for American woolen goods and the failure to establish them for foreign woolen goods would result in foreign importations and the displacement of the American wage earner and producer.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I will try to answer the question specifically. I think the same standards are established by the bill for imported goods as for domestic goods. That is not the trouble. The trouble is that if, after the goods have been manufactured into a fabric, there is no scientific way by which a test may be made to ascertain the proportion of virgin wool and the proportion of reworked unused wool—that is wool that has been fabricated but not worn by the ultimate consumer, and has been pulled apart and put into new fabric—if what those ratios are and what the percentages are in the fabric, cannot be ascertained, it is impossible to enforce the standard. In other words, if it is necessary to go to the manufacturer to find out the quantity of virgin wool in a fabric, the quantity of reworked wool in a fabric, the quantity of other fibers in a fabric, it may perhaps be necessary to travel around the world in such a search.

Mr. LODGE. It is possible to go to the American manufacturer, but not to the foreign manufacturer.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is true. Another thing is involved in the question. I have been talking about garments, piece goods, products of wool that are fabricated for consumption; but a great amount of the competition with the wool growers of America is not that type of importation. It is rags, and it is goods that may never have been worn, but nevertheless are second-hand and are intended to be reworked. As shown here, the importation of rags has increased greatly since the New Deal trade agreement went into effect in January. The increase has been 1,397 percent in quantity and 938 percent in dollar value. The bill contains a description of what imported material is subject to the regulations provided for in the bill, as follows:

All wool products imported into the United States, except those made more than 20 years prior to such importation.

How in the world is it possible to tell from a carload or shipload of rags whether they were made 20 years ago or not?

Mr. LODGE. Then would I be correct in saying that in effect the bill imposes standards on American producers that are not imposed on foreign producers?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is one way of stating the matter, although the text of the bill was designed to establish the same standard for both types of goods.

Mr. LODGE. The letter of the law is one way but the spirit of the law is another.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is quite true. But I also claim—and I want to say it now, for, although it is repetition, it is purposeful repetition—that for the same reason the bill, if enacted, could not be enforced domestically.

Mr. LODGE. May I ask the Senator a further question? Is not this proposition very similar to what we have seen attempted before, in the wage-hour legislation, for example, which I, for one, favor? We try to raise the standards at home; we try to raise them for the employee; we try to raise them for the consumer—with which I am in sympathy—but, of course, we cannot impose those standards on foreigners, and we refuse to provide any tariff protection to protect the American worker against substandard competition. The net result is we try to go in two opposite directions at the same time, and, to my mind, that is a tragic contradiction which can help no one in the long run.

Mr. AUSTIN. I thank the Senator for stating what he has stated, with all of which I agree. I think it affords a good reason why Senate bill 162 should not be passed.

Mr. President, I have material from manufacturers which I feel I should not take the time to discuss or read but which I should like, by unanimous consent, to have inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

I think the woolen manufacturers are not so much opposed to the intent of the bill to prevent fraud to the public, but we feel very firmly that the terms of the bill may increase fraud rather than decrease it, principally because it is impossible through any adequate tests to determine approximately the content between virgin wool and woolen shoddy. I enclose the pamphlet which has just been put out by the National Association of Woolen Manufacturers showing a critical examination by the United States Testing Co. of the relation of virgin-wool content in fabric merit. If you will go through this carefully you will find that, on the whole, 100 percent virgin-wool fabric will be better than 100 percent shoddy fabric. However, as the percentages of virgin wool go down quite the reverse is true. The term "virgin wool" is a very elastic one, and covers some very undesirable short fibers which do not make good fabric. On the other hand, some of the woolen stock which has been called shoddy, or reworked wool, is of the very finest variety and will make a beautiful piece of goods which will give wonderful satisfaction to the purchaser. There is a further matter of reputation of the mill for making good goods, the number of picks per inch (that is, the number of threads of filling across the fabric), the number and fineness of the warp threads, and the question of whether or not the pieces have been napped finely or roughly, which in the most part determines the strength of the finished piece of goods.

All of this is more or less technical and has a direct bearing on the merits of this legislation. The one point which I personally very much object to is the fact that it is known that there is no method of examination of a fabric to determine whether the percentage of virgin wool or reworked wool is correct. This being the case, the honest company will be at a great competitive disadvantage with the dishonest people, who will be inclined to put on percentages of virgin wool which may not be true and which cannot be verified by examination. The only alternative to prevent this is to have inspectors in every woolen mill to see that the labeling is properly done, and this is abhorrent to our Vermont ideals.

Possibly I have no right to speak for the woolen mills of Vermont, because we have no organization. However, I feel sure that I represent the unanimous opinion of the Vermont woolen mills in this statement.

I hope you find this information beneficial to you in making your decision as to your action in regard to this.

With best regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

LEON S. GAY.

This matter of labeling is an important one, and unquestionably means a lot to every textile manufacturer in Vermont. I think no one objects to a label which can be backed up by a laboratory test, but to pass a law making certain requirements when there is no way of establishing definitely whether the requirements are or can be made seems to me to be placing a very substantial premium on chiseling and misrepresentation.

Is there any possibility of introducing a substitute bill, as suggested by Mr. Besse?

Respectfully yours,

RAY ADAMS.

BENNINGTON, VT., February 24, 1939.

HON. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
Senator from Vermont,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: We wrote you yesterday in reference to the textile labeling bill.

We could not express in a letter all the arguments against this bill. We enclose herewith copy of the American Wool and Cotton Reporter, dated February 23. This explains in detail what a manufacturer will be up against. The bunk that is being put forth by one or two manufacturers is most deceptive. We refer in particular to the Forstmann arguments. These people get enormous prices for their merchandise. The average workman could not possibly buy same. Other mills imitate the merchandise, and, of course, the consumer knows that he is not getting the high-priced merchandise that Forstmann makes. We do not know anything about it, but we think that a mill operated by such people as Jim Dewey, of Quechee, could not get by on such drastic legislation.

Very truly yours,

THE H. E. BRADFORD CO., INC.,
D. J. KEELER.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I wanted to refer to an entirely different matter than that the Senator is now discussing. Shall I wait, or would the Senator rather have me do so at this time?

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. WHITE. I am troubled as to the meaning of section 3 specifically. I desire to ask a question about the language in line 3, on page 4, "who shall receive from or through commerce." If I go to a store in the city of Washington and buy a fabric from a merchant here, have I received merchandise "from or through commerce" within the meaning of this section?

Mr. AUSTIN. I cannot answer that question. I do not think it is capable of being answered.

Mr. WHITE. The reason why I ask the question is that I find this language under the heading "Misbranded wool products":

SEC. 4. (a) A wool product shall be misbranded—

(1) If it is falsely or deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified.

(2) If a stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, is not on or affixed to the wool product and does not show—

(A) The percentage of the total fiber weight of the wool product, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight, of (1) virgin wool; (2) reclaimed wool; (3) each fiber other than wool if said percentage by weight of such fiber is 5 percent or more.

And so forth. Then further it shall be misbranded if it does not contain—

(C) The name of the manufacturer of the wool product and/or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product.

(3) In the case of a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool contents thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying the presence of wool, used in connection with such wool product.

(4) In the case of a wool product represented as virgin wool, if the percentages by weight of the virgin wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures.

And so forth. What I want to know specifically is, if I buy from a merchant a fabric or a suit of clothes, is there an obligation on me to ascertain and to know whether or not all that information is stamped, tagged, or labeled on the article which I am buying; and if it is not so marked, and I buy the fabric in the absence of all that information, do I come within the terms of the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. I think if one assumes that the distinguished Senator bought it as an ultimate consumer, he would not come within the terms of the bill.

Mr. WHITE. Let us assume, then, that I am a tailor, and buy the fabric for the purpose of further fabrication. Must I look over every piece to see that all that information is on the fabric?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my answer would be "No." I interpret the phrase which relates to intrastate business to refer to retailers, although it does not so state.

Mr. WHITE. I was about to say it does not so state. Apparently it applies to anyone "who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver to any other person, any such wool product."

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It will be noted that the provision refers to a person who receives the goods through commerce and then offers them for sale. I will say to the Senator that the language is the same as that used in the Pure Food and Drugs Act. The language of that act has been adopted in the bill. I may add, of course, that any violation of section 3 under the terms of the criminal clause must be a willful violation, which implies an intent to violate the act.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, referring to the same clause on page 4, lines 2 to 5, I inform the distinguished Senator from Maine that the House of Representatives excluded that language from the text of House bill 944, which was reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House on June 14, and which is today on the Union Calendar of the House. Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, the author of the bill, has asked the Rules Committee for a rule so that it may be considered by the House.

There are certain other differences between the House bill and the Senate bill which point to some of the most objectionable things in the Senate bill. For example, the classification of virgin wool or the label "virgin wool" on page 2 of Senate bill 162 does not appear in the House bill at all. In the House bill the language of subsection (d) of section 2 of the Senate bill with respect to reclaimed wool is stricken out, and there is a substitute for it in two subsections, the first of which reads as follows:

(c) The term "reprocessed wool" means the resulting fiber when wool has been woven or felted into a wool product which, without ever having been utilized in any way by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

The second subsection to which I refer reads as follows:

(d) The term "reused wool" means the resulting fiber when wool or reprocessed wool has been spun, woven, knitted, or felted into a wool product which, after having been used in anyway by the ultimate consumer, subsequently has been made into a fibrous state.

It will be observed at once that there is a distinction between the two. In the one case we have a wool which has never been on the back of a human being. It may have been left unsold on the merchant's shelves, or it may have been a clipping from a tailor's establishment. Then there is the classification of reused wool, which is really second-hand wool. It is wool which has been used by the ultimate consumer. These classifications are not subject to the objection which I have endeavored to make against the classification of virgin wool, for the reason that there are many factors which afford a market to the vendors of each of these classifications of wool, and a great group of consumers afford the market for the finished product. They are the persons with whom we are mostly concerned.

I have no fear that those who can afford luxury products will be unable to obtain them. A man can wear but one collar at a time, whether he be as rich as Croesus or as poor as a beggar; but he can obtain the style and quality of collar he wishes because he has the price to pay, no matter how small an opportunity there may be for him to obtain it. However, a man like myself, who must wear less expensive clothing, would find himself in a very bad way if there were a monopoly on very finely fabricated collars, and the price had been raised by reason of the United States placing on the collars a label which no competitor of the manufacturer could possibly live up to.

Mr. President, I wish to conclude shortly. I know I have inadequately discussed this matter, but I have undertaken to show reasons why I think the great agricultural organizations are being misled through the propaganda of those who would profit from the monopoly sought to be created by the bill. I think their hopes would prove to be delusions. I think they would have less of a market for their virgin wool, and therefore they would have to take a lower price for it than before; and they would run into competition with synthetic substitutes for wool, from which competition they do not now suffer.

Although this type of control over agriculture is indirect, its effect is complete. The production of substitutes for wool would be stimulated. The agricultural organizations would rue the day they ever permitted their Government to obtain such a strangle-hold upon their business as Senate bill 162 would create. They do not seem to realize that, though the bill deals primarily with the manufacturer and the merchant, ultimately it would reach the man who herds the sheep. He is the man who would feel the repercussion. It would all come back on him. The effect would be lower prices, less demand, a narrowed market, and greater competition from substitutes.

There is another consideration from the public-welfare point of view, which causes me to oppose the bill, and that is the destruction of an essential raw material which it involves. It anathematizes the raw material which we call wool waste to such an extent that wool waste, as a secondary material for the manufacture of garments in this country, would pass out. It would not be available to the manufacturers, and therefore would not be available to the consuming public. The bill, by putting a premium on virgin wool, as it does, would discourage the use of reprocessed wool and reused wool, and through economic pressure, would absolutely force the exportation of our rags to foreign countries.

The calamity of that situation can be evidenced by the following question: How in the world could the United States clothe its Army in time of war without this essential secondary raw material? Without a supply of rags and reused and reprocessed wool we could not, without the most extraordinary expense, clothe the United States Army.

Mr. President, one good reason is sufficient; and I have probably branched out more than I need to have done. The one good reason in this case happens to be that the bill would create an injurious monopoly and, therefore, would be evil in its consequences. For that reason, if for no other, it should not be passed.

EARMARKING OF TAXES FOR OLD-AGE PENSIONS

During the delivery of Mr. AUSTIN'S speech,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the calendar is Senate Joint Resolution 145, introduced by the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS] and myself, which I hope will come up for consideration in the near future.

Several Senators have asked me about the constitutional need for an amendment giving Congress the power to levy taxes for old-age assistance.

Of course, the question of constitutional need is of the utmost importance and is one reason for this proposed legislation. There are two other needs for it. One is to enable the testing of public opinion on the question, and the other is having the power of Congress to levy taxes for old-age assistance written into our fundamental law.

In order to elucidate the question of constitutional need and to show that there is a grave doubt in the minds of well-qualified persons as to the power of Congress to levy taxes for a specific purpose, I ask that a memorandum which I have prepared be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

There still exists considerable doubt as to the validity of earmarking taxes for a specific purpose. Many informed people believe that such a tax (e. g., for old-age assistance) is not a "true" tax but rather an "exaction" or "appropriation of money from one group for the benefit of another," which is in violation of the due-process clause. They maintain that such taxes are not levies "for the support of the Government," but are being used to pay pensions to specific individuals.

This constitutional amendment (S. J. Res. 145) has been introduced in order to resolve this grave doubt.

Evidence that this important constitutional problem remains unsettled:

(1) There is no judicial decision which meets the particular problem embodied in Senate Joint Resolution 145 foursquare.

(2) Professor Corwin, in his book The Twilight of the Supreme Court, page 176, wrote:

"So long as Congress has the prudence to lay and collect taxes without specifying the purposes to which the proceeds from any particular tax are to be devoted, it may continue to appropriate the national funds without judicial let or hindrance."

(3) The Social Security Act of 1935: Experts who assisted in the drafting of this measure clearly indicate that the separation of the benefit provisons in title II from the taxing provisions was dictated by constitutional considerations.

(a) Prof. J. Douglas Brown in his article, The Development of the Old-Age Insurance Provisions of the Social Security Act in Law and Contemporary Problems, volume 3, page 193, wrote:

"The development of a formula for Federal action within constitutional limitations was early recognized as the key to a sound solution to the problem. The proposal to separate the contribution and benefit features of one legislation into two separate measures based on the taxing and appropriation powers of the Federal Government, was advanced early in the deliberations of the staff and the technical board. The absence of any need for elaborate regulatory material in either measure gave basis for the hope that the courts would not question the exercise of these broad Federal powers if clear-cut separation were possible. The staff was bolstered in this hope by the approval of the plan by a number of outstanding students of constitutional law.

"The drafting of two distinctly separate titles covering the tax and benefit features of the proposed system proved a difficult task. Since the contributions, now taxes, were necessarily covered into the general funds of the Treasury, some formula had to be developed for the reapportionment of an equivalent amount from general funds to an old-age reserve account. * * *

"As a result of this necessary adjustment to the exigencies of constitutional law, the character of the scheme was fundamentally different from that first considered by the staff."

(b) Prof. Paul H. Douglas in his book, Social Security in the United States, wrote regarding compulsory old-age insurance (p. 157):

"The taxes or contributions required to provide the necessary funds are levied under title VIII of the bill, while the scale of monthly annuities and benefits is specified under title II. Here, as in the unemployment insurance features of the bill, the revenue portions are separated from the sections which appropriate money because of the belief that this will enable the act better to run the constitutional gamut."

Page 320: "Perhaps the weakest section of the Security Act from a constitutional standpoint is that which provides for mandatory old-age insurance. While title VIII, which levies taxes upon employers and employees, is formally distinct from title II, which prescribes the scale of benefits to those over the age of 65 and to the heirs of the deceased, there is in fact a close and immediate connection between them. The individual benefits to be paid are computed upon the basis of the contributions or taxes levied and upon nothing else. It will undoubtedly be charged that these titles of the act in effect, therefore, prescribe the specific purpose for which the tax is levied, and that they are consequently unconstitutional since they launch the Federal Government into the performance of functions not specifically delegated to it by the Constitution. There is certainly very real danger that such may indeed be the fate of this feature of the act."

(4) The 1939 amendments to the Social Security Act: That there is still doubt as to the constitutionality of earmarking tax proceeds for a special purpose is indicated by this latest old-age measure. The device of using funds in the General Treasury rather than unquestionably earmarked tax receipts is continued here.

(5) U. S. v. Butler (56 Sup. Ct. 312, 1936): As said by Mr. Justice Roberts in delivering the opinion of the Court in the A. A. A. decision with respect to processing taxes levied upon processors, the proceeds of which were to be paid to certain producers of agricultural products:

"A tax, in the general understanding of the term, and as used in the Constitution, signifies an exaction for the Government. The word has never been thought to connote the expropriation of money for one group for the benefit of another."

(6) Mr. Justice Cardozo, speaking for the Court, in declaring the Social Security Act to be constitutional, neatly avoided the important question of earmarking. This is sufficient reason to cast doubt on the whole question. He said:

"Third. Title II being valid, there is no occasion to inquire whether title VIII would have to fall if title II were set at naught.

"The argument for the respondent is that the provisions of the two titles dovetail in such a way as to justify the conclusion that Congress would have been unwilling to pass one without the other. The argument for petitioners is that the tax moneys are not earmarked, and that Congress is at liberty to spend them as it will. The usual separability clause is embodied in the act, section 1103.

"We find it unnecessary to make a choice between the arguments, and so leave the question open."

(7) Robert Jackson, then Assistant Attorney General, arguing the Government's case in Seward Machine Co. v. Davis (301 U. S. 548), which involved the unemployment compensation features of the Social Security Act (titles IX and III), gave careful consideration to this problem. In his oral argument, he said:

"The relation of this tax to the appropriation is entirely unestablished, either by the act itself or by the facts in the case. In the first place, the appropriation under section 301, if it be construed as an appropriation, began before the tax was payable. The appropriation is not measured by the proceeds of the tax. The tax is not earmarked for this purpose. There is no equivalence between the amounts set aside by this section and the proceeds of the tax."

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, in reference to the joint resolution to which reference has been made by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], I will say that 2 days ago I gave notice that I would today ask unanimous consent to discuss that joint resolution. The joint resolution was favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and is now on the Senate Calendar. This morning we find that the so-called truth-in-fabrics bill is the unfinished business, and that it has the right-of-way for today. So I give notice that tomorrow I shall undertake to have Senate Joint Resolution 145 considered by the Senate.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the first amendment reported by the committee, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 3, it is proposed to strike out "shall" and insert "may."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Reed
Andrews	Ellender	La Follette	Russell
Ashurst	Frazier	Lee	Schwartz
Austin	George	Lodge	Schwellenbach
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Sheppard
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Shipstead
Barbour	Gillette	Lundeen	Slattery
Barkley	Glass	McCarran	Stewart

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LOANS FOR SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I understand that the Banking and Currency Committee are soon to report a bill embodying Mr. Roosevelt's recommendations for a new spending-lending policy. This spending-lending policy, which has been in full operation by the New Deal for over 6 years, has taken us a long way along the road to national bankruptcy. Of course, a great, rich country like the United States may go in debt to meet an emergency; but the theory adopted by the New Deal administration of creating deficits, borrowing money, and spending money to create prosperity is based on an unsound philosophy of government.

In an address at Pittsburgh on October 19, 1932, Mr. Roosevelt, as a candidate for the Presidency, said:

> We find that the expenditure for the business of Government in 1927 was $2,187,000,000 and in 1931 $3,168,000,000.
> That, my friends, represents an increase of actual administrative spending in those 4 years of approximately $1,000,000,000, or, roughly, 50 percent; and that, I may add, is the most reckless and extravagant pace I have been able to discover in the statistical record of any peacetime government anywhere any time.

That was Candidate Roosevelt speaking.

By comparison the record shows that the expenditures under President Roosevelt in 1935 were $7,375,825,000, and in 1939 they were $9,268,338,000—quite a jump from the recklessness and extravagance of 1931 so bitterly criticized.

At the present time the Government is spending at the rate of $23,000 per minute and going in the hole at the rate of about $11,000 per minute. The fallacy of this program is perhaps best and most simply illustrated by the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], when he recently said, in effect, that a government can no more spend its way to prosperity than a drunken man can drink himself sober.

We are now spending at the rate of approximately $10,000,000,000 per year. The national debt now exceeds $40,000,000,000. In addition we have a contingent liability of several billion dollars more.

In a recent debate the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] said:

> Our net deficit from 1931 to 1938 actually totaled more than all the deficits of all the other major nations of all of the world combined for the same period.

That is a most significant statement. It is a striking coincidence that on March 10, 1933, the President stated that—

> Most liberal governments are wrecked on the rocks of loose fiscal policy. We must avoid this danger.

The annual interest charge on our national debt alone is over $1,000,000,000 per year. If we were to initiate a policy of paying the current interest and decreasing the debt and principal $500,000,000 per year, it would take one-fourth of our entire national income for nearly a century, or approximately 90 years.

The administration today is conducting this Government on a financial policy that is designed to rob the unborn. That is a terrific indictment. Now the President comes forth with a new type of spending-lending plan. There is really nothing new about it. We have already tried out these lending-spending plans. We have set up governmental corporations and spending agencies before. These now have liabilities of $13,145,000,000. As the President proposed this plan, it called for spending $3,860,000,000, a sort of self-liquidating loan program, so-called. It has now been reduced to between a two- and three-billion-dollar project. It is not a true self-liquidating plan but just another pump-priming spending project. Certainly on our past record we have not so far liquidated any of our spending-lending agencies. This new scheme is being started for the purpose of laying a foundation to win the 1940 election. It is just another Roosevelt plan to endeavor to buy prosperity after successive failures of the same extravagant methods. It is a subterfuge to avoid raising the present $45,000,000,000 debt limitation. These loans would not appear as liabilities on the Treasury's books. They would be camouflaged, but they would be obligations of the American people just the same. The program is perhaps best called simply a spending-by-deception program.

This is a far cry from the speeches and the pledges of Candidate Roosevelt. What the country needs is private spending, not Government spending. It needs policies that will encourage spending billions of dollars of private funds in productive enterprise. The proposed new program will accomplish little of permanent value and will bring us one step nearer a socialized state.

The New York Times recently referred editorially to the President's newest lending-spending plan as sheer magic:

> Here is a proposal to buy nearly $4,000,000,000 worth of new homes, roads, bridges, power lines, railroad cars, and other things, yet it is said the plan will involve no out-of-pocket cost to the Government, that it will have no effect on the Federal Budget, that it will add nothing to the national debt, a miracle indeed.

In other words, in the arithmetic of the New Deal, two and two no longer make four.

The New Deal administration has adopted a peculiar philosophy, an interesting state of mind, for its representatives now argue convincingly that every time we go backward financially we progress forward socially and economically. Even a child knows at a glance the fallacy of this philosophy.

Mr. President, I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a quotation from an editorial published in the Kansas City Times of June 23, 1939; a brief quotation from a Boston Herald editorial of June 23, 1939; a quotation from an editorial in the Christian Science Monitor of June 23, 1939; and a quotation from an editorial in the Providence Journal of June 23, 1939.

There being no objection, the extracts from the editorials referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> Kansas City Times: "There are, of course, some sound projects in those listed. But only an irrepressible optimist can see anything but heavy losses in most of them. In the long run, the taxpayers will be called on to foot the bills, and the national debt will have shot up with the pump still unprimed" (June 23, 1939).
> The Boston Herald: "After 6 years of emergency spending unequaled for magnitude and variety by this or any other nation, President Roosevelt again urges salvation by extravagance—and this time as 'a permanent policy of the Government.' * * * The Nation could have survived the packing of the Supreme Court, even though it would be a cheapened and a weakened Nation. But another huge program of spending, accelerating the feverish pace which the President has set already, would bring on the gravest crisis since the Civil War. We would emerge from our agony, of course, just as we came out of 4 years of devastating war, but not with the principles by which we have guided ourselves for a century and a half" (June 23, 1939).
> Christian Science Monitor: "The alternative to such a program as the President suggests would be to recognize some of the other side of the picture that has been presented to the Temporary National Economic Committee along with the arguments for a divided Budget and continued spending, namely, the evidence that relaxing of some of the restrictive conditions on investment would facilitate and bring about a natural flow of the capital investment which the administration is trying to induce or compel by Government banking. May it not be that there is more need now for this kind of investing than for huge public works programs which tend to make Uncle Sam permanently the investment banker for the country?" (June 23, 1939).
> Providence Journal: "The public should understand, first of all, that the plan is no more than a dodge to take Mr. Roosevelt's spending outside of the Budget and to avoid the $45,000,000,000 limitation which Congress has placed on the Treasury's outstanding debt. * * * But if there is danger to the Government's credit, there also is grave danger to American business and industry, for there is no doubt that the scheme is the first step in a well-conceived plan to rule the country's economy. The complete socialization of industry is one of its great possibilities" (June 23, 1939).

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I know that to many of the Senators who occupy seats in this body this is a new avenue in their minds for the promotion of prosperity. To my mind it seems a very backward step. I can appreciate that there are some in the present administration, there are some Members of this body who by advocating certain schemes are fast making of this country a socialized state. They are in the same boat with some of the extreme left-wing radicals in this country.

I for one do not want to be numbered among them, and I believe that one of the things which should be done at the present time is to call the attention of the public to this new scheme, this deceptive spending scheme.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, while we are considering a "truth" bill, I think we might just as well have a little truth in politics.

Numerous attempts have been made by Republican leaders to circulate throughout the country, after it has been presented in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, propaganda detrimental to the New Deal economic program. The figures in most instances have been taken from private publications.

After 12 long years of Federal power, the Republican Party went out of power in 1933 leaving American agriculture on the verge of bankruptcy and ruin.

During this 12-year period—from 1921 to 1933—the Republican Party failed to enact a single measure designed to protect the farming population from the ruination which impended. The warnings of farm leaders that drastic action was needed were scoffed at and ignored.

When the Roosevelt administration came into power in 1933 immediate steps were taken to rescue agriculture. Figures tell the story.

By 1932 gross farm income had fallen 57 percent from its earliest peak, to only $5,562,000,000, the lowest on record. Farm prices as a whole had fallen by a tremendous percentage.

Between 1932 and 1938, with the Roosevelt administration in office, gross farm income rose 66 percent, a sheer increase of $3,658,000,000. Farm prices jumped 86 percent.

Hoping to cover up their own failure to help agriculture, the Republicans are now circulating erroneous price figures and doctored statistics to confuse the voting public. They are trying to show that farmers were better off under Mr. Hoover than they are under the Roosevelt administration. But once again figures tell the story.

The following tables give comparative prices of farm products during the last 3 years of the Hoover administration and the first 5 years of Roosevelt, and are taken from official tabulations:

Commodity	Unit	1933–37 average	1930–32 average
Wheat	Bushel	$0.883	$0.481
Corn	Bushel	.712	.411
Oats	Bushel	.386	.230
Barley	Bushel	.565	.318
Rye	Bushel	.647	.355
Cotton	Pound	.109	.0921

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator says Republicans have been circulating these figures. Who does he mean are circulating these figures? Republicans is a pretty indefinite term.

Mr. MINTON. I have in mind one Republican Representative from my State, who inserted in the RECORD some figures which had been tabulated by a Republican editor up in the dark corner of Indiana, a man who ran for the United States Senate last year and was defeated. That is one of them I have in mind. I could refer the Senator to others.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Indiana is mistaken in saying that nothing was done under the Republican administration about the farm problem. It happened that this morning I held a hearing in the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on a bill introduced in an effort to set aside a fraud perpetrated upon the farmers of the States of Minnesota, North and South Dakota, and Montana during the Republican administration. It was described by one of the witnesses who appeared before the committee as constituting, in his opinion, the most reprehensible treatment any citizen of the United States had ever received, so far as his study of American history disclosed. It was to be expected, since the Republican Party fostered and protected stock frauds in Wall Street and in all parts of the country, that they would participate in a little stock fraud of their own.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. I wanted to ask the Senator from Washington whether by stock frauds he meant President Roosevelt's attempt to foist Argentine beef on the American Navy at the expense of American stockmen.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I was not referring to that kind of stock; I was referring to the kind of stock which was so prevalent during the Hoover and Coolidge administrations, the kind of stock that was sold to the widows and orphans in this country at anywhere from 10 to 100 times its value, the kind of stock that had behind it only a lot of wind and air and water. That is the kind of stock that was so popular under the Republican administration.

Mr. BRIDGES. It had the same qualities behind it that are behind the New Deal, in other words.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If the way in which the people of this country have been treated during the last 5½ years is to be compared with the kind of treatment they received under the Republican administration, I will be glad at any time to debate with the Senator from New Hampshire about the respective treatment given the American people.

Recurring to the agricultural question, it will be remembered that in 1928, in addition to raising a lot of religious and other issues, Mr. Hoover told the American farmers that he was going to solve the farm problem for them, that he was going to call the Congress into special session. Congress was called into special session, and the most disastrous thing that has ever happened to agriculture resulted from the calling of that special session, which the farmers understood was to deal only with agricultural products, when the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill was passed. While the tariff duties on agricultural products were raised a little, the duties on everything else was increased 10 or 12 times as much as the benefits received by the farmers, with the result that the farmers were compelled to pay much more for the things they bought than they received in protection under the nebulous provisions of the agricultural sections of the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill.

In addition to that, the Republicans established the Federal Farm Board, and Mr. Hoover recommended that to the farmers of the country. He had sent out to the wheat area a former Governor of the State of Nebraska—and I am merely citing the testimony that was given before our committee this morning—who visited the States of North and South Dakota and Montana and Minnesota, and told the people of that region that if they really wanted to get the great and beneficent benefits of the Hoover farm program, the thing they should do would be to buy stock in the Northwest Grain Association. The Northwest Grain Association was established in the year 1930, and the stock was sold by taking notes of small-business men and farmers in the Northwest section. The notes were very similar to notes received by other stock promoters in the country. They were installment notes, payable a certain amount down, and a certain amount every month and every year.

In 1931 the same Hoover Farm Board, acting through the agency of the organization which they had set up, the Northwest Grain Association, took away from that association, which they controlled, all the power the association had to be of assistance through cooperative methods, and having practically forced the farmers to buy stock in the association, they then wrecked the association, and made it futile and impotent, and made it impossible for the association further to function. Then they proceeded to attempt to collect on the notes which they held as a result of inducing these poor farmers to buy them on the understanding that that was the only way in which they could get assistance from the Federal Government.

I submit, therefore, that the Senator from Indiana is entirely mistaken when he says that the Republican Party did not pay any attention to agriculture. They used the same sort of methods with the farmers they used with all other kinds of investors; they attempted to milk them out of their savings.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if he is very proud of the New Deal's administration over the last 6 years, insofar as agriculture is concerned, the very consistent record they have had, one policy persevering down through the years without any exception? Regimentation, controlled production, loss of foreign markets, and the like.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me answer the question in the affirmative. When I think of the methods which the Republican Party used, starting out in 1921, when the farmers received the greatest blow they have ever received, when, under the Harding administration, we were told we were to go back to normalcy, and farm prices were reduced, as they were, under the policy of deflation which went into effect at that time, which has been so ably depicted and explained to us on several occasions by the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]—when I think back to the promises made by Mr. Hoover in 1928, the complete breach of faith to the farmers by the Republican Party after making those promises and securing the support of the farmers upon the basis of the promises—and when I then think of everything that has been done by the present administration from 1933 on, by way of comparison it is a shining light of beauty; it is something of which we may be profoundly and everlastingly proud.

The Senator speaks of changes in policy. If the Senator knew anything about this subject—as he does not; he does not knew any more about agriculture than he does about anything else—if he knew anything about it, he would appreciate the fact that the action of the Supreme Court of the United States in declaring the Triple A Act unconstitutional in 1936 had some affect upon it. If he knew anything about the subject, if he will study what happened during that period of time, which I know he will not do, because he does not give any time or study to any subject—but if he were to give a little time or study to it, he would know what occurred on the floor of the Senate during the special session of 1937, when an effort was made during that period to bring about a solution of the farm problems, and the Senators on the other side of the Chamber stood here day after day during the period of that special session doing everything they could to impede progress upon that piece of legislation in order to make it possible that the farm bill would not be effective in 1938 and in order to make it possible that in the fall of 1938 the Republicans could go out and campaign among the agricultural districts and misrepresent the facts, as they did, telling the farmers that nothing had been done for them, telling the farmers that the Democratic Party did not have any interest in them, and succeeding in electing a few Members to the House of Representatives and to the Senate upon the basis of such misrepresentation.

Before the Senator starts to talk about agriculture I suggest that he go back and read about the dark days of the 1920's. The depression did not start for the farmer in October 1929. The depression started for the farmer, I believe, in August or September 1921.

Mr. BRIDGES. It is fortunate enough for the farmers of the country that they do not have to depend on the guidance or philosophy of the Senator from Washington, who probably never earned a day's living working on the farm.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Senator just happens to be as much mistaken about that as he is about anything else. I have worked on a farm, having performed all the menial tasks necessary to be done on the farm. The Senator is simply as accurate in discussing my life as he is in anything else he discusses.

Mr. BRIDGES. I should like to hear more about the actual experience which the Senator has had on a farm, which was some years ago apparently.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not know that I care to——

Mr. BRIDGES. Most of his philosophy is now based on an anti or hatred phobia developed against the Hoover administration.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I do not have any hatred toward them. If the Republicans had not made such a colossal flop from 1921 to 1932, we probably would not have gotten in office in 1933. There is no hatred in my heart toward that administration.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator evidently mistakes when he says that the farmers agree with him, because last fall all over in the agricultural districts the men who had preached the same doctrine as the Senator from Washington now preaches were kicked out of office, and Republicans came into power, elected by the farmers of the country. What has the Senator to say to that?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I have no quarrel about that. The Republicans through the medium of the press, which they so amply controlled, were able to misrepresent the facts about agriculture to the farmers of the country last fall, and unfortunately there was a shortage of memory on the part of farmers in many sections of the country. They did not remember the treatment they received during the 12 years of the Harding, the Coolidge, and the Hoover administrations, and did adopt the false philosophy that maybe the Republicans would do something for them. But, while we are on the subject of farm philosophy, what is the Senator's philosophy about helping the farmers? Perhaps his philosophy in that respect is that of balancing the Budget, doing away with the T. V. A., attacking the 2-percent clubs—or just what does the Senator propose to do for the farmer?

Mr. BRIDGES. I am going to outline that some day.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. We will all be very much interested, because if the Senator should present a constructive program for the farmer it would be the first one that has left his lips since he came to the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will tell the Senator something. I have had to spend quite a good deal of my time, as have others of my associates on this side of the aisle, together with some of the Senators on the other side of the aisle, in endeavoring to do something, even in a very humble way, to stop the unsound practices and the unsound philosophies of the administration, that they were endeavoring to enact into law.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Well, it may be that some of the things done have been unsound. I am not quite willing to admit that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I did not think the Senator would admit anything done by the New Deal was unsound.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly there is no lack of sound coming out of the Senator from New Hampshire. [Laughter in the galleries.] We have heard a lot of sound coming from him in the last few years.

Mr. BRIDGES. And we have heard some sound coming from the Senator from Washington, but I am surprised that the Senator should be so unfaithful to the Great White Chief in the White House as to admit that any philosophy or practice of the New Deal was wrong.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I said I was not willing to go so far as to admit that.

I think it is a terrible thing that the Senator from New Hampshire has a farm program, a program that will solve all the farm problems in this country, and that he does not let the country know what it is. I am sure the people from one end of the country to the other are waiting for the words of wisdom to fall from the Senator's lips, but, Mr. President, he is keeping it a secret. I do not think the farmers of this country are going to be happy, and I doubt whether they will be able to sleep very much, knowing now that their great leader, the Senator from New Hampshire, has a farm program and that he will not tell them what it is. Is the Senator waiting until after the Republican convention next year, when the Senator receives the Republican nomination for the Presidency, before he reveals the program he has? I think that is really comparable with what Senators on the Republican side did in the fall of 1937—delaying action on the matter. Why can we not have this program now and put it into effect?

Mr. BRIDGES. I expect to wait until I come to the Senator's home State of Washington this fall and have a chance to get a little of the background and backlog from his own farm experience to weave in with my own in order that I may present a sound program. If my program has any defects, I am sure adding the Senator's experiences on the farm will correct them.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does that mean that the Senator does not have one now and that he will have to wait until he comes out to the State of Washington before he will have one?

Mr. BRIDGES. No. I have one, but I want to know the Senator's experience first.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Does the Senator mean that he would try it out on my constituents first to see if it is acceptable there?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have had a good deal of correspondence with the people from the State of Washington and never yet have I talked with a citizen from the State of Washington or received a communication from one who considers the Senator from Washington to be a farm expert. Apparently he is a self-appointed expert like most of the New Dealers.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The trouble with the Senator from New Hampshire is that the people who come in and visit the Senator in his office are in a great minority in the State of Washington. They represent only 5 percent. Let him talk to some of the ordinary common people of the State of Washington. Do not talk to some of the rich people, such as customarily visit Washington. Go out there and talk to some of the common people and the Senator will find out how I stand.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Probably the Senator from New Hampshire proceeds on the theory that it is better to surprise the people than to disappoint them, and knowing that they would be disappointed if they heard that he had no farm program he would rather surprise them when they found out what it was.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I think the farmers will all be surprised if they find that the Senator from New Hampshire has a farm program; but, also, if the program were to be put into effect, it would probably disappoint the farmers of the country.

Mr. BRIDGES. Probably no one would be more surprised than the senior Senator from Kentucky, who stood on the floor and congratulated me on the speech I was to make in his State, and extending good wishes to the two people he said would attend the Young Republican State Convention in Ashland, Ky., and hoping that they would enjoy my speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand both of them did.

Mr. BRIDGES. They both did, and about 600 more who were in attendance at the meeting. Let me tell the Senator they were enthusiastic. They were full of life. And the chief ambition, as nearly as I can make out of those young people, is to solidify the Republican Party down there, build it up so that when the Senator from Kentucky runs for office again he may be retired to private life.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are they going to solidify it around the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BRIDGES. No; they are going to solidify it around some outstanding Republican in the Senator's home State of Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator will discover him, I will almost be willing to wish him well.

Mr. MINTON. I think the Senator from New Hampshire should not spread this news too widely, because if the Young Democrats of Kentucky were to become wildly enthusiastic about the Senator from New Hampshire he might have to look out.

Mr. BRIDGES. That would indicate that they were wilder than we expected.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, there has been some discussion today of the importation of wool rags into this country, particularly in view of the reduction in the tariff duty on wool rags on January 1 of this year. The figures compiled by the Department of Commerce show for the first 4 months, January, February, March, and April 1937 the imports amounted to 3,226,551 pounds; in the same period of 1938, 170,261 pounds; in the same period of 1939, 2,817,000 pounds.

In this connection I ask unanimous consent to insert in this place in the RECORD a table showing these imports from 1929 through 1938, as compiled by the Department of Commerce.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table is as follows:

TABLE I.—United States imports of wool rags[1]

	Imports for consumption
	Quantity (pounds)	Value
1929	10,668,467	$5,538,251
1930	10,433,396	2,852,456
1931	824,323	229,014
1932	741,657	158,013
1933	1,691,390	464,864
1934	968,341	413,528
1935	1,588,808	573,604
1936	6,015,508	1,984,563
1937	4,809,478	1,858,638
1938[2]	794,436	262,201

[1] Commerce and Navigation, Department of Commerce.
[2] Preliminary.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is obvious we cannot finish consideration of the bill today. I will submit a unanimous-consent request looking toward limitation of debate.

I ask unanimous consent that beginning tomorrow and during the further consideration of this measure, no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the bill, nor more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that beginning tomorrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the bill, nor more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not intend unnecessarily to delay the closing of the debate, but I think we should not make such an agreement tonight, and I shall object, with the view that tomorrow morning after the roll call, when there are present other Senators who, I know, are interested in the bill, I may confer with them, and then shall be pleased to have the distinguished leader of the majority raise the same question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

He also, from the same committee, reported adversely the following nominations:

Raymond A. Kennedy to be postmaster at Libertyville, Ill., in place of R. A. Kennedy; and John J. Welch to be postmaster at Deerfield, Ill., in place of J. J. Welch.

Mr. HUGHES, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Frederick V. Follmer, of Pennsylvania, to be United States attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably without reservation Executive J, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a regional radio convention for Central America, Panama, and the Canal Zone signed at the Regional Radio Conference for Central America, Panama, and the Canal Zone at Guatemala City on December 8, 1938, and submitted a report (Ex. Rept. No. 17).

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1939

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Dr. E. Howard Cadle, pastor of Cadle Tabernacle, Indianapolis, Ind., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we would pause a moment to look into Thy face and thank Thee for caring for us through the night. We would not know how to go through this day without placing our hand in Thy blessed hand.

We pray, our Heavenly Father, for the good relations of this hour. May there come to us a realization that Thou art still of the giving hand. We pray for everyone who is under the sound of our voice, and for this Congress. O God, may we so conduct our deliberations that we shall hear Thee say,

Well done, thou good and faithful servant.

O God, we pray for our Nation, the greatest in all the world. We have fought for it. We are loving it and praying for it this morning. We understand, dear Lord, that nothing can come that will harm us if a righteous people keep us in prayer. Guide and guard the homes of this Congress. Send Thy guardian angel to protect their homes and keep us under the shadow of the cross.

In the name of Him who loved us, even Christ, our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2635. An act to amend the Federal Crop Insurance Act.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6503. An act relating to the exchange of certain lands in the State of Oregon.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2170. An act to improve the efficiency of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

MAJOR OVERHAULS FOR CERTAIN NAVAL VESSELS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 6065) to authorize major overhauls for certain naval vessels, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

After line 11, insert:

"SEC. 2. The President is hereby authorized to acquire two motor vessels from the Maritime Commission and to convert them for use by the Navy at a total cost of such acquisition and conversion of not more than $2,500,000."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to authorize major overhauls for certain naval vessels, to authorize the acquisition of two motor vessels for the Navy, and for other purposes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendments?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the amendment just submitted to H. R. 6065 is the same as reported in H. R. 5142. The matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on Naval Affairs this morning, and I was authorized to ask the House to accept the Senate amendment. The purpose of the Senate amendment, which is the same as the bill to which I have just referred—H. R. 5142—is to permit the Navy to acquire from the Maritime Commission two ships at a cost of not to exceed $2,500,000, which ships now belong to the Grace Line and which the Maritime Commission will take in a lending contract that they have with the Grace Line with reference to financing some new building for the Grace Line. These ships will be used in the work in the far Pacific. They are the particular type of ship that the Navy would have to have or else it would be compelled to ask Congress to authorize the building of ships for that particular work.

It is unanimously agreed to by the committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ACQUISITION OF CERTAIN ADDITIONAL LAND FOR MILITARY PURPOSES

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5735) to authorize the acquisition of additional land for military purposes, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to acquire, in such order or priority as he may determine, title to additional land, or interest therein, or right pertaining thereto, to the extent of the approximate areas hereinafter set forth, for the establishment, enlargement, and essential improvement of the following military reservations, posts, and facilities:

"Fort Ethan Allen Artillery Range, Vt., 4,451 acres, more or less.

"Antiaircraft Firing Range, Mohave Desert, north of Barstow and Baker, Calif., 749,440 acres, more or less.

"Fort Bliss, Tex., 51,300 acres, more or less.

"Fort Devens, Mass., 6,448 acres, more or less.

"Fort Dix, N. J., 1,750 acres, more or less.

"Fort Knox, Ky., 51,342 acres, more or less.

"Leon Springs, Tex., 13,253 acres, more or less.

"Camp McCoy, Wis., 1,000 acres, more or less.

"Fort George G. Meade, Md., 10,000 acres, more or less.

"Pine Camp, N. Y., 1,670 acres, more or less.

"Seventh Corps Area Training Center, south central Iowa, 40,000 acres, more or less.

"Fort Meade, S. Dak., 7,680 acres, more or less.

"Fort Lewis, Wash., 2,830 acres, more or less.

"Maxwell Field, Ala., 100 acres, more or less.

"SEC. 2. In order to accomplish the purposes of this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, the sum of $5,000,000, approximately one-half of which is authorized to be appropriated in each of the fiscal years 1941 and 1942."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BASTILLE DAY PARADE, JULY 14, 1939, PARIS, FRANCE

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I present a privileged resolution (H. Res. 256) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 256

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to transmit to the House of Representatives immediately complete and detailed information whether, as announced in the public press, it is the purpose of the United States Navy to participate in the Bastille Day parade on July 14, 1939, in Paris, France; also, whether the Navy Department is advised that British troops and airplanes would participate in the celebration of Bastille Day, and the British Secretary of War would review the troops together with the British Chief of Air Force and commander in chief of the British Mediterranean Fleet.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk may read the letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 19, 1939.

The CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: House Resolution 256 requesting information from the Secretary of the Navy, was referred to the Navy Department by your committee with a request for views and comments relative to the measure.

It is the purpose of House Resolution 256 to direct the Secretary of the Navy to transmit to the House of Representatives information as to whether it is the purpose of the United States Navy to participate in the Bastille Day parade on July 14, 1939, in Paris, France, and whether the Navy Department is advised that British troops and airplanes would participate in the celebration of Bastille Day, and the British Secretary of War would review the troops together with the British Chief of Air Force and commander in chief of the British Mediterranean Fleet.

Article 360, Navy Regulations, 1920, provides as follows:

"Upon the occasion of the celebration of their national anniversaries by the authorities of ships of war of a friendly foreign nation in foreign or domestic ports, ships of the Navy present shall, on official intimation being received by the senior officer, 'full-dress' or 'dress' ship, with the foreign national ensign at the main, and fire such salutes as are fired by the foreign authorities or ships, not, however, to exceed 21 guns, unless the senior officer present deems it necessary to fire a larger number in order to participate properly in the celebration or solemnity, to show proper courtesy to the nation complimented, or to avoid giving offense. Under similar circumstances, ships of the Navy shall participate in the observance of national solemnities of foreign states. Upon all such occasions, efforts shall be made to accord, so far as possible, with the foreign authorities in the time and manner of conducting the ceremonies."

The regulation quoted above states a long-standing international custom followed by men-of-war. There are many holidays of nations. The details of participation are rarely the same even in the same port in successive years. Such details must necessarily be, and are, arranged locally—that is, by the commander of the visiting naval detachment in collaboration with the foreign authorities. Insofar as practicable and appropriate, the commander of a visiting man-of-war conforms with desire of the foreign authorities as regards the manner of participation in an anniversary, celebration, or solemnity.

Ordinarily, the participation by United States naval forces in the national anniversaries of friendly powers is arranged without the knowledge of the Navy Department. The Navy Department is not usually informed of such participation.

With particular reference to the parade on July 14, 1939, in Paris, France, the Navy Department was not consulted by the commander of our naval detachment in European waters regarding any proposed participation by United States naval forces in this celebration, and it perceives no reason why it should have been consulted in this instance.

The Navy Department has no further information concerning the subject matter of House Resolution 256.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES EDISON, Acting.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, the Navy Department has submitted to the Congress the information that is in its possession in response to House Resolution 256, and therefore I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and forty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 136]

Andrews	Dies	Kerr	Smith, Maine
Boren	Englebright	Magnuson	Smith, Ohio
Brooks	Evans	Marcantonio	Somers, N. Y.
Buckler, Minn.	Fay	Massingale	Sullivan
Buckley, N. Y.	Ferguson	Mouton	Sumners, Tex.
Byrne, N. Y.	Fernandez	Patman	Thomas, N. J.
Byron	Fitzpatrick	Peterson, Fla.	Wadsworth
Coffee, Nebr.	Gifford	Reed, N. Y.	White, Idaho
Connery	Hart	Risk	White, Ohio
Cooley	Hennings	Secrest
Cummings	Johnson, Lyndon	Simpson
Curley	Kelly	Smith, Ill.

On this roll call 383 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

VETERAN RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 30 minutes today after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, the legislative program for the day, and any other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a splendid editorial from Time magazine on neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein short resolutions adopted by the Townsend group at their annual convention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech I made last night on the Columbia network.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, in spite of Presidential pressure and ambassadorial propaganda, the Bloom neutrality bill will remain in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The issue will now go to the people to decide whether they want their sons to follow the arms traffic for blood money on to the battlefields of Europe.

Behind the entire fight waged in the Congress over the arms embargo and the Bloom neutrality bill was a distrust of President Roosevelt's international and interventionist views. Sixty-one Democrats in the House left the administration on the arms-embargo fight. The New York Times and Arthur Krock have stated that the President, by his own statements, was unneutral and has already taken sides.

There can be no compromise in Congress over giving President Roosevelt additional powers to intervene in the eternal quarrels and wars of Europe. If George Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, or Lincoln were President, it would not make much difference what kind of neutrality law was enacted.

The Congress and the American people are fearful that President Roosevelt, if given more power, would involve us in foreign entanglements and wars. They are opposed to having American soldiers police and quarantine the world and are determined to keep America out of foreign wars. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I think it is unfair for the gentleman from New York to state that the action desired by the President means the sending of our boys across the sea. That is just the thing the President wants to prevent. For weeks and months he has been pleading for peace in Europe and peace in the world. He is against war, he is against sending our boys across the sea. For the gentleman from New York or any other man to so misinterpret the President's attitude on neutrality is deliberately misleading and is based on neither truth nor fact.

I repeat, President Roosevelt is for peace and against war. [Applause.]

SEVENTY-TWO-YEAR CYCLES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in 1789 George Washington, the Father of his Country, was inaugurated. Seventy-two years later, in 1861, Abraham Lincoln, the savior of his country, was inaugurated. Seventy-two years later, in 1933, Franklin Roosevelt was inaugurated, the financial wrecker of his country.

With the return of the Republican Party to power, we may in the year 2005 see some such news item as this: "The President has dedicated June 30 as a day of rejoicing because the last of the debts contracted by a spendthrift administration 72 years ago were liquidated." [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the News Palladium pointing out the difference between the manner in which Frank Murphy settled strikes and the manner in which Governor Dickinson settles them.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with reference to the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

INVESTIGATION OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 258 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 258

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the House of Representatives be appointed by the Speaker of the House to take testimony, investigate, and report to the House as follows:

1. Whether the National Labor Relations Board has been fair and impartial in its conduct, in its decisions, in its interpretation of the law (particularly with respect to the definition of the term "interstate commerce"), and in its dealings between different labor organizations and its dealings between employer and employee;

2. What effect, if any, the said National Labor Relations Act has had upon increasing or decreasing disputes between employer and employee; upon increasing or decreasing employment and upon the general economic condition of the country;

3. What amendments, if any, are desirable to the National Labor Relations Act in order to more effectively carry out the intent of Congress, bring about better relations between labor unions and between employer and employee, and what changes, if any, are desirable in the personnel of those charged with the administration of said law;

4. Whether the National Labor Relations Board has by interpretation or regulation attempted to write into said act, intents and purposes not justified by the language of the act;

5. Whether or not Congress should by legislation further define and clarify the meaning of the term "interstate commerce" and whether or not further legislation is desirable on the subject of the relationship between employer and employee.

The said committee shall recommend to the Congress such changes as they deem desirable in said act or in the personnel of those administering said act and shall recommend such legislation as they may deem desirable.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to hold hearings and to sit and act anywhere within or without the District of Columbia whether the House is in session or has adjourned or is in recess; to acquire by subpena or otherwise the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths; to take testimony; to have printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable within the amount appropriated therefor. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by him. The provisions of sections 102 to 104, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes shall apply in case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpena or to testify when summoned under authority of this resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], and I now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is the resolution that has been pending for some time for the investigation of the National Labor Relations Board. As you all know, there has been tremendous pressure for a good many months for a resolution of this character. I introduced the resolution, because I was of the opinion there would not be all of this complaint and all of this pressure from the country unless something was wrong, and something that needed looking into. I know that there is very bitter opposition to the resolution from some quarters, but may I say to the House that there is nothing bitter in my mind about it. The matter should be looked into calmly, from a judicial standpoint, so that a careful, impartial investigation may be made. When that is done we ought to be able to bring to the House a report that will perhaps correct some of those things which are causing so much complaint.

Mr. Speaker, I voted against the creation of the National Labor Relations Board, and I did so on the ground it was unconstitutional. I think it was palpably unconstitutional at that time, but time has changed the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court has changed the Constitution. [Applause.] I am one of those who wants to adjust himself, whether I agree with the Supreme Court or not, and I want to live under the Constitution as construed by the Supreme Court. [Applause.] So I approach this subject without bitterness, without feeling toward anyone, but with a very definite conviction that a good work can be done for labor, for industry, and for the country if this matter is looked into in a calm and dispassionate way by Members of this House who may approach it from a little fresher standpoint than those who have dealt with it over the past 5 years, so that we might perhaps bring back to the House some suggestions and recommendations that will cure the evils, whatever the investigation may show them to be.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I yield at this time 5 minutes to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have been unable to be present during the past few weeks, as I would have liked very much to have had more time to explain to the House what the Labor Committee is doing and appeal to the justice of this great body in reference to the pending resolution. I have been ill, and this is the first day I have been able to attend. I know there is little that I can say which will prevent the opponents of the National Labor Relations law from doing their will, but I do want the Members of the House to stop and consider what they are doing to the Labor Committee of the House when they vote on this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to offer for the Labor Committee of the House of Representatives. I think it is one of the best committees in the House. [Applause.] May I say that the loyalty of this committee has never been challenged; neither has the ability of the committee to do the job that has been assigned to it to do. We have heard many complaints about the National Labor Relations Board. They may or may not be true. Before we complete our hearings we shall be in a better position to determine that question. What I want to say to the membership of the House today is that we are just as anxious to do the right thing as any one of you who are opposed to the Board. We feel we have been doing just that through an orderly hearing being held by the Committee on Labor. May I say for both sides of the House committee, Democrats and Republicans alike, that they have assumed their obligation and their duty as they see it, and they are trying to do the best kind of a job possible.

We started hearings on several bills that were pending before the committee, and I will be glad to have every Member examine these bills. We have given all of the time that we possibly could to the hearings. Since May 4, 1939, the hearings have been efficient and orderly. We have allowed anyone and everyone who had anything to say, either for or against the bills or the Board, to come before the committee. May I call your attention to the fact that, as a result of the hearings, you will find all of this testimony to date has been printed and is included in these volumes on this table before you, and in a short time we hope to have all of the testimony before the House.

Why, then, is it necessary for another committee of the House—a committee, if you please—to take unto itself the right to say when and how an investigation shall be had? Why is it necessary for this other committee to come in at this time, before the Labor Committee of the House has concluded its hearings, and tell you that it believes that only five men in this House are capable of bringing bills or suggestions to you as to what should be done with reference to the National Labor Relations law? Can it be possible that the membership of the House believes in that kind of legislation? How would those of you who are chairmen of committees feel if you had a proposition of this kind come up challenging the integrity of your committee? How would you feel if your powers were being usurped by another committee of the House?

Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], but certainly he is the last man in the world to pass on labor legislation. [Applause.] I have taken the trouble to investigate his labor record and I have yet to find a single labor bill for the benefit of the workers of the country that he has ever voted for. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, if the Members believe this kind of resolution should be acted upon, if they believe in taking from the power of a standing committee of the House, a committee that has been named to represent labor in this House, and placing it in the hands of five Members to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, well and good, but remember you are establishing a precedent which you may bitterly regret if this resolution is adopted. There is no reflection on the Speaker of the House. As a matter of fact, I feel rather sorry for him when he comes to name those five. Of course, I hope there will not be the necessity for his doing so. I certainly hope he will not have to name them. I trust that the fair, just, honest membership of this House will vote down this resolution and see to it that no committee of this House dares come before this great body with the statement, "We believe we have better knowledge of the matters that come before your committee than you have."

We have held our hearings. We are giving every consideration to the bills that have been introduced in this House and we intend to continue to proceed in order.

I say to you that when these hearings are concluded and when the committee goes into executive session to consider the bills that have been before the committee, having heard all the evidence, you can count upon your committee to be fair and just. If it is necessary to amend the law, your committee will certainly do just that. So I beg of you to vote down this resolution and allow the Committee on Labor to finish the job it has so well started to do. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as may be required to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question in regard to the proposed membership of five members. What is the understanding with regard to the representation of the minority? Will there be two members of the minority on this committee?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I know nothing about that. That is entirely within the province of the Speaker.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Would the gentleman be willing to amend the resolution to include such a provision?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I cannot yield for amendments. I am sure the Speaker will do the usual thing.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. We assume that it will probably be three and two.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE].

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, before coming to Congress I served for three terms as mayor of a thriving industrial city, and I say with a great deal of apology that during that time many strikes occurred, including the "little steel strike," when it became necessary to call upon the Governor of our great State for troops to assist in maintaining law and order.

It was during this time and shortly thereafter that I had the privilege of watching the National Labor Relations Board in action. It is on account of this experience that I rise in support of this resolution, and I wish to commend my colleague from Virginia for introducing it.

During these closing days of Congress it seems to me that we have a very important duty to perform in order to establish some faith and confidence in industry and return millions of men and women to private employment who through no fault of their own are today upon the relief rolls.

I have no fault to find with the fine lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], the chairwoman of the Committee on Labor, or with any member of that committee, but it seems to me that the committee has had ample time to present to this body an opportunity to offer certain amendments to the Wagner Act as well as to the Wage and Hour Act, and also any information necessary to show the true facts as they now exist in the National Labor Relations Board.

Therefore, it seems to me, whether the Committee on Labor reports this bill or not, that we would be extremely negligent as Members of this Seventy-sixth Congress if we were to adjourn this session without adhering to the wishes of the people and voting for this resolution.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SECCOMBE. I do not yield.

I am prepared, if this bill is passed, to present evidence to the investigating committee to show that this Board has been entirely unfair and partial in its conduct and in its dealings between different labor organizations and also between employer and employee, and I charge the National Labor Relations Board with increasing disputes between employer and employee, thereby causing decreased employment, which affects the general economic conditions of the country.

Any attempt to curb this investigation is to me an indication of weakness and guilt. I, for one, shall support it, and certainly no one would object to a complete, impartial investigation, and let us pass our opinion on a statement of facts. And to those who feel that the Labor Board has functioned efficiently, you owe it to yourselves and your constituents to vote for this resolution in order to vindicate the many charges that have been made throughout the length and breadth of this land. This is not a partisan matter. It is a question of justice to the American people and to the industries of our country. I regret that this investigation does not include the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee, as I am certain this committee's activities and partial attitude would warrant a complete investigation.

I therefore urge every Member to vote for House Resolution 258. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to use as he sees fit. Perhaps I shall be able to yield more time later.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, I agree, is not a partisan matter. It is a bipartisan matter. It is the product of the same bipartisan coalition of reactionaries that has ruled this House since the very inception of this session. It is the product of the same bipartisan coalition of reactionaries that has destroyed the welfare of the unemployed of this country. Now we have before us this resolution, which will destroy the magna carta of American labor which the Seventy-fourth Congress gave to the working people of this country.

Paint brushes have gone down in price. I am sure the committee will avail itself of this situation in paint brushes to do a smart smearing job against the workers of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH].

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this resolution because I believe it to be an idle act. Your Committee on Labor has been holding hearings constantly on the proposed amendments to the National Labor Relations Act for over 2 months. The testimony thus far adduced goes into every phase of the existing controversy. The hearings are available to the Members of the House and are there on the desk. Mr. Speaker, it is a reflection upon the integrity and sincerity of a hard-working and conscientious legislative committee. The resolution should be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, a vote against this resolution is not a vote against a careful, factual investigation of this whole matter of the working of this important act. Such an investigation, as has already been pointed out, is now being conducted by the Committee on Labor, which is where such an investigation belongs. To take this matter away from the Labor Committee is not only unprecedented but an affront to that body.

In its issue of July 8 the conservative business magazine Business Week had this to say:

> The regular hearings on the law constituted an investigation of the Board actually, and this special inquiry will plow over the same ground. It will, of course, play the spotlight more relentlessly for National Labor Relations Board dirt.

Fortune magazine on October 8, 1938, published an exhaustive article on this subject, in which it pointed out the fact that only 5 percent of all the cases brought before the Board have ever come to trial, because the rest of them have been either settled peaceably or dismissed, one or the other.

Talk about increasing strife! The plain matter of fact is that in the first year after the validation of the act by the Supreme Court, the number of strikes decreased by 40 percent, the number of workers involved in strikes decreased by 63 percent, and the number of man-days idle decreased by 68 percent. Furthermore, before the date of the validation of the act by the Supreme Court, there were as many strikes as there were cases brought before the Board. Today there are three times as many labor difficulties submitted to the National Labor Relations Board as develop into strikes. I think this is an indication of progress.

Furthermore, in recent weeks the Board has provided for petitions for elections by employers in cases where they are "caught between rival labor factions," and has indicated that it will follow the policy of calling for elections to determine the bargaining unit. These two matters have been the ones most complained of. Evidently there is no possible excuse for the expenditure of money on this proposed investigation except an attempt to strike in underhand fashion at collective bargaining in America. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I expect to vote against this resolution, not because I am opposed to investigating the Labor Board, because we have been doing that for 10 weeks in the Labor Committee, but because I think it is a waste of money and will be mere duplication of the work the Labor Committee has already done in considering the amendments to the Wagner Act which are pending.

Back in April, in a speech in my own district, I announced my support of certain amendments to the National Labor Relations Act. I am in no sense here to defend the actions of the Labor Board, because I have differed with them on numerous occasions, both as to their policies and as to their construction of the intention of Congress under the law, but we are already investigating the Labor Board in the Labor Committee. If this resolution provided for a continuance of that investigation I think it would be sound policy; but why throw away the efforts of your committee which has been conducting hearings for 10 weeks? Why destroy the value of this testimony and have a special committee make a new investigation with recommendations to Congress which will have to go to the Labor Committee, and the Labor Committee again in the next session will have to start all over?

I want to express my personal appreciation to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] for having changed the form of his resolution so that it does not infringe upon the jurisdiction of the Labor Committee to consider whatever recommendations might be made by a special committee. The original resolution would have taken our jurisdiction away from us, and I am glad he saw fit to change that.

I personally hope that the House will permit the Labor Committee to complete this job, and as far as I am personally concerned I am in favor of amending the Labor Act, abolishing the present Board and creating a new Board of five and making such other amendments as may appear to be necessary after the hearings are completed.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I think the introduction of this resolution is nothing more or less than a reflection upon the House Labor Committee, and I do not know exactly for what purpose it has been introduced.

I do not believe the purpose behind the introduction of this resolution is contained in the five-point program.

What does the resolution recommend? First, to investigate whether the National Labor Relations Board has been fair and impartial in its decisions and interpretations of the law, particularly with respect to the definition of the term "interstate commerce," and in its dealings between the labor organizations and between employer and employee.

Second, what effect, if any, the said National Labor Relations Board has had upon increasing or decreasing disputes between employer and employee.

Third, what amendments, if any, are desirable to the National Labor Relations Act in order to more effectively carry out the intent of Congress and bring about better relations between labor unions and between employers and employees.

Fourth, whether the National Labor Relations Board has by interpretation or regulation attempted to write into said act intents and purposes not justified by the language of the act.

Fifth, whether or not Congress should by legislation further define and clarify the meaning of the term "interstate commerce."

This is exactly what the Labor Committee of the House and Senate have been holding their investigation upon for the past several months, the House committee for 10 weeks and the Senate committee for probably 2 months or more.

As I have said, the purpose and intent behind the introduction of this resolution is not to investigate the five points mentioned, but is for the purpose of embarrassing the National Labor Relations Board and interfere with its administration of the law, as well as to embarrass the Roosevelt administration and eventually to defeat the purpose of the law. The resolution should be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the resolution of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, calling for an investigation of the National Labor Relations Board.

During the past 2 years I have protested long, and sometimes loudly, to the Members of this body over what I considered abuses in the administration of the National Labor Relations Act. I have pointed out incidents of the ruthless abandon with which the Labor Board in its actions and decisions has distorted the evidence so as to make its decisions seem logical.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have always maintained that these tactics are a matter of policy with the Labor Board, despite all precedent and basic law to the contrary not withstanding. The testimony of the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, Mr. J. Warren Madden, before the House Labor Committee, proves this.

One of the cases I referred to the committee for consideration was that of the Douglas Aircraft Co. The plant was seized by a small group of workers. The leaders threatened to destroy the experimental bomber being built for the Army. They were forced to leave the plant on the threat of the authorities of the city and county, as can be learned from the testimony of the mayor of the city. I told the committee that several of the strikers had been convicted by a jury in Los Angeles County of felonies in connection with this strike.

Mr. Madden in his statement to the committee said, concerning this:

> None of the men ordered rehired had been convicted of felonies, 12 of them had been convicted of misdemeanors—conspiracy to commit forcible detainer—and had been fined.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, a certified copy of the action of the jury in this case in which 20 of these men are—

> We the jury in the entitled action find the defendant guilty of conspiracy, a felony, as charged in the second amended indictment.

I ask unanimous consent to extend this copy in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. I have pointed out to this body and again to the Labor Committee that the Labor Board ordered the rehiring of "Red" Ortman, a German alien, who, through misrepresentation, gained employment in the Douglas plant, despite the fact that the Air Corps Act prohibits the employment of aliens. The Labor Board ordered the Douglas Co. to rehire this alien with back pay.

Mr. Madden said in his statement to the Labor Committee:

> The Board did order the reinstatement of Ortman, who was one of those discriminated against, but expressly provided that he should be offered only such employment for which he as an alien was eligible. The Air Corps Act is not applicable to the manufacture of commercial planes. Since the Douglas Co. manufactures commercial planes as well as Army planes, it had work for which Ortman was eligible. The Board's order merely required that Ortman be reinstated to work of this sort, which was in no way forbidden by the Air Corps Act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not remember seeing any special section or provision being made for Ortman in the Douglas case. But, I take the chairman's statement that it was. But in the name of reason, how can an alien be employed on commercial aircraft when on the same assembly line Army planes are being built? And too, Mr. Speaker, there was no intention on the part of Congress in passing the Air Corps Act, as I interpret it, to permit any board or bureau to order the employment of aliens in our aircraft factories. As I understand the law it provides that no alien shall be employed where military aircraft are being built.

Mr. Madden made no reference in his statement to the case of Vincent O. Racine. Racine, you will recall, is the man who stripped the bomb racks on the new B–18 bomber and was ordered rehired with back pay by the Labor Board. It will be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that Army and Navy engineers testified that Racine's act could not have been accidental and that it was either a deliberate attempt at sabotage or was grossly incompetent workmanship.

But Mr. Madden did take up more than a page of his statement explaining how the automobile worker's newspaper carried an account dated April 9, 1938, of a decision of the Labor Board which was not rendered until April 20, 1938.

Mr. Madden dismissed my charges about the Oil Well Manufacturing Co. of Los Angeles case with a flip of the hand. The record in the case stands for itself. I have read every page of it. The Labor Board on November 10 put one of its complainants, George Falardeau, on the stand, who testified as to how he was discriminated against. He denied on cross-examination that he had been in jail during his absence from work. The next day, Armistice Day, the attorney for the company went to the police department and obtained such information that when he presented it as an offer of proof on the following day, November 12, the Labor Board attorney admitted its truth and dismissed the complaint. Mr. Madden said:

> Our files show that a full investigation was made by the Board's representatives before the case was brought.

Maybe so, but it only took the attorney a few hours on a national holiday to obtain information that proved entirely false the information obtained by the Labor Board in its "full investigation."

Now, more than a year ago, hearings were held in St. Louis against the St. Louis branch of the Ford Motor Co. I have read every page of this voluminous hearing. I called attention to certain abuses. One was the fact that the Labor Board attorney admitted that he allowed one of his witnesses to testify falsely. Now, Mr. Madden, it is clear from his statement, did not read the Labor Board's own transcript of this case. He gives himself a loophole by saying:

> I am informed the facts are these—

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me read for you the facts as he said he had been informed they were:

> The company's counsel on cross-examination resorted to the device, well-known among lawyers, of asking the witness if he had discussed his testimony or the case with counsel before the hearing. The witness had talked with counsel but fell into the trap and denied it. Later the Board's attorney, when called to the stand, testified he had talked to the witness, but that he had done nothing immediately to correct the testimony because he did not consider it material except upon the point of credibility. I think the Board's attorney should have corrected the misstatement of the witness at once, though it was perfectly evident to him that the respondent's counsel knew the statement was not true and that they would so prove, and that respondent would not be in any way prejudiced by the testimony.

For the information of this body, Mr. Speaker, this testimony is on pages 11291–11302 of the official transcript.

Mr. Madden's statement as to respondent's counsel's knowledge of the fact of the C. I. O. local president's perjury is absolutely false and unsupportable, as Mr. Madden well knows if he conferred with the trial attorney for the Board or if he read the pertinent facts of the Labor Board's transcript of the case. Mr. Madden had no comment on the fact that the very foundation of the charges and accusations by the Board were laid on the false testimony of the local C. I. O. president. He was allowed to testify freely and fully as to his beliefs, opinions, the working conditions, wages, and hours, of Ford, General Motors, and others, and also give hearsay evidence of what he or anyone else had heard—without identifying the sources of his information or the persons whom he was quoting. Mr. Madden further had no comment on the fact that the trial examiner's intermediate report was based primarily upon testimony of the local union president, which testimony was proven false by the record.

Mr. Madden made no comment on the Labor Board attorney's testimony that the Board attorney had told a group of about 40 Labor Board witnesses—before they testified—that he would put a bullet through their heads if they did not testify properly—pages 11294–11295 of the official transcript.

Further, while the local C. I. O. president was allowed to testify regarding wages, hours worked, working conditions, and so forth, the trial examiner rejected the respondent's exhibits and testimony covering these points—pages 20984–20985, official transcript.

Mr. Madden stated:

> Mr. Anderson also contends that the Board's agents before the presentation of the case made no investigation other than to accept the C. I. O.'s word for the charges. This is not true. The regional office, I am informed, talked with hundreds of employees before presenting its case; every witness was interviewed before he testified; hundreds of written statements were obtained. Further, although the Board's agents did everything in their power to secure information from the company and to obtain the company's views on the alleged unfair labor practices, the company consistently refused to furnish such information.

Again Mr. Madden is guilty of the grossest distortion of the facts and ignorance of the official transcript.

The field examiner for the Labor Board, Dr. Ryan, testified on the witness stand that he did not make any investigation of the charges against the Ford Motor Co., nor did he contact any Ford employees who were working, that this entire investigation was made with a few C. I. O. officers and C. I. O. members. Dr. Ryan further testified that he was aware of the fact that the plant was shut down at the time in question for a change of models and that no men were working on production. He stated that the charges made by the C. I. O. and filed by the Labor Board were substantiated only by his interrogation of C. I. O. officials and members and that was the total extent of his investigation. Pages 20290–20291 of the official transcript.

Mr. Madden has overlooked the testimony of the C. I. O. international organizer, Norman Smith, on page 5284, official transcript, that the complaint filed with the Labor Board was based only on the refusal of the Ford Co. to give preference to the C. I. O. committee and officers. Mr. Madden has overlooked that part of the official transcript showing that immediately after the C. I. O. organizer had made his damaging admission the trial attorney withdrew him from the witness stand, with the consent of the trial examiner, for a conference.

Mr. Madden was unaware that men were listed in the complaint who had never worked for the Ford Motor Co. and had apparently never existed. He was likewise unaware that 45 of the complainants alleged to have been discriminated against could not possibly be found, either by the Labor Board or the U. A. W. A. Union, although the trial had been held open for several days while union cars cruised the town and surrounding country "shaking the bushes" for witnesses they could not find, as stated in the official transcript, pages 6004 to 6007.

Mr. Madden was also unaware that two men listed in the complaint had resigned from their jobs with the Ford Motor Co. many months prior to filing the charges and, in fact, before the U. A. W. A. had ever started organizing. These cases were reluctantly dismissed by the Board many months after the hearing began.

Mr. Madden completely ignores the fact that 22 of the men listed in the Labor Board complaint were working steadily and satisfactorily for the Ford Motor Co., and had no knowledge that their names were being used in preparing the Board's complaint, without any authority from these men (pp. 12790–12799, 14060–14061, 14072–14073, 15542–15543, 15551–15552, 15578–15579, 16629–16630, 17184–17185, and 17474–17484, official transcript).

Mr. Madden was not "informed" that the evidence in the transcript shows that some of the affidavits and documents presented by the union purporting to be signed by union members and notarized by a Board representative were forgeries and had not been seen, nor signed, by the employee alleging to have been discriminated against.

Somebody failed to "inform" Mr. Madden of the following facts: One witness testified he left St. Louis a half day before the plant shut-down in September 1937, and that he had been injured in an automobile accident and had been in the hospital in Minnesota since that time and did not return to St. Louis until February 25, 1938; that he had never visited the union headquarters nor the Labor Board office; that he had no knowledge his name had been used in the complaint; that the Ford Co. had invited him to return to work on November 3, 1937, and again on December 10, 1937, but he was unable to do so. He did return to work as soon as he was able in March 1938. The Labor Board attorney objected to this testimony to these facts on the ground that it was "irrelevant and immaterial," and the amazing fact is that he was sustained by the trial examiner. Upon insistence of Ford counsel that this was important testimony, the trial examiner said:

> Even then it doesn't matter. He is not the one that filed the complaint. The union filed the charge. They didn't file it in his name. They filed it in behalf of the public to keep you (Ford Co.) from restraining interstate commerce (pp. 17479–17481, official transcript).

That represents one of the most amazing statements ever made by anyone having charge of trying a case.

At the last session of Congress, Mr. Speaker, I called attention to the fact that the Labor Board regional director in St. Louis had told a group of workers in the Solomon Dress Co. to go in a body and join the C. I. O.

In his statement before the Labor Committee Mr. Madden again runs to cover by saying:

> The facts relating to the incident as nearly as I can ascertain them are as follows:

He does not deny that Miss Dorothea De Schweinitz, regional director at St. Louis, made the statement, but says:

> She states that this was said ironically and not in any such manner as would indicate she was urging them to join the I. L. G. W. U. (C. I. O. union).

And Mr. Madden, for himself:

> While I think the remark of the regional director was unfortunate, I do not see how one can construe the incident as an instruction or even a suggestion that the employees join the C. I. O.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I could present much more evidence, but time is limited. I believe anyone can see from the facts themselves that the Chairman of the Labor Board distorts them to fit his own ideas of what they should be to substantiate any view or opinion he may or may not have. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this is the character and policy of the Board. The vaguest type of irresponsible hearsay evidence is admitted to the record when favorable to the C. I. O. I say that has been the rule and practice of the Labor Board and the theory of the Board itself as to how the law should be administered.

I believe every Member of this House should support the resolution of the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], and I urge its adoption.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1937.

Convened at 10 a. m.

Present: Hon. Thomas L. Ambrose, judge; Roy Goff, deputy clerk; Cecil J. Luskin, deputy sheriff; Elmer L. Kincaid, reporter (10 a. m. to 4:30 p. m.), and the following proceedings were had:

The People of the State of California, plaintiff, v. Claude R. Anderson, Marvin Art, Jack Boyer, William Busick, Howard Earl, Lyle Griffith, Carl W. Hersey, Douglas Hunter, William H. McCormick, Jr., Silas V. Nimz, Jack Ortman, Harry Ovadenko, Eugene B. Page, Isadore Patt, Vincent O. Racine, Otto L. Rumble, Andrew N. Schmoulder, Virgil G. Sharp, Matthew Vidaver, Leslie B. Warburton, Charles F. West, Jr., and Edward F. Wilson, defendants. 67121

Trial is resumed.

At 9 a. m. the jury returns and resumes deliberations and at 11 a. m. returns into court with the following verdicts, to wit:

(TITLE OF COURT AND CAUSE)

"We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find the defendant, Claude R. Anderson, guilty of conspiracy, a felony, as charged in the second amended indictment.

L. E. LAMPTON, County Clerk,
By T. A. MATHIEU, Deputy.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, the evidence before the Committee on Rules shows conclusively that the Labor Committee has conducted fair, impartial, and careful hearings on this matter for many, many weeks. Therefore I, as chairman of the Committee on Rules, felt that it would be a dangerous precedent, which would come back to plague the House if we reported this resolution while that committee was earnestly working to bring about a report to the House upon the investigation it was conducting.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. For a question.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman knows that if we vote down the previous question we can offer an amendment to this resolution, providing that the Committee on Labor of the House of Representatives do exactly what this select committee is empowered to do, and in that way we can meet the situation. Vote down the previous question and an amendment can be offered.

This resolution is a slap at a standing committee of this body. I do not object to an investigation, but if it is to be authorized, then substitute for a special committee the Committee on Labor, give them the same authority and the same instructions as contained in this resolution. That should be acceptable to those who favor this resolution. You would not want a resolution passed that would cast a reflection on a committee of which you are a member. Fairness demands that we respect the members of our committees. If the previous question is voted down, an amendment could be offered empowering and instructing the standing committee of the House to do the job, and it will follow the instructions given by this body. I hope the previous question is voted down so that this amendment can be offered. I propose to protect our standing committee by voting against this resolution as now worded, but I will vote for the same resolution if the standing committee of the House is named to do the work.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Missouri is correct. I appeal to all of you who have interest in the orderly procedure of the House. If we should pass this resolution today, then tomorrow or the day after people may come in and ask us to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill or deprive other committees of their privileges and responsibilities as to any bill pending before them. I warn the younger men here who have come to stay, do not be carried away, do not yield to temporary appeals on the part of those who have been unfair to labor, do not yield to those enemies of labor, because this act was passed in the interest of labor, and I know that neither this Board nor any judge of the United States can at all times satisfy all people. I have confidence in the Board, and by giving them a few more months to work things out I know there will be no complaint, but above all I feel that the Labor Committee should have the right and privilege to continue and that they should not be deprived of their privileges. I have hundreds of letters and telegrams against the resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I think this resolution should be voted down. If we understand the objectives and purposes lying back of the resolution, and if you were to vote on that issue they present, I am satisfied that this House, when called upon to go on record, would vote it down by a vote of at least 2 to 1. The issue is: Shall labor be denied the right to organize; shall it be denied the right to bargain collectively; shall it be deprived of the only court it has ever had; shall the closed shop be taken from labor? An aye vote on this resolution is to answer "yes" to each question I have here propounded.

This resolution should be voted down in the first place because it is one of the most violent infringements of the prerogatives of a legislative committee of this House, and as a practical matter would result in losing all of the efforts of the Labor Committee indicated here by the records on this table before us. But in the final analysis we cannot dodge the issue—that here we are called upon to take from labor that which it has spent a century to secure. If you really believe that labor in America shall not have the right to organize and deal collectively, and that right be recognized by law, then you should vote for this resolution, because that is what it is striking at. It is striking at the instrumentality or agency that we have set up in this country to permit and guarantee to a laboring man the right to come in and have a judicial determination of the issues involved in a labor dispute.

Twenty-two thousand cases in 4 years have been brought to the N. L. R. B. and 14,000 disposed of. They involved a possible loss of life, loss of property, and all of the misery incident to labor struggles in the years before this piece of legislation came into effect had they been settled in the old way. All this has now been largely abolished. Do you want to go back to the good old days of misery, bloodshed, and strife?

I say to the authors of this resolution that I am ready to support it if they sincerely feel it needs to be passed, if they will amend the first line and provide that the committee referred to in the bill shall be selected from the Labor Committee of the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, after 50 years of struggle by organized labor, the Congress of the United States eventually recognized the principle of collective bargaining by the passage of the National Labor Relations Act, thereby conferring upon those who produce wealth in conjunction with capital the right to sit around the table with management and have something to say about the conditions under which they perform their services and their labor. This victory was hailed everywhere throughout the ranks of organized labor as the Magna Carta of labor. This resolution providing for an investigation of the administration of the Labor Relations Act comes from a most hostile source. The author stated in his remarks that he did not vote for this legislation when it was before the Congress because he believed it was unconstitutional.

Shortly after the passage of the National Labor Relations Act by the Congress its constitutionality was challenged by an appeal taken to the Supreme Court.

The Court upheld the validity of the act, but the gentleman from Virginia still disputes the decision of that Court.

But, my friends, regardless of his opinion, it is the law of the land. Now you are asked by the gentleman from Virginia to supersede the efforts of a regular standing committee of this House, the Labor Committee. It is a committee having all the dignity, prestige, integrity, and privileges of any other committee of this House. That committee has jurisdiction over all matters affecting labor legislation. It has spent 39 days conducting hearings on a bill to amend the National Labor Relations Act—has compiled over 6,000 pages of testimony in its conduct of this hearing. It is reasonable to believe that this committee, following the orderly processes of this democratic body, will make such recommendations as the committee, in its considered judgment, believes necessary and sound after it has concluded its hearings and deliberations. It should be permitted to continue without having its jurisdiction usurped or its integrity reflected upon.

I trust the House will vote this resolution down. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] for bringing in this resolution. I have no fight to pick with the Labor Committee. I received courteous treatment from that committee, but I want to say that we have been in session for some 7 months and business in this country has to work under that law. Business is important enough to have those amendments brought to this House for action. Business cannot wait much longer.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. No. I only have 3 minutes.

The Douglas plant is in my town of Santa Monica. As to whether this Board has been impartially conducted or not, I can say to you that when 21 men are convicted by a court in this country and the Labor Board comes back and says, "You must reemploy them," I do not think that is the American idea of impartiality of conduct and I do not think it conforms to American standards of fairness.

The gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] said that of all the cases filed only 5 percent were brought to trial. That may be true, but many of those were small-business men. The little fellow does not have the money to stand the expense of such a trial.

Now, coming back to whether we should or should not vote for this resolution, I want to say that if the statements of the members of that committee are any criterion, they have made statements as to the perfection of the act as is, and this would indicate to me that there would be no amendments. In that event, I think it is high time that this is called before the House and action taken directly. There is no reason why the evidence that has already been given before the Labor Committee cannot be used jointly if there is that spirit of cooperation which there should be. I made a statement before the committee and I was asked the question, after it was indicated that there would be no changes or amendments by certain members of the committee. I said at the time that unless they granted amendments on this unfair, un-American act, that public sentiment would rise in this country to such an extent that they would demand those amendments. I think that sentiment is here today, and I hope this resolution will be agreed to. I am going to vote for the resolution.

I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL].

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. (After counting.) Two hundred and thirty-five Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDOWELL] is recognized.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Speaker, here is how the National Labor Relations Board has helped us up in Pennsylvania:

My own district, site of some of the largest heavy industries in the world, has had its share of these devastating strikes, some justified, a great many not justified, but agitated and arranged by ruthless politicians who have fastened themselves onto the body of organized labor, encouraged and permitted by the National Labor Relations Board.

In western Pennsylvania there is a small coal-mining town of Coral, once having a population of 1,500 coal miners and their families, but which has been completely ruined by 11 strikes in the last 24 months. Last Tuesday the mine was closed and the town was sold under the auctioneer's hammer, piece by piece. An $18,000 United Mine Workers' Home has just been completed there and stands as a monument to the collection of dues, but its owners are on relief.

Fifteen labor leaders are said to be the cause of the 11 strikes, which not only did not increase the income and better the conditions of the miners but resulted in 100 percent of them being thrown onto the relief of the State and the Nation.

The strike agitators have gone to other and more prosperous fields where their particular talents can be used again to the disadvantage of America's workingmen, but the miners and their wives and their children are sitting glumly back around the ruins of their once prosperous coal mine, living on the small pittance the Government hands them as charity.

To bear these remarks out, I would like to include herewith an article from the Valley Daily News, of Tarentum, Pa., headed Coral, Now Ghost Town, Monument to Strike Folly.

CORAL, July 18.—Miners and their families today are pondering the cost of strikes as their homes go under the hammer. The entire town that once housed 1,500 persons is being sold piece by piece. With it goes the coal properties and mining and coke equipment that coal men say will never again operate.

Labor trouble, 11 strikes in 2 years, the operators say, made it impossible for them to continue. In the 2 years of 1937 and 1938, the Coral Coal & Coke Co. put $100,000 into the mines and ovens, about half of which they said resulted from losses directly due to repeated strikes. The mine operated under union contract and at union wages, officials said.

Constant agitation by about 15 leaders caused the troubles, according to the management. Each strike required a concession by the company for settlement and each concession became accepted policy. After 11 costly concessions the operators could no longer operate at a profit, they said.

The company's chief product was foundry coke. It operated 300 ovens and employed 270 men at the time of closing. At one time it employed more than 300. Today the former employees as well as company officials realize fully that the repeated strikes are responsible for them being out of employment and on relief. All the miners retain today is an $18,000 meeting hall recently completed.

The mine was originally opened in 1902 by the Wharton Coal & Coke Co. It represents an investment of more than a million dollars.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield the 2 remaining minutes on this side to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, since 1933, when I came to this body, I have been a member of the House Labor Committee. I believe I have been impartial and fair in the consideration of proposed legislation coming before that group. I speak not of personalities but simply upon the merits of the proposed resolution. In my opinion, this resolution is absolutely wrong. I believe that its adoption today will mean a break-down of committee structure in this House. Your Labor Committee, both Democrats and Republicans, will honestly discharge its duty. I feel I must say that after having been present at such hearings and having seen the way the chairman, Mrs. NORTON, and the acting chairman, Mr. RAMSPECK, have conducted them, that no witness has been treated unfairly. Courteous consideration has been given to both those for and against the National Labor Relations Board. All viewpoints are being heard, and there comes the realization on my part that this standing committee of this House, of which I am a member, is honest in its desire to, at the proper time, after full and complete testimony has been heard, bring in amendments which should be offered to the present act. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLANNERY].

Mr. FLANNERY. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is a Member of this House who wants to suppress investigation. I do not believe there is any Member on this floor who wants to suppress or conceal any deficiencies in the national labor relations law. But we have a question of procedure here this morning. I am in favor of fair, open, and full investigations, but we have an investigation under way by the Labor Committee of this House. If that investigation is not fair, open, and full in any respect, I am anxious to know wherein it is not and why. It has already produced results. I understand the National Labor Relations Board has amended its regulations and its procedure in response to that investigation. Now some of the Members want two investigations. If this is reasonable, one can, with propriety, then ask for an investigation to investigate the investigators who are investigating the original investigation. [Laughter.] It just does not make sense. We have one investigation that has been fair and open and apparently efficient. If that is wrong, it has not been shown. If it is not wrong, then this motion comes before the House with ulterior motives, and those motives are not to investigate, not to disclose the truth, but to discredit only. I oppose the bill in behalf of the Labor Committee, American labor, and American fair play. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, the question before this House today is just simply this: If you believe in collective bargaining as a sound principle in our democracy; if you believe that the man who works should be afforded the opportunity to have a voice in determining the wages he receives and the hours and conditions under which he works, you will vote down this resolution. The actual result of the adoption of this resolution will be to break down and emasculate the Labor Relations Act.

Those who are promoting this resolution tell us there are a lot of complaints from business. That is true. There always will be a lot of complaints from business and industry. There will always be like complaints from labor. The National Labor Relations Board has handled thousands of cases. Out of all those cases there are probably not more than a dozen cases that have actually been mishandled; yet because of the bad handling of a few cases we are asked to break down and emasculate an act that is intended to and does protect the man who gives employment as well as the man who is employed and makes it possible for them both to cooperate in a democratic way. I ask my colleagues to vote this resolution down.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, for 2 months the House Committee on Labor has been holding public hearings on the National Labor Relations Act. Our chairman has been very fair to every person who desired to come before the committee.

A number of Congressmen who spoke on the floor this morning appeared before our committee. These gentlemen took considerable time before the committee, yet they now stand up here and tell you to vote for the resolution, which will deprive the House Labor Committee of its legislative rights.

The National Labor Relations Act has been a great blessing for our laboring people. There are many persons who are owners and managers of business establishments who want this act repealed. These people are the enemies of the laboring class.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD].

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I want the RECORD to show that the Mr. FORD referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN] was LELAND M. FORD and not THOMAS F. FORD.

Mr. RANDOLPH. He was treated with courtesy, and he said so in his speech.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I think the real reason for the bringing in of this resolution is found in section 5 on page 2, where the disclosure is made of an intent to define and clarify the term "interstate commerce." This term has been defined very ably by the Supreme Court of the United States. This resolution is for the purpose of trying to change the definition of that term.

All this stuff about smearing, all this stuff about investigation, in my opinion, is way in the background. You will find when you read this resolution carefully that what I have stated is the fact. This proposed committee, if it is granted the power under this resolution, will recommend that the definition of interstate commerce handed down by the Supreme Court of the United States be changed so as to sabotage the right of Congress actually to legislate with regard to interstate commerce. I think the monopoly boys are behind this thing and are using this means of gaining their point; as usual the back-door method.

Who is behind this attack on the National Labor Relations Act and its administration? Is the call for amendments a spontaneous reaction throughout the country of persons wronged by the act and its administration?

Look at the witnesses for the employers who have appeared before the Senate committee. Thirteen employers' associations have testified in opposition to the act. One is the National Association of Manufacturers, and 10 others are affiliated with it. The National Association of Manufacturers opposed the act in 1935 when it was pending in Congress; called for "a continuing campaign to repeal the act," after its enactment; sponsored company-dominated unions among its members and advised them how to transform these company-dominated unions into so-called independent unions; approved of vigilante movements and the notorious Mohawk Valley formula, with its array of strikebreakers, missionaries, thugs, and spies; and has by unceasing propaganda sought to nullify the act and defeat the rights of labor.

Look at the witnesses representing so-called independent unions who testified in opposition to the act. Of the 28 who appeared before the Senate committee there were 27 from so-called independent unions in companies affiliated with the National Association of Manufacturers.

Look at the employer witnesses. Twenty-three out of thirty-six represent companies affiliated with the National Association of Manufacturers. Does this not prove that one well-heeled pressure group is behind the whole agitation?

Of the estimated more than 200,000 manufacturing companies in the United States, the National Association of Manufacturers represents, so it claims, 7,500 members, or less than 4 percent of all the manufacturers in the country. Does the National Association of Manufacturers speak for American industry? This is a single-handed attempt on the part of the National Association of Manufacturers to defeat this law, by parading before the committee the same interests appearing under various names.

Vote down this vicious resolution and you will have done your duty to labor. A vote for this is a slap at labor.

Mr. FRIES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and fifty-one Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER].

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, this investigating committee will be no doubt what many other committees have been, a smearing committee. It will not investigate, it will go out and collect red paint with which to smear the board that all the gains under the New Deal may be lost. We have had about enough of these smearing committees it seems to me.

It has been stated on the floor of this House by the estimable chairman of the Labor Committee that never once has the author of this resolution cast a favorable labor vote. He will be chairman of this committee. What sort of treatment do you expect labor will receive at the hands of a committee headed by one out of sympathy with labor's cause?

No friend of labor can vote for this precedent-smashing resolution. If this carries, and I can see that it will, it will be because the tories of both parties have joined hands to take another backward step. First it was the Dies committee, then it was the Woodrum committee, now it is the Smith committee. Will our nostrils never be filled with the stench that rises from the actions of special investigating committees?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much time remains?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia has 12 minutes remaining.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER].

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, following the precedent established by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK] I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I have to ask this body to vote down this resolution for the purpose of bringing before the House a fair and reasonable discussion of the actual issue.

The Labor Committee have been working for 10 weeks, and these volumes of testimony on the table represent the result of that work. Any of you who look at it, who have been through the mill as many of the members of the Labor Committee have been, will know what that means. The Senate Committee is still at work. It has not been criticized, yet it has been working a month longer than we have.

The Labor Committee of the House is not going to be bludgeoned into making a report until we have heard everybody who ought to be heard. We are carrying on a proper, reasonable, and rational hearing. If this House wants to take away from this committee its right to continue that work, the onus will be yours. You gentlemen who are sponsoring this idea will be asked to pass on other resolutions, and I put the question to the gentleman from Virginia:

If a lot of whereases setting forth the shortcomings of the Rules Committee is presented to that committee, will the gentleman give it exactly the same hearing and the same consideration he is giving this committee? I repeat, if another resolution to investigate the Rules Committee, setting out as the gentleman did in this case, shall be referred to his committee, will he give us the same sort of treatment that he gave here for the investigation of your committee?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Does the gentleman yield for a reply?

Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sure the Rules Committee would give a hearing and a very respectful hearing.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman will give me a hearing, but will he give me the same sort of rule and the same sort of action?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I came over here this morning with the intention of voting for this measure, but as the discussion has developed we see in it a duplication of the activities of another committee of this House. It seems to me that this should be either an investigation of the Labor Committee or there should be no investigation at all. If we build up during the years a structure here, whereby we have certain groups in this body provided by the Ways and Means Committee to do a job, then cut into them with other parts of the organization or sweep over them afterward, we are being unfair to ourselves as a lawmaking body. The general principle here involved is too great to be sacrificed merely for the sake of this one investigation. When I see the destruction involved in this measure, as I do today, I shall be forced to vote against permitting such investigation as this.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 9 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I dislike doing anything that may offend any one, particularly would I regret doing anything that would give offense to the Committee on Labor of this House. But, Mr. Speaker, if past experience is to indicate what may be expected in the future, and if we are to wait here until the Committee on Labor takes action to restrain the Labor Board in its maladministration of the law, then we will be here until Gabriel blows his horn.

The position taken by members of the Labor Committee and others to the effect that the work of this special committee, which the pending resolution proposes to set up, would be a duplication of the work of the Labor Committee is not sound, because the Labor Committee has no investigatory powers and subpena power. It has none of the powers which this resolution vests in the special committee which it is proposed to create.

Mr. Speaker, I have been of the opinion that the National Labor Relations Board, in its administration of the Wagner Act, was doing a terrible thing to the country, and I have said so. I have no desire to conceal the opinion that I hold with respect to the act itself. I think it is a vicious law that is wrapped up in high-sounding language to conceal its wicked intent. It is one-sided and has been administered in a one-sided way.

The Labor Board has construed it as a mandate to unionize industry and has missed no opportunity in the use of compulsion to bring this about. In its zeal to serve certain labor leaders and to direct the labor movement according to its own notion and its own social and economic theories, the Board has brought itself and the law into thorough disrepute, has sacrificed much public good will for the cause of organized labor, has failed utterly to achieve the avowed objective of the act, and has frustrated instead of carrying out the will of the majority in many cases involving thousands of workers. It has prevented collective bargaining and the democratic management of the affairs of the workers. Preaching economic democracy, the Board has moved steadily toward compulsory unionization in unions chosen by the Board.

You talk about the attitude of labor with respect to the pending resolution. Does not every Member of the House know that the American Federation of Labor is understood to favor this resolution? [Applause.]

Mr. KELLER. I challenge that statement.

Mr. COX. The first mistake that the Board made was in the selection of its personnel. It turned loose upon the country an army of wild young men who proceeded against employers as if their business was to destroy the institution of private property. It is humanly impossible for members of the Board to read the records of the cases which they decide or to write the opinions which they render. They are compelled to rely upon their employees chosen to do this work, and relying upon them, the Board has made a mess of things.

Mr. Speaker, throughout the Labor Relations Board's procedure, beginning when a labor organization files with the Board charges that an employer has engaged in unfair labor practices, and ending when the Board serves its decision and order upon the employer sustaining such charges, there are various points at which the Board's procedure violates those fundamental requirements of fairness which are the essence of due process in a proceeding of a judicial nature. The Board has abused the discretion vested in it. It has sought to terrorize business and to promote radical labor organizations.

Let me point out this fact. It is utterly impossible under our form of government for the Congress to enact legislation that is not susceptible to maladministration and distortion and misdirection if the will to maladminister, to distort, and to misdirect is present in the agency charged with the enforcement of these laws.

If representative government means anything under our Constitution, it means that every agency in the executive department of the Government shall endeavor honestly and earnestly to carry out the plain intent of the Congress. The Labor Board, however, has sought to carry the act further than Congress intended. It has flagrantly defied the courts and has consistently evinced bias and prejudice against persons and organizations of the general class to which employers belong. It has claimed the right to weigh evidence in the weighted scales of the Board's predilections and has departed from the standards of impartiality which the courts universally require of judges and jurors.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution asks for an investigation of the administration of the Labor Act by the Labor Board. The employers of the country believe they have been manhandled and otherwise maltreated, and millions of others believe the same thing. The truth, Mr. Speaker, ought to be established, and an investigation would do this. The country believes that the Board and its agents have shown bias and prejudice in all their proceedings and cannot be depended upon to do justice as between contending parties. The truth ought to be established, and an investigation would do this.

Mr. Speaker, the American people believe that the Board and its agents are functioning as organizing agents of the radical labor section of this country. The truth ought to be established, and an investigation would do this. The Board has lost all public confidence and should go, or be, by investigation or otherwise, reinstated in the public confidence. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired. All time has expired on the resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. If the previous question is voted down, will that open up the resolution to amendment?

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. A further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If I understand the situation correctly, if the previous question is voted down, the control of the measure would pass to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KELLER]; and the resolution would not be open to amendment generally, but only to such amendments as the gentleman from Illinois might yield for. Is my understanding correct, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is voted down, it would not necessarily pass to the gentleman from Illinois; it would pass to the opponents of the resolution. Of course, a representative of the minority would have the first right of recognition.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is what I understood to be the ruling of the Chair recently when the same situation arose.

The SPEAKER. That is the rule, as the Chair desires to announce.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia to order the previous question, on which the gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 258, nays 131, not voting 39, as follows:

Mr. Byrne of New York with Mr. Connery.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to and lay that motion on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RICHARDS). Without objection, a motion to reconsider will be laid on the table.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I object, and ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion comes too late, as I had already proceeded with a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. PARSONS. I was on my feet objecting, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I had already proceeded with a unanimous-consent request, and may I state that request, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I was on my feet trying to get the attention of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his request for the yeas and nays?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the motion has already been carried and the gentleman from Virginia had been recognized to make another request. I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the distinguished minority leader that the gentleman from Illinois was on his feet at the time.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I demand we find out what the record shows.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman saw me running down the aisle; and I was trying to get the attention of the Chair to object, and I did object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois was on his feet at the time.

The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays on the motion to lay on the table a motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes 118, noes 53.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PARSONS and Mr. MARCANTONIO objected to the vote on the ground there was not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-one Members are present, a quorum.

So a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the demand comes too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that on the previous demand for the yeas and nays, the yeas and nays were refused, and the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not now in order.

GENERAL LEAVE TO PRINT

Mr. SMITH of Virginia rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia rise?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. To propound a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just adopted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address made by myself on the subject of neutrality.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] was unavoidably detained on official business during the preceding vote. Had he been present he would have voted "aye" on the resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Dr. A. B. Cox, the cotton economist of the University of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EMIGRATION OF FILIPINOS FROM THE UNITED STATES

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4646, to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 4646, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments. The Clerk will report the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after "States," insert "or in the case of a Filipino residing in Hawaii, to a port in that Territory."

Page 2, line 16, after "States", insert "or, in the cases of residents of Hawaii, to a port in that Territory,"

Page 3, line 3, after "States", insert "and in Hawaii."

Page 3, lines 8 and 9, strike out "any port on the west coast of the United States" and insert "the port of embarkation in the United States or Hawaii."

Page 4, lines 5 and 6, strike out "the United States, its Territories or possessions" and insert "any State or Territory or the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the gentleman from New York whether he has submitted this matter to the other members of his committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I have talked to my committee. There is nothing wrong about the amendments themselves. Under the bill as passed in the House we provide that Filipinos who desire to return back to the Philippine Islands should be enabled to do so by the Government paying their expense, if they are stranded. We are trying to send them home, and the amendments simply add that this same privilege be granted to Filipinos who are stranded in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am not concerned with that. I understand this bill comes back from the Senate with certain amendments, and I am endeavoring to determine whether those amendments should be considered by the gentleman's committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are minor amendments, which add to the bill the Filipinos in the Hawaiian Islands. That is all there is to it. I have talked to my committee.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Under my reservation I should like to inquire of the ranking member on the minority side and learn what he thinks about this.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, these Senate amendments have not been submitted to the committee.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I agree with the gentleman; but they are all minor amendments. They simply provide for including the Hawaiian Islands, which we did not include in the original bill. There are some Filipinos who are stranded in Hawaii, and the Hawaiian Commissioner came before the committee and asked that those Filipinos who were stranded there be permitted to go back to the Philippine Islands, and these amendments so provide. That is all there is to it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I shall be forced to object until we have had further time to consider the matter. The gentleman may bring the matter up later today.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

PERNICIOUS POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 251, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 251

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 1871, an act to prevent pernicious political activities. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendments under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. PARSONS rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. PARSONS. To make a point of order. Since this House is about to witness the demise of the political parties in this country, I think a quorum should be present at the embalming. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and eleven Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize any Member for any purpose in the absence of a quorum except to move a call of the House.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 139]

Allen, Ill.	Byrne, N. Y.	Cooley	Evans
Andrews	Byron	Cummings	Ferguson
Boren	Casey, Mass.	Curley	Fernandez
Buckler, Minn.	Clevenger	Dies	Fitzpatrick
Buckley, N. Y.	Connery	Eaton, Calif.	Ford, Miss.

Ford, Thomas F.	Magnuson	Rockefeller	Sullivan
Gifford	Marshall	Schwert	Sumners, Tex.
Jeffries	Massingale	Secrest	Vinson, Ga.
Kelly	Patman	Seger	Wolfenden, Pa.
Kerr	Reece, Tenn.	Smith, Ohio
Maas	Reed, N. Y.	Smith, W. Va.

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 386 Members have answered to their names; a quorum is present.

Without objection, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made this morning, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the adoption of this resolution makes in order the bill S. 1871, the much-discussed Hatch bill. I suppose there never has been another measure which has come to this floor with its real intents and purposes so generally misunderstood. I shall be charitable and not say "misrepresented." I will say "misunderstood."

In the first place, as I have discussed the bill with the various Members, there is scarcely one who has not said "I am in complete accord with doing the things which the measure seeks to do."

The first section of the bill, if you please, prohibits the coercion of any person in order to obtain votes or restrict the full right of free franchise. That is the purpose of the section as it left the Senate; it is the purpose of the section as it comes out of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Section 2 of the bill provides that certain employees working for and being paid by the Federal Government, from funds derived from the taxpayers, cannot spend their time in political campaigns and managing campaigns for Members of the House and Senate, the President of the United States, or other elective officials. That section as it left the Senate, I believe, was a very good one. However, in the Judiciary Committee of the House it was very carefully and adroitly amended. The committee amendment, if permitted to remain in this bill, nullifies the entire measure. That amendment provides "that nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidate or"—get this, if you please—"or participate in the activities of a political party."

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that many times there have been references to politics reaching the gutter. Well, the gutter would be the ceiling of politics with certain politicians if this amendment remains in this bill, in my opinion.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield briefly for a question?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I will, but it must be brief.

Mr. CELLER. The Judiciary Committee inserted those words because it would then conform with civil-service rule No. 1 of section No. 1.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I desire to state that the amendment which the gentleman has discussed was not agreed to by all of the members of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. No. You and I did not agree to it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is correct.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I am sure the membership of this House does not wish to give the green signal to every employee in the Federal Government and have some of the politicians of a type that we all know go to them with this legislation and say, "Here is what has been passed in the Congress of the United States. Here is an order for you to go ahead and strut your stuff for this or that party."

Now, there is no partisanship in connection with this legislation. Although this bill bears the name of the senior Senator from New Mexico, Senator HATCH, it was sponsored by the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. Many of the provisions of the bill grew out of the investigation that they made into political activities in the recent campaign.

I submit to you that if that provision, which was so cleverly placed in this bill in committee, is not stricken out there is nothing of importance left in the bill.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present. This is an important matter and we should have a quorum here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-three Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 140]

Andrews	Dies	Lea	Schwert
Bates, Ky.	Dingell	Lemke	Secrest
Bland	Eaton, Calif.	McLaughlin	Seger
Boehne	Evans	Magnuson	Smith, Ohio
Boren	Ferguson	Massingale	Smith, W. Va.
Buckler, Minn.	Fernandez	Mott	Stefan
Buckley, N. Y.	Fitzpatrick	Norton	Sullivan
Byrne, N. Y.	Flannagan	O'Day	Sumners, Tex.
Carter	Folger	Osmers	Thill
Case, S. Dak.	Ford, Miss.	Patman	Vinson, Ga.
Clark	Gifford	Patton	Vorys, Ohio
Connery	Harrington	Pierce, Oreg.	Wadsworth
Cooley	Healey	Reed, Ill.	West
Culkin	Hendricks	Reed, N. Y.	White, Idaho
Cummings	Kelly	Routzohn	Wolfenden, Pa.
Curley	Kerr	Schulte

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 365 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, other controversial parts of this bill are sections 5 and 9. Notwithstanding the fact that the work-relief appropriation bill passed by this House on June 30 provided that none of the moneys could be used for political contributions, the Judiciary Committee has seen fit so to amend this bill as to prohibit solicitation of a certified relief worker, but to permit the solicitation of anybody above a certified worker. Anybody above this grade, therefore, can be chiseled out of whatever funds politicians can get out of him. This amendment certainly should not stay in the bill.

Section 9 is most confusing. When section 9 of the bill is reached as the bill is read for amendment, I propose to offer a motion to strike out the entire section and to substitute in lieu thereof the amendment I placed in the RECORD last Monday.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] has yielded back to me his 30 minutes. I have no further requests for time.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes 175, noes 6.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-three Members are present, a quorum.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LESINSKI) there were—ayes 9, noes 195.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count once more. [After counting.] Two hundred and forty-two Members are present, a quorum.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes 203, noes 11.

So, the resolution was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1871) to prevent pernicious political activities.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 1871) with Mr. BUCK in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or to attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote or to vote as he may choose, or of causing such other person to vote for, or not to vote for, any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives at any election held solely or in part for the purpose of selecting a President, a Vice President, a Presidential elector, or any Member of the Senate or any Member of the House of Representatives.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or to vote as he may choose.

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by any act of Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 4. Except as may be required by the provisions of subsection (b), section 9 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit, or be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any person known by him to be entitled to or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes.

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person to furnish or to disclose, or to aid or assist in furnishing or disclosing, any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment, or benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of, funds for work relief or relief purposes, to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager, and it shall be unlawful for any person to receive any such list or names for political purposes.

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation made by any act, heretofore or hereafter enacted, making appropriations for work relief, relief, or otherwise to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, shall be used for the purpose of, and no authority conferred by any such act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for the purpose of, interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any election.

SEC. 8. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or of affecting the results thereof. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

SEC. 10. All provisions of this act shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, any other sections of existing law or of this act.

SEC. 11. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized for 1 hour, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I believe it was Jefferson who said:

If I were given a choice of government without newspapers, or newspapers without government, I would choose the latter.

It is because I have and share the high regard for newspapers that Jefferson had that I make the following statement.

In last night's Scripps-Howard papers—and the reporters in the gallery are listening—we find this:

Washington correspondents of the World-Telegram—

That is a paper published in my city—together with the correspondents of other Scripps-Howard newspapers, will undertake tomorrow to make a record of votes on the Hatch bill.

Those votes would not otherwise be known to the public. For they will be taken by what is called the "teller system," that being a trick procedure by which the House of Representatives decides questions without the individual Members getting their names in the RECORD.

It will be our job to try to write down their names as they march up the aisle. It won't be easy, for a "teller" vote is concluded in 10 or 15 minutes, which is not much time for identifying some four-hundred-odd Congressmen, especially from the bird's-eye view of the men in the press gallery, where the bald heads look pretty much alike.

Let us analyze this a moment. The teller rule for taking votes has been in vogue in this House for over 150 years. I know of no occasion when newspapermen or anybody else charged Members of the House of Representatives with knavery and trickery, because they used the teller vote. Examine Jefferson's Manual, and you will find the provision for the teller vote which was adopted in this House in 1789. Is it not passingly strange that teller voting has been used for 149 years, and no complaint has ever been heard concerning it? Many important matters have been decided for over 100 years by this method. There is nothing secret about a teller vote. It is the only practical vote short of the lengthy, time-consuming aye-and-nay vote.

The Scripps-Howard papers have always been fair. They have rendered a genuine public service, in general, for many years. But in this instance they have suffered a lapse from grace.

Personally, it makes no difference to me as far as my district is concerned. My election does not depend upon Federal patronage job holders. But I believe the bill hurts my party. It goes too far. I worked ardously with my colleague on the Judiciary Committee to bring out a reasonable, sensible, workable bill. There was no partisanship in the committee. Both the Democrats and Republicans on the committee fashioned this bill and are offering it today. No one can claim authorship separately or individually.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. I want to say to the gentleman that I am going to vote against this bill and the reporters may save their time and not bother with me, because I am going through the tellers and vote against it every time I have an opportunity.

Mr. FISH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. Is it not a fact that the teller vote was put into effect in order to expedite voting and not to cover up the votes of the individual Members?

Mr. CELLER. I think the teller vote is a natural consequence of our work here. It is a logical method of voting. I believe it expedites business and prevents long, arduous roll calls. It was and is not used to hide or disguise voting or voters.

Mr. FISH. It was not for the purpose of covering up a roll-call vote. Does the gentleman object to anybody knowing how he votes?

Mr. CELLER. I think the gentleman is correct. It was not to cover up anything. And I do not object to publicity as to my voting.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the Judiciary Committee is concerned, we labored long and arduously on this bill. We had a rather peculiar bill from the Senate and we tried to straighten it out. It was a hard job, but I believe we have done a good job and I hope the Members of the House will give us credit for having done a good job.

We acted judiciously and there was not a bit of partisanship in the deliberations of that committee so far as this bill is concerned. I may say now that Members on both sides of the aisle, Republicans and Democrats alike, offered amendments which are part of the bill that we present to the House today. I hope the Republican members of the committee will verify what I am saying with reference to the nonpartisanship of our deliberations and the work we did with reference to the bill.

Mr. Chairman, just because there were certain relief scandals—shall we say in Kentucky, or shall we say in New Mexico—is that any reason for casting a shadow over the political relief activity in all States? I think not. Bad cases often make bad law, and we, the members of the Judiciary Committee, despite the bad cases in those two States, do not want to be guilty of making bad law here. It is for these reasons that we brought in the present bill. We believe it is a good bill; that is, with our committee amendments.

In my opinion it would have been far better if the Senate and the House had limited themselves to enacting measures againt pernicious political activities that might animate those in the relief agencies. It would have been better if we had limited ourselves to a bill which would have protected the relief workers and those on home relief. We did our best in that regard, and I direct your attention to section 5 of the bill which refers to relief workers and those on relief. That section was far weaker when we received the bill from the Senate than it is in the form you have before you. As the bill came from the Senate only "solicitation" of funds from those on relief was banned. We went further than that in order to protect relief workers and those on relief.

We put the "receiving" of funds, either in relief organizations or outside the relief organizations, under the ban. So that if Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Farley, or their cohorts or assistants receive a farthing from any relief worker they would be guilty of a violation of this act.

We went very far in that regard with a view primarily to protect to the *n*th degree all those on relief. But there was no need to protect those who received high salaries, that is, those in the supervisory and administrative groups of the P. W. A. or W. P. A. They could protect themselves. If they care to make a contribution they may do so. There cannot be coercion, but there might be a contribution. So that if Colonel Harrington or Aubrey Williams or Colonel Summerville, want to make a contribution, either to the Republicans or to the Democrats, they may do so, and we may feel it is proper to allow them to do that. They are not on relief and are well able to care for themselves.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Does the gentleman believe there is a Member in this House today who at some time or other has not in lofty tones stated to an audience that it is the duty of every American citizen to engage in politics?

Mr. CELLER. I agree with the gentleman. I have often heard that and I probably have been guilty of making that statement myself.

Mr. Chairman, section 9 is a pivotal section, particularly the second part. I want you to mark this carefully, because it is very important. On page 5, beginning with line 1, we find the following language, as the bill came to us from the Senate:

> All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that goes entirely too far. You could never enforce a provision of that sort. You would have a repetition of the old prohibition days—political bootlegging.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Fifty Members of the Congress came to the House at the time they were United States attorneys, marshals, or holding a Federal office. They could not have come to the Congress if those sections were in effect, because they would have been an officeholder, and they could not have taken part in a political campaign.

Furthermore, Vice President Garner under the second part of section 9 (a) and under section 2 could not run again for the office of Vice President. He could not participate in any campaign while he holds office. Mayhap President Roosevelt could not attend the next Democratic convention if those provisions remain as they came from the Senate. No member of the Cabinet could make a political speech. No member of the Cabinet could help shape party doctrine, yet ours is a party system. Somebody must appear on the radio and on the public platform to help create the party platforms and direct party policies. It is only due to our bipartisan system that we have been enabled to make the progress we have been making all these years, one party checking upon the other. These sections fly in the face of those theories and would make impossible, utterly impossible, the appearance before the public on the radio or on the platform of anyone who has a semblance of public office, to anonunce what he thinks should be the principles and the practices of a party.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. May I ask the gentleman if we have the power either to confer on or withhold from any person the right to vote as he chooses?

Mr. CELLER. We never had that right, and for that reason we struck out this language. It was surplusage. It is ridiculous to put language of that character into any solemn statute we may pass.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BEAM. Is it not rather inconsistent, too, because under the limitation on our power of legislative enactment we can prescribe only limitations on a Federal election? The proposition that concerns me is that these same Federal workers may engage actively and politically in any way they want in any local legislative or municipal campaign. Therefore, the inconsistency and the absurdity of this provision is apparent to me or to anyone here.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman is correct. This bill applies heavier burdens upon those persons in the nonclassified service than are applied to workers in the classified service. If I had time I would read you the rules and regulations of the Civil Service Commission, and you would find that there is no prohibition against anyone, I do not care where he is or what he is in the civil service, contributing to political parties. Yet there is language in this act as it came from the Senate that would preclude anyone in the nonclassified service from participating in political management or political campaigns by the contributing of a half a farthing to any political party or candidate. I say that is wrong, that is ridiculous.

Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. DEMPSEY rose.

Mr. CELLER. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICHOLS. I take it from the gentleman's statement that he was about to say he would probably approve the so-called Dempsey amendment to section 9. Am I correct?

Mr. CELLER. I do not favor the Dempsey amendment to section 9. I am speaking now of the bill as it came to us from the Senate.

Mr. NICHOLS. Perhaps I misunderstood the gentleman, but my interpretation of what the gentleman said was that he did not agree with the language of section 9 as it is in the present bill.

Mr. CELLER. I meant as the bill came from the Senate. I agree with the language of section 9 with lines 1, 2, 3, and 4 stricken out on page 5, as we have the bill before us.

Mr. NICHOLS. Yes; with the amendment that is already in there.

Mr. CELLER. That is correct. [Applause.]

The Republicans seem to assume a "holier than thou" attitude. The Republicans seem to be a sort of St. George fighting dragons. I remind them that they perhaps have clearly in mind that they have easier sources of campaign funds than we Democrats. Any deficit they have can easily be made up by a mere plea to a Morgan, a Rockefeller, a Grundy, and others whom Theodore Roosevelt used to call malefactors of great wealth.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a very brief question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I would rather yield at the conclusion of my statement.

Mr. Chairman, as the member of the Rules Committee to whom had been assigned the time on the rule allocated to the minority, I gladly waived this time to expedite the cons'deration of this bill in order to circumvent the filibuster which has been in progress during the afternoon by enemies of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly favor this legislation, but the bill, as it came from the Judiciary Committee of the House, must be amended if the law is to be really effective.

This measure, commonly known as the Hatch bill, is an outgrowth of the scandalous political manipulations of Federal relief appropriations, as well as intimidation of relief workers during the primary and general elections of 1936 and 1938, as revealed by the Sheppard investigating committee of the Senate.

No patriotic American can read this report, detailing a sordid debauchery of the ballot hitherto unknown in this country, without a feeling of deep resentment and without a blush of shame.

No one in this country ever dreamed, Mr. Chairman, that the time would ever come in the United States when public money, appropriated for the alleviation of human distress, could be sabotaged and prostituted as it was in Pennsylvania, Kentucky, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and to a greater or less degree in every State in the Union, including the proud old State of Tennessee.

Only last week, Mr. Chairman, a W. P. A. superintendent was tried and convicted in the Federal court at Knoxville, Tenn., in my congressional district, for misappropriation of W. P. A. funds, and for levying political tribute on poor, unfortunate relief workers. It developed in the trial that W. P. A. project foremen vied with each other in rivalry to see which could bleed relief workers the most for political contributions. It was shown that the project bosses were furnished with the names of the W. P. A. workers, and opposite each name was indicated the amount each was expected to contribute. One of the unfortunate victims testified at the trial that his boss came to him and said he would like to have $5. "I asked him," testified the witness, "what it was all about. He went ahead to explain that it was for the campaign." In this instance it was for a Democratic primary. Continuing, the witness said, "I told him I did not know whether I could spare $5 but I would try to give as much as $3, and he said that would be fine." It further developed in the trial that usually the W. P. A. workers placed their contributions under the Democratic donkey paperweight on the desk of the project supervisor. At that time W. P. A. workers in Knox County were receiving less than $30 per month to support their families.

Commenting on the trial, the News-Sentinel, published in Knoxville, had this to say editorially:

> The political racket in Tennessee is enough to sicken any decent human being, and it is doubly sickening when it is worked on helpless relief clients.

Even destitute women on sewing projects were subjected to the impositions of these political vultures. These poor and jaded women were forced to disgorge a part of their meager relief earnings or suffer the inevitable consequences which they well knew.

That such a dastardly thing could happen in this great country, Mr. Chairman, not only arouses our indignation but staggers our comprehension as well.

This legislation is designed to prevent a repetition of such sordid and scandalous political rascality.

It will be urged by some that this legislation will interfere with personal liberty. Well, if the passage of this measure will secure those on Government relief from becoming the prey of political parasites and highjackers by interfering with their "liberty" to coerce and exploit, then that is the strongest possible argument for its speedy enactment. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, to me the lowest form of animal life is the creature who would levy tribute, political or otherwise, on the unfortunate recipients of Government relief, or who would undertake to influence their political action by either a promise of favor or by a threat of punishment or reprisal. Such a creature, in my opinion, belongs to the category of ghouls and deserves the contempt and execration of all decent people.

Mr. Chairman, I favor this bill as it passed the Senate. The more teeth that can be put into it the better, so far as I am concerned. I want to see the House bill amended in substantial conformity to the Senate bill. Some clarification may be necessary, but we all fully realize that the objective of this legislation is to free those on Government relief from the talons of political harpies and to prohibit Government employees from engaging in pernicious political activities on Government time and at Government expense.

I want to see the language of the Senate bill relating to party primaries and conventions restored to this bill. These primaries and conventions have a direct bearing on the general election and, besides, this provision of the Senate bill is designed to prevent these nominating devices from being used as instruments of graft, extortion, and intimidation.

So far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, the bill does not go far enough. I would like to see it amended to cover such practices as I discussed on this floor on June 28, 1937, when I called to the attention of the House and the country the sale of the now "celebrated" Democratic campaign book. This performance, which was carried on throughout the Nation, presented the most audacious and disgraceful species of highjacking and racketeering that had thitherto been known in this country.

I stated at the time that Al Capone in his palmiest days would have scorned to condescend to such arrant, cowardly, and contemptible conduct, and that Jesse James would have considered it unworthy of his code of ethics and a reflection on his sense of sportsmanship.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, should be amended to include rackets of this character, because they sustain close relationship to the instant subject.

The Democratic campaign-book racket was carried on in this novel fashion:

Thousands of books were printed and were supposed to have been autographed by no less a personage than our present Chief Executive. Agents skilled in the art of high-pressure salesmanship were engaged to travel throughout the Nation and sell these books to those equipment dealers and contractors who had been given P. W. A., W. P. A., and other Government contracts. The agents were supplied with data as to the amount of business each material and equipment dealer and contractor had received, and the number of books each was expected to purchase was based on the amount of business he had enjoyed. Of course, this information was supplied by the heads of Government agencies right here in Washington.

Before they were anointed and sent on their scurvy journey, these solicitors were assembled in Washington and furnished a list of the lambs to be shorn, and given a letter signed by the head of the Democratic National Committee authorizing them to make the necessary contacts.

The agent who worked Tennessee, and when I say "worked," I mean precisely what I say, made at least four stops in my State—Knoxville, Chattanooga, Nashville, and Memphis. When he reached Knoxville he registered at one of the best hotels and immediately summoned to his suite those whose names were furnished him in Washington as beneficiaries of Government business. They came singly, and when Mr. A, for instance, was ushered into the presence of the shearer, he was adroitly reminded of the business he had received from the Government and the prospect of future favors was dangled before him. He was then shown the Democratic campaign book—a veritable masterpiece of art—and told that he was expected to purchase. The victim immediately expressed a willingness to buy a book, thinking, of course, that the price would certainly be nominal; but when he was told that he was expected to buy several books, the number varying in proportion to the amount of Government business he had enjoyed, and that the price of the book was only a measly $250 per copy, the victim's enthusiasm was greatly dampened. While these books were about as valuable as a last year's Barker's Almanac, under pressure, thousands of people bought them and immediately chucked them into the garbage can. It was just a subterfuge to levy cold-blooded blackmail, and the victims knew it, but there was no alternative if they expected to continue to get Government business. It is amusing to note that at the very time these campaign books were being inflicted on these hapless and helpless businessmen at $250 per copy, the same books were on sale in second-hand book stores here in Washington at 30 cents per copy. [Laughter.]

Another feature, Mr. Chairman, of this famous, or rather infamous, book which brought in huge revenues to the Democratic war chest was its advertising section. In advance of the publication of the book, large concerns, which directly or indirectly, benefited from Government business, were also visited, and by sinister methods, convinced of the importance of taking advertising space in the book, paying from $10,000 to $15,000 per page—prices far in excess of cost of similar space in such magazines as the Saturday Evening Post with its millions of circulation. Of course, it was simply a hold-up of the purest ray serene, but it was either take the space or be blacklisted.

Mr. Chairman, this bill should be amended to include this racket, because this is a species of political immorality and skullduggery that should not be tolerated. [Applause.]

My friends, if this legislation is defeated or emasculated, the country will conclude with reasonable justification that Congress approves political manipulation of Government relief. The country will also interpret such action of the Congress as an approval of pernicious political activity by those on the Federal pay roll, together with the privilege of those in authority to levy tribute and impose intimidation on Government employees.

I realize that every effort will be exerted to delay this legislation and, if possible, defeat it. We have already seen unmistakable evidences of such a conspiracy. But if this measure is not enacted before Congress adjourns, with the amendment which the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] will propose included, in my candid opinion, it will be a sad commentary on the integrity and moral perspicacity of the Seventy-sixth Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I want to join in the condemnation of all that took place in Kentucky with reference to abuse of the relief and P. W. A. workers. I neither subscribed to that while it was going on nor have I condoned it since then. That is what occurred in connection with a primary, but neither this bill nor the bill as it came from the Senate, as was just said, includes provisions with regard to primaries. The only comment that was made on this bill in the Senate in that connection was when Senator CONNALLY asked Senator HATCH if the bill included such provisions, and the answer was "no." Then the bill went by the board without further ado. The majority of crimes of this nature are committed in the primaries which are equivalent to election. If you eliminate primaries from the provisions of this bill you have not scratched the surface of about 75 or 80 percent of the wrongs which are still in existence.

I would be in favor and I am in favor of making the fence around the relief worker and the P. W. A. worker so stout and so strong that it would make anybody afraid to violate any of its provisions. I do not care if you make it a penitentiary offense for a man to ask a relief worker who the candidates are when election day comes, but that is as far as the bill should have gone, preventing abuse of those on relief work.

You have heard a great deal of talk here about dictatorship and Hitlerism, but today you are proposing to reach out to millions of people who have never been sought to be touched by the Federal Government in the last 150 years and to gag them and handcuff them in the exercise of their political rights. This bill not only goes further than covering relief workers—and you can make that fence as stout as you please and I will support it—but you go into numerous other fields which I cannot support.

You include any man acting in a supervisory capacity who is receiving any salary, in whole or in part, provided by the Federal Government. Now, where are you States' rights boys who have been talking about the Federal Government reaching into the States? You have thousands of employees in the United States who have what are considered to be State jobs, but, incidentally, a part of the year they work on a Federal road program, or something of that sort, that has Federal money in it. This would include every such State employee in the 48 States of the Union. It would include the teachers of universities and colleges and of high schools who receive any pay under the Smith-Hughes Act, down even to the janitor, and he would be violating the law if he tacked up cards for you for 50 cents on the telephone poles down the street. I do not know how you would hold an election in the rural precincts, because even the men who are drawing small checks in measuring land in soil erosion would be included, and such a man could not act as a challenger for his party in an election. Yes; it goes that far, debate it or discuss it all you will, because nobody is going to deny that. It would include the man in a local town hauling sand to build a local post office if an election happened at that time. It includes collectors of internal revenue, United States judges, United States attorneys, and, in fact, a great host of people that have never heretofore been considered anything except State employees.

Let me tell you the most asinine thing proposed in here. You leave Members of Congress open to go down and butt into every State race, city race, county race, judicial race, or sheriff race without penalty, but you say to all this vast number of State employees, who are State employees drawing the major portion of their money from the State, that you shall not have a word to say about our election. Is not that a poor position for us to assume in this matter? Why not put ourselves in the same position? You say by your act that we can butt into anybody's race, not only in our State but in anybody else's State, but the State employee cannot open his mouth.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. CREAL. I shall offer an amendment at the proper time to strike out words which are the most dangerous provision in this bill and the widest invasion of State rights ever proposed, where it says that any employee in a supervisory capacity who draws his money in whole or in part, and so forth. If you will strike that out and make it apply strictly to the Federal Government, then the Federal Government will be regulating its Federal employees; otherwise the State is attempting to regulate city, county, and State employees because they happen to have a mite or two of Federal money connected with the work they are doing. That is not fair. It is the greatest invasion of States' rights ever proposed in a quarter of a century. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am for the strongest and most stringent possible law that will remove politics from relief. I will say this for the majority members of the Committee on the Judiciary that with slight difference of opinion they agree with the minority members that we must have a strong and unequivocal law that will eliminate politics from relief and thus remove a stain from our national history that might well have caused the blush of shame to come to the face of the Nation.

With the advent of relief as a national policy there arose quite naturally the temptation to use it as a political weapon and for private graft. In every State in the Union political scavengers preyed upon the helpless victims of the so-called depression in an effort to carry elections which hung in the balance to be decided by the corrupt control of the relief vote. From all over the country came the report that in the November elections of 1934, 1936, and 1938, Democratic politicians appealed to persons on relief rolls to vote for the Democratic candidates, particularly those who were candidates for Congress, making such appeals as: "Do not bite the hand that feeds you. The President is feeding you."

No blacker stain, in my opinion, could besmirch the record of a party or administration than the infamy of preying upon the hunger, misery, and destitution of the people for political purposes at the expense of the Public Treasury.

In every city in the United States the corrupt political boss employed his power over those on relief to bolster his waning political regime and win elections for his party. Venal political scavengers organized so-called political clubs composed largely of those on relief who regularly as pay day came were forced to contribute to these corrupt political vultures either to promote political campaigns or enrich their own coffers from the pittance which the Government provided presumably to feed hungry children and men and women made destitute by the bungling experiments of the New Deal in government. No such shameful depravity was ever before exhibited in the political history of this country or any other.

About three score years ago Boss Tweed made himself the symbol of political depravity for all time, but even Boss Tweed never took the food out of the mouths of little children to strengthen his political power. Tom Pendergast in Kansas City set an all-time record of political corruption and election theft but he never robbed babies of their food to oil his political machine as the devotees of the New Dealer have done with the helpless victims of the Roosevelt recession who were forced by these political charlatans to dig up dues and contributions from their meager earnings by these liberal grafters who cared more about electing New Dealers than they did for the welfare and comfort of the victims of unemployment.

Now, if this Congress means it, it can put an everlasting end to this sort of corruption and graft. There has been a vast amount of misinformation about this bill and the House Judiciary Committee. It was said we butchered the Hatch bill. The original Hatch bill as it came to the House Judiciary Committee made it unlawful to solicit political contributions from those on relief. The House Judiciary Committee strengthened it by amending it so it is not only unlawful to solicit contributions but also unlawful to receive even voluntary contributions from those on relief. This will prevent anyone from financing any political campaign with contributions from those on relief which so far has been the major offense in the political aspect of this question.

I am willing and anxious, too, to go along with those who would prevent those on relief and those particularly administering relief from political activity, and as far as that goes, I am willing to prevent Federal officeholders from being members of nominating conventions. That is largely a matter for the majority to settle. We Republicans cannot nominate anybody by using Federal officeholders because there are not enough scarcely to settle a tie.

I urge with all the force at my command the passage of a law with plenty of teeth in it so that we may really eliminate politics from relief. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, the Judiciary Committee has given a great deal of consideration to this bill, and in view of the fact that a tremendous amount of legislation has been before that committee of great importance, I feel that the committee has reported this bill to the House as expeditiously as possible under the circumstances.

This bill now represents the well-considered views and judgment of the Judiciary Committee and was reported to the House unanimously by the committee. A great deal has been said about delay in the consideration of this bill. You have read about that in the newspapers. We also have been accused of pulling some of the teeth from this bill, but I submit that at all times, both the minority and the majority members have approached this problem with the utmost fairness and with a sincere desire to achieve the objectives of the author of this bill.

We did, however, believe that there were some provisions in the bill that were unreasonable, and we have attempted to amend the bill so as to make it conform to reason and sanity, and yet retain the major objectives of the bill. The first section of the bill makes it unlawful for anyone to intimidate, coerce, or threaten any person to vote for or against a person in a national election. Section 2 is a controversial section and the committee, believing, of course, that it had no right to deprive a person the right to vote as he choose, believing that was inherent and guaranteed under the Constitution, struck out the words "vote as he may choose" in lines 18 and 19, page 2, and added the words "participate in the activities of a political party." The purpose of that was to make this law conform to the civil-service regulations. The civil-service rule 1 provides that no one in the executive civil service shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. That has been interpreted as follows by the Civil Service Commission: That the political-activity rule applies in its entirety to all employees occupying classified positions regardless of whether their status was acquired as a result of a competitive examination, classification by statute or classification by Executive order, but it provides that only the first sentence of the rule applies to Presidential appointees, and incumbents of executive positions and other nonclassified positions.

The committee, in its judgment, did not feel that it ought to subject those persons covered by section 2 of this act to any more stringent rule than those unclassified persons under the civil-service rule. I am sure that it was the purpose of the author of this bill merely to make the civil-service ruling applicable to persons who are not classified, and who are not embraced by the civil service, and we have done that by the amendment which we have made to section 2.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. Yes.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Many of the complaints against political activities were made regarding the primary elections in the State of Kentucky. It seems to me that the language of section 2 would not prevent the same things from happening in a primary election in Pennsylvania or Kentucky because a primary election is not regarded as an election, and nothing in this bill would prevent employing the same tactics in a primary election in any State.

Mr. HEALEY. In my judgment, this bill applies to elections, as the text reads.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. HEALEY. In section 9 of the bill, in the judgment of the committee, this would apply to Cabinet members, to clerks and secretaries of Members of Congress, and apply to all persons who are embraced in the Government service. I do not believe either Republicans or Democrats desire to extend such a stringent rule to the so-called policy-making persons present in any administration. If a Republican administration comes into power again, there are certain policy-making people it will embrace in its administration, and I know the Republicans believe that such persons ought to be permitted to defend the administration, to make speeches over the radio and on the public platform, and, therefore, it seems to me that the Committee on the Judiciary acted with reason and sense, and we have now presented a bill that the House ought to support. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that we are considering this bill from a nonpartisan point of view. It was introduced by a Democrat in the Senate and is sponsored in the House by a Democrat from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], a distinguished and able Member of the House. However, we have had a rather sad spectacle in the House, where we find some Members of the majority party, not the leaders of the party or a majority of the Democratic Party, conducting a filibuster to prevent even the consideration of this bill which has for its sole purpose the purifying of politics and the cleaning of the Augean stables of graft, corruption, and political coercion of those unfortunate and needy Americans who are on relief rolls, and to stop the playing of politics with human misery by politicians who have been using that method to keep themselves in office. It is enough to make the angels weep. This bill with teeth in it is directed at all political ghouls and vampires who exploit the needy and obtain funds of those on relief. This legislation as far as I know is not opposed by any single group in America. As the bill before us is written without the Dempsey amendment, it is worse than no bill at all. The teeth have been taken out of the bill and it is utterly useless in its present form. But with the Dempsey amendment, I know of no single organization in America that would oppose it except the Communists and Workers Alliance. I hold in my hand a letter from the National Grange, of which I am a member, approving the Dempsey amendment. I believe this Grange letter has been issued to every Member of the House. It reads as follows:

> The Hatch bill strikes at an ancient evil and proposes a reform that is long overdue. In a word, the aim of this measure is to protect the sanctity of the ballot and to safeguard the right of free elections. It must be agreed by all fair-minded people that any party that cannot win an election without the contribution and electioneering of those who have been placed on the public pay roll does not deserve to win. Since the Dempsey amendment exempts those holding policy-making positions, it must be regarded as fair and workable.

That is the endorsement of the National Grange, a great nonpartisan farm organization.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a brief question.

Mr. COCHRAN. What is the Dempsey amendment? Is it this part that is stricken out on page 5?

Mr. FISH. Yes; on page 5, section 2.

Mr. COCHRAN. "All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects."

Mr. FISH. Particularly on page 3.

Mr. COCHRAN. There is nothing stricken out on page 3 of the bill I have before me. We are considering Senate bill 1871, are we not?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] on last Monday introduced the amendment that he proposes to offer.

Mr. FISH. I have the Dempsey amendments right here. I can give them to the gentleman, but I have not got time to talk about them in 5 minutes.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Page 9276 of the RECORD contains the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. COCHRAN. What does the gentleman think about this amendment on page 5, which strikes out the language "all such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns"?

Mr. FISH. I would rather discuss that when it is reached in the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. That is stricken out. Does the gentleman object to that being stricken out?

Mr. FISH. I think that ought to be stricken out.

Mr. COCHRAN. But does not the gentleman feel that that language would be a violation of the right of expression in the Bill of Rights?

Mr. FISH. No; I do not think so at all. I think that applies to the civil service as well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. FISH. I believe the main purpose of this bill, the one that we are all primarily interested in, is preserving a free ballot. Our free institutions today by a free people under a free ballot is being attacked more than ever. Our very form of parliamentary and representative government is more under attack than ever before. We are told from abroad that popular government and democracy have failed. Unless we pass legislation of this kind, upholding a free ballot and our free institutions and thereby our representative form of government, then, gentlemen, it is the beginning of the end of free institutions, and you will soon have some form of dictatorial government in this country. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighteen Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, we now have in this Nation a government by minorities—high-pressure groups. We are fast forming the bad habit of legislating by label.

The title of this bill is "to prevent pernicious political activities." Every one of us is for that slogan or label. I challenge any man to dispute, from the record, my statement that there is no difference whatsoever between the proponents of the so-called Dempsey amendment and the Committee on the Judiciary that even touches the hem of the garment of any pernicious activity. What I submit is that there is outlawed in the committee bill every single pernicious activity which has been damned on this floor or which has caused shame in any State in this Union.

Section 1 interdicts coercion, threats, and intimidation of any person with reference to his vote.

Section 2 interdicts the use of official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting an election.

Section 3 interdicts bribery by promise of employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit in exchange for political activity or vote.

Section 4 interdicts the deprivation of employment because of race, creed, color, political activity, or vote.

Section 5 interdicts the solicitation or reception of contributions from anyone on relief or W. P. A. roll.

Section 6 interdicts furnishing or receiving lists of names of persons on relief, for political purposes.

Section 7 interdicts the use of money or authority from relief, W. P. A., or P. W. A. appropriations for the purpose of interfering with, restraining, or coercing a vote.

Section 8 is the penalty clause, fixing a maximum punishment of $1,000 fine and/or imprisonment for not more than a year.

Section 9 forbids anyone in an administrative or advisory capacity to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election. Sections 10 and 11, the concluding sections, are of no substantive effect. So I submit that the only difference in the world—and I want you to listen to this—the only difference in the world between the committee bill and the so-called Dempsey amendment is that the Dempsey amendment, at its core, does this: It adds only that no man employed in the executive branch of this Government may take an active part in a political campaign or in political management. Is that pernicious activity? Of course, it may degenerate into that, but if so, it is punishable both by expulsion from his office and also by fine and imprisonment. But it is not per se pernicious. I ask any man to say that it is. I will eat my hat and buy him a new one if any man has the nerve to say so, because it is not so. The foundation stone of this Government is the free and untrammeled exercise by free men in our democracy of their right to participate in their Government. [Applause.] The mere fact that a man may be in public office does not divest him of his citizenship. I am standing upon that high principle, that holy ground, and our "government of the people, by the people, for the people" will perish from the earth if we stand elsewhere. From time immemorial every Republican and every single one of us Democrats has so proclaimed. We have that right, and the mere fact that in a few instances, in a few States there have been abuses of that right does not make participation in government pernicious political activity.

There may have been isolated cases of corruption in some States in the Works Progress Administration but I am sure that in most of the States that great organization has functioned as it has in Alabama, under splendid, clean, and efficient leadership, and without a semblance of the questionable, much less rotten.

Similarly, Alabama and most of her sister States have always had, now have, and will have as long as they endure, officials of a type too high to stoop to any pernicious activity, with or without law.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am happy to yield to my distinguished friend from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. I agree with the gentleman that section 9 as passed by the Senate goes way beyond reasonable bounds, but I ask the gentleman by whom is section 9 to be enforced even if amended as proposed by the gentleman from New Mexico?

Mr. HOBBS. It is, of course, nothing but a stump speech, and nobody expects it to be enforced. It could not be even if it were constitutional.

The mud sill, the foundation, upon which the argument for this Dempsey amendment is based is: For 50 years the Civil Service has interdicted political activity by civil-service employees.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBBS. Those under civil service are career men and cannot be fired. They "take the veil" in exchange for insurance against separation from the pay roll. That is perfectly right, and a fair quid pro quo. Give all other Federal employees similar assurance, and they should also "take the veil", but without that quid pro quo they should not be compelled to surrender their constitutional rights of liberty and free speech. [Applause.]

I realize that everyone is for the principle which is emblazoned on the pennant flying at the masthead of this finely intentioned bill, but I challenge anyone to give me any good reason for insistence upon the heart and core of the Dempsey amendment. I wait for an answer in the succeeding debate. It will not be made; it cannot be made; there is none, and I hope, therefore, that this House will honor itself by forgetting the billingsgate by eschewing politics, and that the membership will support the Judiciary Committee, which, for 3 months, has labored faithfully to bring you this bill that will correct the evils which in rare instances have afflicted us, and of which in years to come you may be proud. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. For a brief question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I was going to make an observation relative to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

My answer to the gentleman from Alabama would be that despite the high ground taken by members of the major political parties heretofore, that up to 1932 there never has been any such war chest with which to influence the campaign; and, secondly, the perpetuation in office of hundreds of thousands of employees who have an interest in continuing the administration in power, in my judgment, is a somewhat pernicious political activity, in spite of the fine idealism that has been expressed on the floor.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I cannot yield further; I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman, Congress has dodged the issue of preventing pernicious political activities long enough. The passage of this legislation has been withheld not only to the detriment of the taxpayers of this country—those who are required to pay for the extravagant use of Federal funds—but to the discomfort and deprivation of those for whom such funds were intended. More than that, the withholding of this kind of legislation has been most damaging to the fundamentals of democracy itself.

Let me say at the outset that I favor the Hatch bill as it came from the Senate. I am in favor of putting all of the teeth back into this measure that were taken out by the House committee. I shall support Congressman DEMPSEY's amendments to the House bill which will restore the essential and effective provisions of the Senate measure.

Petty politics have been played more or less in the affairs of our Government for many years. But in recent years and months we have had the rank disclosure of persons in high places and in positions of authority, who have not only exercised their influence, but have manipulated the use of public funds, to foster their own political ambitions.

During the past few years the Federal Government, by reason of, and in the name of emergency, has expended billions of dollars on behalf of our needy people and to provide employment for them, in an effort to meet or overcome our unfortunate economic situation. The manner in which these funds have been administered and expended in many cases has become a shame and a disgrace upon the Government itself. I do not say that the expenditure has been extravagant in all instances, but I know and you know that in far too many cases the best interests of government and people have been overlooked. Far too often taxpayers' funds have been used and distributed on the basis of political pressure, rather than for the well-being of those for whom the money was intended.

One of the greatest crimes committed these days is that of permitting funds intended to provide food, clothing, and shelter for the ill-clothed and undernourished people of our country to be extravagantly used or wasted by those who put petty politics above public interest. If the billions of dollars that have been appropriated by Congress for the needy and underprivileged during the past few years had been efficiently and economically administered and distributed we would not have the suffering which exists throughout our country today.

It is unnecessary for me to point out this afternoon the disgraceful manner in which public funds have been used in various places. There has been going on throughout the length and breadth of this country a system of racketeering that is incomprehensible and indefensible. State after State, and community after community have reported the manner in which politically appointed parasites have preyed on the Public Treasury. All to the detriment and suffering of those people for whom these funds were intended. This situation is not confined to one State or in any one section of the country. We find it in New York, Ohio, Kentucky, New Mexico, and Louisiana, as well as in other parts of the United States. Why in the world should the American people permit such a shameful condition in the use of our public funds?

We also have another situation which has developed during the past few years that makes the passage of this legislation very important as well as imperative. Attention has been called many times to the great growth of bureaucracy that has been built up like a mushroom in this country during the past decade, and especially in the last 6 years. We have created bureaus and commissions in the name of emergency, and have given them power and authority beyond all expectations. We have added group after group of employees. The policy of this Congress is to increase these bureaus as well as the number of employees, rather than to decrease them. In 1933, we had 563,000 Federal employees, of which 83 percent were under competitive civil service. Today we have approximately 900,000 Federal employees, 300,000 of whom secured their positions because of political patronage. Most of the jobs under the various commissions and bureaus that were created by Congress were exempted from a civil-service merit system. These employees may or may not be qualified for their places, but their chief qualification for the appointment is their particular political affiliation.

If this Congress continues its present practice, we are going to foster and approve the most gigantic political machine that is known in any nation anywhere. This bill will prevent those who are appointed to positions under the Federal Government from taking an active part in the management of political campaigns or engaging in them actively. If they do take such part and active interest they will lose their jobs.

We have just experienced and are still experiencing, so far as that is concerned, a disgraceful example of the abuse of political patronage by the Pendergast machine in Kansas City, Mo. That example alone ought to convince anyone—in Congress or out of Congress—of the dire necessity for legislation of this kind.

Members of Congress, I just do not believe we can make this legislation too strong. The time has come—yea, long past due—when this thing must be stopped. Let us do it now, once and for all. Let us see to it that each and every individual who has anything to do with the disbursement or administration of public funds shall have nothing to do concerning the appointment or election of any individual to public office. When you permit the use of public funds, as well as political appointments, to influence and control the elections of individuals to high places, who are to direct the policies and affairs of our Government—at that time you are striking at the very foundation of democracy itself. This Congress still has a chance to prevent the American Government from being controlled by the corruption of a spoils system. Does it have the courage to do it? [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am pleased to yield to my distinguished friend on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman and appreciate the courtesy which is necessary in order that I might reply to my friend the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], who said he was replying to me.

I point out to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois that this bill absolutely outlaws the use of any money whatsoever to influence elections, and also the use of official authority. His observation therefore is certainly without point.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the statements which have been made by various Members that the Judiciary Committee have worked long and toiled faithfully on the Hatch bill.

This bill, with proper amendments, which seeks to prevent pernicious political activities, should be passed in this House without a dissenting vote. The general provisions of this measure are sound. This proposed legislation seeks only to make certain the inherent right of every citizen of our land of the freedom of the ballot and his or her right to vote as they may elect without interference from illicit political manipulators. This bill makes ample provision for punishment to all violators of the act.

I am convinced that legislation cannot be made too strong in this particular. Every safeguard must be thrown around our people and they must be made secure in that inalienable right to vote, and to vote as they may desire. If and when the sanctity and the sacredness of the ballot is discarded and the safeguards are removed therefrom, then our form of government will fail. The freedom and the sanctity of the ballot is quite essential and is equally important as our freedom of speech and of the press which is guaranteed to all of our people, and that element is equally important and marches hand in hand with our right of freedom in religious worship.

When we consider the question of pernicious political activities, as used in the pending measure, we are constrained to view with great alarm the growing practice of asserting political influence upon our unfortunate people who are working upon the W. P. A. and those who are on the relief rolls in our country; this character of political manipulation is an unfair, unprecedented, and unwarranted effort to destroy the free right of those individual citizens, who are good Americans, to cast their vote as they may desire, and in the manner of their own selection—which right is positively guaranteed to all our citizens who possess the required legal qualifications to so vote. However, under the conditions which now exist in our country, many of our people, through no fault of their own, but wholly by reason of circumstances beyond their control, are compelled to work on the W. P. A., or they are compelled to accept relief in order to sustain themselves and their families, and by reason of that misfortune which has overtaken them, will any Member of this House, or will any American citizen, say that man, or that woman, should not have a safeguard thrown about them for their protection, and that they should not have the free and unrestrained right to vote, and to vote as he or she may elect?

Mr. Chairman, the right to vote and to vote as a free man, without intimidation, coercion, threats, or restraint—and to vote as the dictates of his or her own conscience may direct—is an American right. That right is coupled with the right of citizenship, and it is the inherent right extended to every citizen of our Nation, who is otherwise duly qualified to exercise that right. The franchise of our people and the privilege of exercising the same is not extended to any particular party, but it is extended to our people regardless of their political affiliations and belief and it is granted to all of our people regardless of the party with which they have become affiliated or the party or candidates for which they may desire to cast their vote. This is the undeniable right of every citizen of our Nation.

Thomas Jefferson, one of our great Presidents and one of our outstanding statesmen, in his inaugural address in 1801, said:

> Equal and exact justice to all men, of whatever state or persuasion, religious or political.

Therefore, the unfortunates of our country—those who are unemployed, those who are working on the W. P. A. and those who are the recipients of direct relief—are entitled to the same and equal freedom of the ballot as is extended to every other American citizen; that is an inherent right which is guaranteed to them.

Within the last few years, and since the Nation's relief agencies have been centralized in Washington, and vast numbers of administrators, supervisors, agents, inspectors, office employees, and white-collared political manipulators have been employed and engaged in the administration of the affairs of our unfortunate people, practically all of whom are not entitled to relief of any kind, we have heard from the lips of our people who are working on the W. P. A., and those are receiving direct relief, that intimidation, threats, and coercion have been exerted upon them respecting their vote at our elections. That in many instances the threat has been made that if the worker, or the recipient of direct relief, did not vote for the party, or the candidates, as requested the worker would be immediately discharged from the W. P. A. and the recipient of direct relief would not receive further assistance. So many instances have been recorded, since the establishment of the Director of Relief in our Capital, that after the general elections have been held and the local supervisors of relief were dissatisfied with the result, or the suspicion of the supervisor was aroused that some of the men under his supervision did not vote in the manner and form he desired, and those unfortunate men were ruthlessly discharged from their job on the W. P. A., and those who were receiving direct relief were refused further assistance.

Quite a large number of instances have been reported that the W. P. A. supervisor stood just outside of the room in which the election was then being held, and with his book in his hand he gave to these unfortunate men and women the last word of instruction and his last expression of intimidation "to vote the straight ticket or the voter need not come to work the next morning." In many instances, where voting machines were used, the W. P. A. workers, and those receiving relief, were falsely told that the supervisor who stood on the outside of the polling place could positively tell by the ring of the bell how the voter was voting and whether the voter was following the last-minute instructions given to him before entering the booth to cast his ballot. The relief rolls have been filled to capacity in many places before the election and the number greatly reduced after the election was over, and in many instances, wholesale discharges of W. P. A. workers were made immediately after the election day. All of these things have been done in the past respecting our own citizens and their right to vote as they may desire, Mr. Chairman. And many of our own citizens, who were working on the W. P. A., or who were receiving direct relief, were discharged from their work or their allowance was discontinued because they sought to exercise their legal and their God-given right to vote as they please, and they were made hungry and their families were made to suffer because of it. This practice among our unfortunate people is wholly un-American and is unthinkable. Such an unholy procedure must be stopped, and the passage of the Hatch bill will provide the machinery by which our prosecuting officials will be able to aid in stopping this unlawful thwarting of the will of our people.

Mr. Chairman, can it be that we should continue to have two distinct classes of citizens on election day? The one class would be composed of those people who are not on relief in any form, who would have the perfect right to go to the polls and cast their vote as they may desire, and without any interference from any person whomsoever. And, the other class would consist of the poor and the unfortunate people—those who are forced to work on the W. P. A. and those who are drawing direct relief—who would be subject to force, threats, restraint, and intimidation and who would be made slaves on election day—whose freedom at the ballot box would have been taken away and they required to vote according to the will of their supervisor or boss, who would be their master and their individual rights as Americans would have been terminated.

No; I am confident we will have but one class of American citizens and voters on election day, and these shall be equal in every respect; they shall possess that freedom which is guaranteed to every citizen at the ballot box; all of our people, regardless of what their economic conditions may be, shall have the right to vote in the future, if this bill is passed, without threats, coercion, or restraint, and our people will have the right to vote freely and as he or she may choose for the party and the candidates of their own selection.

The questions involved in the passage of this measure are nonpolitical. This law, if and when it is passed, will apply equally to all political parties and the members thereof; this law will forbid the debauching, or the attempt to debauch, the freedom of our electors to vote as they may choose regardless of their state or station. That is truly the American way.

Let us measure this righteous legislation, which is proposed, with the policy of soundness; let us strengthen the proposed bill that it will express the American vision of equality—that the freedom of the ballot may be forever preserved and the inherent right of every American citizen to vote as he or she may elect shall be forever retained. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN].

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, this bill, to my mind, presents a challenge to our system of free elections and the free choice of elective holders of Federal Government offices. This bill should be approached in no narrow, partisan spirit, but in the spirit of Americanism in an endeavor to correct evils in our system which have been present not only under Democratic administrations perhaps, but also under Republican administrations. I regret very much that some of my good friends on the minority side of the aisle have seen fit to attempt to turn this debate into an effort to condemn the Democratic Party. All of us who remember political campaigns in the past when the Republican Party was in power can vividly recall abuses which would have been touched and affected by the bill now under consideration. This situation reminds me of the fellow who had a leaky roof on his house. When his neighbors asked him why he did not repair it, he said: "Well, when it is not raining I do not need to fix it, and when it is raining I cannot fix it." In other words, when the party in power takes advantage of situations which are condemned and affected by this bill it does not desire to correct those situations. It is interesting to note in passing, and perhaps significant, that throughout all the years of our history when these conditions existed under Republican rule no such bill as this was presented to the Congress for its consideration and action.

So when my good friends condemn the Democratic Party, or attempt to do so, it is well to call to their attention the fact that this bill is being presented by a Democratic committee under a Democratic administration. I am not going to attempt to discuss the bill in all its details at this time, because that has already been done on the floor of the House.

Mr. Chairman, may I, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, pay my respects to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY], chairman of the subcommittee which brought this bill out, and to all the members of the committee who acted in a most nonpartisan manner? May I say further, and I am sure I divulge no secret, that at the committee meeting I propounded the inquiry whether or not a vote to report this bill, after our debate and consideration of it in committee, bound the members to vote for it without amendment on the floor, and that it was agreed by the committee that it did not. I note that the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] on the minority side nods approval of my statement. I asked in committee if a vote in favor of reporting the bill there precluded the offering of amendments on the floor of the House, and it was unanimously agreed by the membership it did not. Therefore, at the proper time I am going to propose an amendment which will be in accord with the Dempsey amendment that will be later offered. The amendment I intend to propose will be an amendment to section 2, lines 18, 19, and 20, and will have the effect of striking out the words "or to participate in the activities of a political party." This amendment, if adopted, will have the effect of strengthening this bill and putting it in the shape in which I, as one Member of this House, viewing it impartially and from a nonpartisan standpoint, believe it should be.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, much has been said by the members of the Judiciary Committee about how well they are protecting the people of this country by eliminating the enforced extraction of wages from W. P. A. employees, but may I say that their amendment provides, not as we did in the relief bill, that funds from that bill may not be used for political purposes, but that money cannot be extracted from a relief worker, which means a certified worker. The Work Projects Administration will tell you that the other workers are considered as nonrelief workers. This includes office boys, stenographers, and those who are appointed without being certified. If the committee amendment stays in the bill, it means that entire organization will be subject to being chiseled out of money that these workers have honestly earned. It is true that many of these people, including officials of the W. P. A., are receiving a higher wage than they ever received in their lives from private industry. If they are getting too much money it is my contention that their salaries should be reduced in order that additional workers may be employed. [Applause.]

May I say something now about pernicious political activities? The gentleman from Alabama thinks the amendment which the committee has offered will cure pernicious political activities. Under the committee's amendment a Federal attorney may go out and make a political speech during a campaign, a patriotic speech, if you please, with the American flag waving in one hand, and in the other hand a bunch of indictments, and the hand that is waving the indictments is the closer one to his heart. It also constitutes a political threat. Is that what you want here? Do you want people who have been indicted, threatened, and coerced, as they have been in the past? Do we want a supervisor on W. P. A. projects taking part in political campaigns and putting additional trucks on the job in name only in order that he may pay himself back for the money extracted from him by politicians?

It is not my purpose today to go into the laundry business and do any laundering of filthy political linen. This matter should be treated as a nonpartisan measure, and the bill should be passed with the elimination of certain committee amendments and with the insertion of the so-called Dempsey amendment, which I propose to offer. May I say something in reply to the gentleman who spoke about the fact that soil conservation farmers could be considered as receiving a salary from the Government?

I am sure the gentleman would not make that statement to the farmers of his district, because they know better. A soil-conservation check is not for services rendered the Government, but for conserving land and, in many cases, for taking land out of production. In other words, the farmers are practically eliminating a certain part of their capital in the way of acreage and in return for that the Federal Government compensates them. Nobody could say, by the wildest stretch of the imagination, that type of person could be included within the definition of this bill.

Mr. CREAL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I cannot yield now. I would have been glad to yield to the gentlemen who are so anxious to have me yield now, but they were so busy filibustering when I spoke previously I did not have sufficient time to explain the bill. I want to take this brief time to do so.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I propose to offer will strike out all of section 9. On Monday last I placed in the RECORD the amendment I will offer, which clarifies that part of the bill about which there is some doubt. There has not been any doubt in an intelligent person's mind about a member of the legislative branch of this Government not being affected so far as political activity is concerned nor his force of employees being affected. That, of course, has been charged in order to get some votes against this bill.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, the Hatch bill, S. 1871, is at least a step in the right direction, although there may be some question about certain of its provisions. In some respects the bill should be amended and strengthened.

This proposed legislation is an attempt to remedy conditions recently found to exist in the administration of such governmental activities as the W. P. A. Certainly no one can condone the use of the taxpayers' money to promote the candidacy of any person. Such conduct is reprehensible and constitutes a real threat to democratic government. The bill purports to be one "to prevent pernicious political activities." It recognizes that when certain persons or groups are the recipients of bounties or favors from the Government that they become easy prey for the demagogues. As the English people used to say, "Whoever takes the King's money is the King's man." This bill will limit and restrict pernicious political activities. Perhaps it would be safer to say that it will drive these activities under cover. However, it is a rather superficial attempt to deal with a problem without removing the cause of it. If we seek to really prevent pernicious political activities, we must take more heroic and fundamental steps than are provided in this measure.

By pernicious political activities we mean those activities by means of which the democratic processes of a free government are used in the aid of some selfish program and against the general welfare. Unfortunately for many years we have been building up a condition in America which makes that kind of politics inevitable. Some steps additional to this bill must be taken before there will be possible that purity of motive, that personal unselfishness, that determination to act only for the good of the Nation, which is necessary for the maintenance of a representative government. These additional steps are: First, the establishment of a genuine civil-service system; second, the simplification and decentralization of government; third, the elimination of large subsidies and favors now being given to various groups of our population.

The ease with which a powerful political machine may be built on political patronage has been demonstrated in many countries, and very forcibly in our own. It is true we have made some progress in the matter of civil service. But a real, genuine merit system does not yet exist in this country. It would be a great step toward efficiency and economy in government if an effective bar could be placed against the use of government jobs and money for the payment of political debts. The best way to prevent improper political activities on the part of Government employees is to give them positive assurance that their continuance in office depends upon the service they render to their Government and not upon their skill in corralling votes.

Many years ago, John C. Calhoun called attention to the inroads being made by the Federal Government in the powers of the States. He predicted that the power being taken from the States would be eventually lodged, not in Congress, but in the Executive department; that the Congress in thus belittling the States was at the same time belittling is own power and responsibilities. The melancholy truth of the prophecy of this great statesman is to be found in the enormous growth of bureaus in Washington. The maintenance of these great establishments with their thousands of employees is becoming a heavy burden on the taxpayers. However, that is not the most serious side of it. A great bureaucracy exercising its daily control over the lives of the people, soon comes to wield a tremendous political power. There is a constant demand for greater power, for greater privileges. Thus there is built up a favored governing class to the neglect of the interests of the people. The time is rapidly approaching when this great source of political activity must be broken up and the power returned to the States and the people.

No effort to prevent pernicious political activities will be a complete success that does not seriously consider the tremendous subsidies now being paid to various groups. Millions of citizens are now getting money in one form or another from the Federal Treasury. In fact, our overgrown Federal establishment accounts for only 17 percent of the total expenditures of Government. Much of the remainder goes in payment of huge benefits in all sections of the country. Not all of these payments are wrong. Some are often justified on the ground that other groups are also getting benefits and favors. The fact remains, however, that the system naturally lends itself to improper political activities. We will eventually learn that patriotism soon dies among a people who are taught to look upon their Government simply as a large grab bag.

The present situation undoubtedly makes necessary such legislation as this bill. It should be remembered, however, that the pernicious political activities which we all deplore are but symptoms of a disorder which is rapidly sapping the strength of our free institutions. We should begin an immediate return to the fundamentals of American Government and American life as charted in the Constitution—simple government with widely distributed political power and equality of opportunity and individual responsibility on the part of the citizen. When we do that, these pernicious political activities will rapidly disappear.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, we have before us Senate bill 1871, known as the Hatch bill, to prevent pernicious political activities.

Since March 4, 1933, under the present administration, there have been turned over to the present administration approximately $70,000,000,000. Billions and billions of this sum have been turned over to the President for so-called emergencies, for relief of various kinds to be expended by him and his subordinates as they desired. Unfortunately, billions of dollars have been used for political and partisan purposes to aid one faction of the Democratic Party to defeat the other faction, and to aid Democratic candidates to defeat Republican candidates in city, county, State, and National elections. A lot of this money has been used in efforts to defeat Democratic Members of the Senate and House and Governors of various States who were unwilling to follow the dictates of Mr. Roosevelt. The taxpayers' money has been used to make a most sordid record of intimidation, coercion, oppression, favoritism, and corruption, and to undermine the very foundations of our Government and the morals of our people. This money has been used to add nearly 500,000 useless officeholders and to create and maintain scores and scores of bureaus, commissions, and other Federal agencies.

The press of the Nation, the Republican Party, and millions of Democrats are demanding that these conditions be corrected, that the taxpayers' money no longer be used to intimidate, coerce, and corrupt our citizens, and that our Government be again restored to the people.

The great farm organization, the National Grange, on July 19, 1939, addressed a letter to each Member of the House urging the passage of the Hatch bill, S. 1871, and among others things, said:

> The Hatch bill strikes at an ancient evil, and proposes a reform that is long overdue. In a word, the aim of this measure is to protect the sanctity of the ballot and to safeguard the right of free elections.

It is a matter of common knowledge in almost every community of the Nation the taxpayers' money appropriated for W. P. A. was used to coerce and intimidate needy men, women, and children. Many of those in charge of this relief boldly insisted that voters change their party registration and vote for candidates favored by those in charge of the W. P. A., and if they refused they were denied W. P. A. work or were discharged. This same policy was practiced in almost every section of the country by those having charge of these billions spent by the various agencies of the Government to relieve the needy, the farmers, and other groups. It has developed into a powerful, corrupt, partisan, political machine. Tens of thousands of people receiving large salaries were rendering no service to the people. They were devoting their time in pernicious political activities. Something had to be done to meet this situation; and, as pointed out by the press, the National Grange, the Republican Party, and other groups, the Hatch bill solves this problem. If it is enforced it will restore the rule of the people. The taxpayers' money can no longer be used to coerce, intimidate, and corrupt the voters of the Nation. It will protect the sanctity of the ballot, safeguard our liberties, and insure free, honest, and clean elections. I regard it as the most important bill that we have had an opportunity to consider in many years, and it affords me very great pleasure to speak and vote for it.

Section 1 makes it unlawful for any person, whether he is an official or private citizen, to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or even attempt to threaten, intimidate, or coerce any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such person to vote or to vote as he may choose.

Section 2 makes it unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the results of the election of President, Vice President, or Member of the House and Senate. And it makes it unlawful for any such official to take an active part or manage any convention, primary, or general election. This will prevent any such officials from making speeches, being delegates, and from taking any active part in any primary, convention, or general election.

Section 3 makes it unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by any act of Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

Section 4 makes it unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any appropriation of Congress, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, in support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

Section 5 makes it unlawful for any person to solicit or be in any manner concerned in soliciting any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any person having any employment or office under any act of Congress.

Section 6 makes it unlawful for any person to furnish or disclose or aid or furnish any list of names of persons receiving any relief or compensation or any other benefits from the Government to any campaign manager, committee, or political candidate or party.

Section 7 provides that no part of any appropriation made by any act of Congress for work relief or otherwise to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public works shall be used upon any person for the purpose of interfering with, restraining, or coercing any person from exercising his right to vote in any election as he or she may desire.

Section 8 provides for a penalty for the violation of any of the provisions of the other seven sections of this act of imprisonment for not more than 1 year and a fine of not more than $1,000, or both.

Section 9 provides that it shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or of affecting the results thereof. Neither shall such person be permitted to take an active part in any political management of any political campaign, and if any such person should violate the provisions of section 9 such person shall at once be removed from office.

This act does not reach the President, Vice President, or Members of the House and Senate, or members of the Cabinet as to political activity. It applies to the great army of appointed officials. It does not apply to the officials elected by the people. It not only applies to Federal officeholders, but it applies to all appointed officeholders of the State, district, or county wherein part of the funds of the United States Government are used in carrying on the activity, and in paying a part of the compensation of such offices. For instance, it includes those officeholders who are administering the old-age pension in the county and State as the Federal Government puts up one-half of the money. It includes county and State health officials where the Federal Government puts up part of the money to carry on the health activity and pays any part of the salary of the officials. It applies to the construction of buildings, roads, bridges, and other work in which a part of the money for the construction is furnished by the Federal Government. Of course, this does not apply to the elective officers of any city, county, or State whose officers are elected by the people and no part of whose salaries are paid by the Federal Government by appropriations of the Federal Government. However, the sections as to intimidation and coercion do apply to everybody.

This measure will go far toward bringing about clean government in the Nation. It will remove the coercion, intimidation, and corruption that have been so manifest on every side for a number of years. There is nothing so important to a free people as to have honest, clean, and free elections.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY].

Mr. DREWRY. Mr. Chairman, I assume that every Member of this House is in favor of preventing pernicious political activities, whatever that phrase may mean. I assume also that every Member of this House, be he Republican or Democrat, is desirous of arranging our election laws so that every candidate may know that the elections are honestly conducted. With that in mind, I want to analyze very briefly this bill, Senate bill 1871, known as the Hatch bill. There seems to have been a great deal of confusion about this bill, judging by the debate and the statements that have been made on this floor.

There are 11 sections in this bill. Section 11 simply states that if any provision of this act is declared invalid the remainder of the act will not be affected thereby.

This leaves 10 sections. Of the 10 sections that are left in this bill, after eliminating section 11, this House has already passed upon 6. It is true that in the Emergency Appropriation Act that was approved by the President on June 30, 1939, those provisions were only temporary, that is, for a year, and this bill makes the same language permanent; but this House has already voted for six of the provisions in this bill.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREWRY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that section 3 is a part of the Corrupt Practices Act, which was passed many years ago.

Mr. DREWRY. I was coming to that, I may say to the gentleman.

In addition to the fact that you have already voted upon six sections of this bill before you and have given your approval to them, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania says, the Corrupt Practices Act, which has been in existence since 1925, contains the language that is in section 3 of this bill. This leaves, therefore, section 1, section 2, section 6, and section 7.

Sections 1 and 7, to my mind, although I may be wrong in my legal interpretation, mean virtually the same thing. Both of them use the word "coerce" and are intended to carry out the idea of not coercing anybody in the exercise of his right to vote. That is the purpose of both sections. If they are the expression of the same thing, that leaves section 1 and section 6 as the only remaining sections, together with section 2 to be considered.

Section 1 states that it shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce another in order to prevent him from voting, or for the purpose of attempting to influence his vote. No one could have any objection to that provision.

Section 6 states that it shall be unlawful for any person for political purposes to furnish or disclose a list of names of persons receiving compensations, employment, or benefits, and I suppose no one could object to that provision, although it would probably have no effect, as it could not be made effective.

This would leave to be considered the section that has caused most of the argument, section 2. Section 2 in its meaning is virtually the same as section 9 (a), which provides that there shall be no official authority used for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the election of certain candidates.

Now, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] has notified the House that he will offer an amendment, and that amendment the gentleman proposes to offer at page 4 to amend section 9 (a). My own idea about it is that it would make this bill better if it were offered to strike out section 9 (a) and section 2, his amendment covering both of them. His amendment provides:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

This proposed amendment covers the criticism made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] with reference to the action of the Judiciary Committee of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREWRY. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. How would that affect the selection of delegates to a national convention and national convention activities?

Mr. DREWRY. There are a great many things in this bill, I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, that I do not believe any court in the land could pass upon without a great deal of thought and study, and even then with a great deal of uncertainty on the part of the judges who are sitting. I cannot answer a great many questions that might be asked about the interpretation of the phraseology of the bill. That is impossible. I do not believe any court will ever be able to do it, but what I am trying to do is to show, as well as I can, analytically, what the purpose of the bill is. With that idea in mind I would say to the gentleman that I do not believe it would keep them from participating in political activities to the extent that the gentleman mentions.

I read from the bill:

All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

That answers your question right there. If they are allowed to express their opinion on all political subjects, they could certainly do that anywhere, any place, to anybody they might have in mind.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREWRY. Certainly, sir.

Mr. MOTT. If your last interpretation is correct, what is the meaning of the prohibition against taking part in a political campaign?

Mr. DREWRY. That is something the courts will have to construe under this bill. That is all I can answer.

Mr. MOTT. The language of the Dempsey amendment in that respect is rather ambiguous, in your opinion?

Mr. DREWRY. I think so. I think a great deal of the phraseology of this bill is ambiguous.

Mr. MOTT. Does not the gentleman think it would be better, if we wanted to make the prohibition contained in the Dempsey amendment effective, to follow the language of the prohibition in the civil-service law?

Mr. DREWRY. If the gentleman can make obscurity less obscure by offering that amendment, I would suggest he do so. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MOTT. I was asking the gentleman's opinion because he is an expert and has made a great study of the subject.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McLEAN].

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this bill and hope it will become law, and that when it is the law it will be observed. A law is no more effective than the spirit behind it, and unless the provisions of this bill are better observed than those in existing law enacted for similar purposes it will be absolutely ineffective.

The political activity of Federal employees makes little difference to me. I have survived, notwithstanding their concerted efforts against my reelection. Their opposition was one of the best arguments made in my behalf. It is a reflection upon the intelligence of the American people to assume that, given a large army of persons on the public pay roll, elections can be controlled against their better judgment. If that is the situation, we have come to a very decadent state in our public thinking.

I have said that it is to be hoped that when this bill becomes a law it will be enforced. In view of the political hypocrisy accompanying the appointment of postmasters, there should accompany the enactment of this bill a pledge of its enforcement. There has been much talk about placing first-class postmasters under the civil-service law and prohibiting their pernicious political activity. Ever since the present administration has been in power the appointment of postmasters under the merit system as the result of examination to determine their fitness has been advocated; in fact, the people have been told such procedure was being observed. Those of us who have watched the course of events know that the law, the regulations made pursuant thereto, and the high-sounding declarations of those in power have been honored more in their breach than in their observance.

It is a safe challenge to make that no person has been appointed a postmaster who has not been recommended by some person in authority who knew that his political affiliations were friendly to the party in power. Alleged examinations to determine the fitness of applicants have been conducted, but this is how it worked: Whenever opportunity offered, a postmaster was appointed under a temporary commission pending the time when an eligible list could be established as the result of one of these so-called examinations. These temporary appointments were made on recommendation of local agents of the party in power. After a period of some weeks or months the incumbent temporary postmaster would be given a number of credits because of his experience. This would place him in such a position on the eligible list as to justify his choice for the permanent appointment.

There have been cases where the rating of the politically sponsored, even under this program, did not rise to the point of eligibility. In such cases the appointment was often deferred and the incumbent allowed to continue under his temporary appointment, or a reexamination was provided to enable him to qualify. In such cases as have come to my attention where an eligible might have been appointed—often when they had attained the highest rating—their quest for appointment inevitably led to the dispenser of patronage of the party in power.

I am willing to admit that if opportunity offers for me to make appointments to public office, I would not overlook those individuals who have been friendly or helpful to me in attaining my own ambitions. I do not, however, seek any opportunity to use political patronage in any campaign with which I may be connected. Everybody knows the famous quotation of the French philosopher to the effect that "Gratitude is a lively sense of appreciation for favors about to be received," and that one given an office to fill with 10 candidates for appointment will very likely come up with ingratitude on the part of the successful candidate and enmity toward him on the part of the other 9.

My experience has been that the difficulties resulting from making appointments to public office outweigh the advantages. The efficiency of the public service should be the first consideration of a public official in making an appointment to public office, and public officials having appointments to make attain the best advantage for themselves by disregarding political considerations and appointing persons who are efficient and insisting upon the proper discharge of their duties. He who would serve his own political future would make appointments with the single consideration of the capacity of the appointee for the particular office to which he may be appointed, rather than to his ability as a propagandist or solicitor in work apart, and which must necessarily detract from the proper discharge of his official duties.

Efficient administration of government will merit more favorable consideration to a candidate for reelection than an army of officeholders seeking the perpetuation of themselves in office. The present method of the appointment of postmasters is the most hypocritical political activity of modern times and one which the Democratic Party cannot look upon with any degree of pride.

It was established many years ago that the merit system should control in the appointment of persons to public office, and that the political idea that "to the victor belongs the spoils" should no longer be the measure by which appointments to public office should be made. If that principle had been adhered to there would be no reason, and hence no demand, for this legislation. But the New Deal, under pretense of emergency, saw fit to disregard the merit system and to provide in all legislation adopted that in making appointments to public office the provisions of the civil-service laws should not apply. But for this there would be no occasion for the enactment of this legislation. It is my hope, however, that our action here today may be the means toward the elimination of the activity of officeholders from pernicious political activity. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DUNN].

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed, as much as any person in this House, to subjecting unfortunate people who are on relief to pay to any political party any sum from their miserable pittance. I do not know, although I have asked questions of Members of the House, whether this bill which we are now considering, or the Dempsey amendment, deprives people who are on relief of the right to speak their mind when it comes to politics. May I ask the acting chairman of the committee the question, Does this bill which we are now considering deprive those on relief of that right?

Mr. CELLER. No; it does not. He has a perfect right to express his opinions anywhere he wishes.

Mr. DUNN. Does the Dempsey amendment?

Mr. CELLER. The Dempsey amendment does not refer to section 5, it refers to section 9, which has nothing to do with that matter.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that if the amendment deprives anybody of the right to participate in politics it is un-American.

Mr. CELLER. The Dempsey amendment does do that, outside of W. P. A. workers.

Mr. DUNN. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

It has been stated that certain newspaper reporters intend to find out what Members supported and what Members voted against the Dempsey amendment when the teller vote is taken. If the Dempsey amendment deprives citizens who are employed by the Government of the right to participate in politics, I am opposed to the Dempsey amendment, and I want the nawspapermen to make the print big enough that a blind person can see it. I am one who believes that every man has a right to advocate the philosophy in which he believes without molestation whether it be communism, socialism, nazi-ism, fascism, Hebrewism, Catholicism, Protestantism, Buddhism, Confucianism, Mohamedanism, and so forth. I maintain that one of the fundamental principles of our Government is based on freedom of speech, and I hope the day will never come that it will be discontinued.

Any person working for the municipal, State, or Federal Government should not be interfered with, regardless of what political party he or she desires to support. Every person in our country, or in the world, should have the right to advocate the kind of government in which he or she believes and also the right to support for political office any person in whom they are interested, regardless of creed, nationality, race, or color. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, when Hitler went into power in Europe he did not get there behind a phalanx of cold steel. Neither did he march in with a brigade of machine guns. He did not rise to power through force. He used a very fine, clever campaign of propaganda that made him Chancelor in the German Government. After he became Chancelor he immediately set out to take politics out of government and issued an ultimatum that no government employee be permitted to take part in politics. Through a very cleverly devised propaganda organization and the orders that took politics out of government, he established for himself the iron hand of dictatorship that is now oppressing the people of Germany and is a threat to world peace.

The membership of this body was blackmailed by the newspapers of this Nation in a clever propaganda campaign which echoed the actions used by those who have established totalitarian governments in Europe. This campaign started over a year ago and has gained momentum to such an extent that this bill is now before this House, which is supposed to take politics out of government.

The provisions of this bill will take away from the American people that inherent right that was handed down to them by our founding fathers, sanctified by the blood of American patriots. If enacted into law, it will deprive the American people of the right to express their opinion on Government, the right to take part in politics, and is beyond a doubt the furthest step that has been taken in the history of this Nation toward a dictatorship. This Nation was born in politics. Through politics it has advanced to the highest state of civilization known to man. Might I be so bold as to say to you who are about to destroy our democracy that as long as you have Republicans and as long as you have Democrats you will have neither communism nor fascism. But when you eliminate politics from government you will eliminate parties. When you eliminate political parties, you have set up a totalitarian dictatorship in the place of the greatest Government on this earth, and God forbid that that should ever happen. We do not need fascism to fight communism. Neither do we need communism to fight fascism. What we need is a strong, militant democracy to fight both of these evils. The only way we are going to continue a democratic form of government is to fight both of these evils and keep as an integral part of democracy those two great parties, the Republican Party and the Democratic Party, and join together in the common fight in behalf of democracy and eliminate the other elements that are about to destroy a free people.

Sometime ago a certain thing happened on the floor of this House and is contained in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 29 of this year. A scurrilous, blasphemous, prevaricating letter was placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD wherein the Ontonagon Board of County Road Commissioners in my district notified a certain Member of this House and Colonel Harrington that I used the W. P. A. during the last campaign. I accepted his challenge and interviewed Colonel Harrington's organization and requested that they send investigators into my district and get the facts. The investigators went to my district and found the charges contained in this letter to be wholly unfounded and untrue. They did, however, find that the signers of this letter were themselves guilty of using W. P. A. funds, W. P. A. gasoline, and W. P. A. property for their own use and benefit in violation of the law to the tune of hundreds of dollars.

It is my understanding that they are offering to pay it back to the Government. They certainly should return that which they obtained illegally, but that should not prevent a prosecution in the courts of this Nation of those men guilty of misusing relief funds.

The waste, graft, and corruption that was rampant through local Republican officials was very cleverly used to besmirch the present administration. We should have more stringent enforcement of the laws that are now on the statute books to eliminate pernicious political activity instead of trying to shackle the American people by a monstrosity known as the Hatch bill.

The Government employees are just as honest, just as clean, just as high-minded, and just as much interested in Americanism and clean politics as you Members on the floor of this House. They are entitled to their rights as American citizens. The Government employees will insist on their rights as American citizens and will not peacefully submit to an abrogation of those rights.

I see beyond the provisions of this bill the somber specter of monopolistic price-fixing corporations reaching out for control of this Government again. If they ever obtain control as they did under the Republican regime, we will bid good-bye to democracy in this Nation. This is not a bill to eliminate pernicious activity but a bill to reestablish monopolies as the controlling power in the economic structure of this Nation.

The majority party should carry on in the interest of good government and in the interest of the great mass of people, protecting our democratic rights under the Constitution of the United States and not take away those rights from the people.

You may have force enough in this body with the solid Republican phalanx and a few renegade Democrats to place this bill on the statute books of the Nation but you will not have the power or the ability to enforce the unreasonable provisions of the bill, and a law that cannot be enforced is not a law in the eyes of free-thinking people. That was proven when prohibition was put into effect and then later wiped out by the will and the opinion of the people of this Nation. After all, public opinion is law in a free nation. Public opinion shall rule.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, this debate has been long and there has been complete discussion of the subject matter, but no one has gone into the genesis of the Hatch bill. Historical genesis ofttimes means much in legislation, because legislation is seldom offered to the Congress unless there is a specific reason suggesting the legislation. In the last Congress, when it was charged on the floor of the House and in the other body that the relief agencies were being prostituted for political purposes, the Senator from New Mexico, Senator HATCH, offered a resolution in the Senate to prevent such pernicious activities in the campaign of 1938. That resolution was defeated in the Senate, but as a sort of palliative or substitute there was set up an investigating committee to determine if and when relief funds or workers were being used for political purposes. That committee organized and was presumed to advise the Senate after the election as to what pernicious activities had been indulged in during the election. The result was to lock the barn after the horse was stolen so far as the 1938 election was concerned.

After the election was over the Sheppard committee made a thorough investigation, and as a result of that investigation the Hatch bill which is now before us was prepared. The bill passed the Senate unanimously, without a single dissenting vote. It came to the House, and in the ordinary course was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee, following its usual custom, proceeded to analyze the bill. It was reported favorably with a few amendments by the subcommittee to the full committee. Along about that time—and I am stating nothing excepting what has appeared in the press, I am divulging no committee secrets—two of our members were summoned to the White House, the acting chairman of the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee, and then we began to read much in the newspapers about the dehorning and the emasculating of the bill.

As a matter of fact, the committee did give consideration to and did place the amendments in the bill which appear today. Now, that was not a united committee. That was not a political committee vote, because there was some division, but those amendments were not all supported by all members of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Briefly, yes.

Mr. CELLER. I will say to the gentleman that the section 9 amendment, that appears in the bill today, was offered by one of the gentlemen on your own side of the aisle and was unanimously adopted by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MICHENER. I just want to take exception to the fact that it was unanimously adopted. Personally, I voted against it. I see at least one Member on the majority side whom I know voted against it.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. I know the gentleman always is fair and means to be fair on this occasion.

Mr. MICHENER. Surely I want to be fair.

Mr. HEALEY. I know he does not want to create an inference that is not based on fact.

Mr. MICHENER. No.

Mr. HEALEY. Now, as a matter of fact, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] has just stated, one amendment was offered by one of the gentlemen's own Republican colleagues.

Mr. MICHENER. Possibly that is true. To save time, I will concede for the sake of this argument that Republicans voted for some of the amendments and that some of the amendments were offered by Republicans. But I am one Republican who did not agree with all of those amendments.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. So that the bill comes to us today with those amendments. The bill, as it came from the Senate, was a drastic bill. The bill, as it came from the Senate, was undoubtedly written to perform a purpose, to do a job, to perform a function; and it does that job to the queen's taste. Now, there are some things in this bill as it came from the Senate that are a little more drastic than I would prefer, but the House bill as reported by the House Committee on the Judiciary and which the acting chairman of the committee is going to support, is perfectly harmless. You have taken away the things from the Senate bill that are potential, vitalizing, and effective. So that there is nothing much in the House bill, as suggested by the chairman of the Democratic National Congressional Committee, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DREWRY], who is always fair, who is always honest. He tells us that this bill, as we have presented it, does not accomplish much. He even thinks that with the Dempsey amendment it will not accomplish much. By defeating these amendments the bill can be restored to its effectiveness.

I wish it would accomplish more, and I think it would accomplish more as sent here as the Hatch bill by the Senate and without the Dempsey amendment. I would like to discuss all those amendments, but time prevents.

I am going to support section 9 of the Hatch bill. I shall support the Dempsey amendment if section 9 is mutilated, but I shall offer an amendment to perfect the Dempsey amendment. When that amendment is offered I hope you will give it attention. In substance it is this: The Dempsey amendment sets up just about what the Hatch bill does in the first part. Then it proceeds to exempt from the operation of the law certain classifications, beginning with No. 1 and going through No. 4. In No. 2 it exempts from this law "persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the Office of the President."

Now, it is undoubtedly the intention of Mr. DEMPSEY to include therein the President, his secretariat and other officers in the Executive Office; but he has forgotten that we passed the Reorganization Act; that the President has submitted to Congress two reorganization bills, and that those reorganization bills take under the Executive wing many activities. For instance, the Emergency Council, the Budget, and a number of other activities which will receive their compensation through appropriations made to the Executive Office. The Dempsey amendment would exempt those activities from this law.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. I take it that the gentleman is opposed to the Dempsey amendment?

Mr. MICHENER. I think the Dempsey amendment is a great deal better than section 9 with the committee amendment, but I think the Dempsey amendment can be improved upon, and I think the gentleman, when he understands it, will vote with me on that feature. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to listen carefully to this debate. I am of the same mind as I was in the beginning. I intend to vote for the bill. I intend to vote for the Dempsey amendment. [Applause.]

I just want to say a word about the partisan angle that has been injected into this. I hope very much that if this bill is passed, the Republican Party will not repeal it the first time they get into office, as they recently repealed, in the State of Michigan, the best civil-service system that State ever had, built up under Governor Murphy.

I feel this way about it: I think that the job of government is becoming more and more important in human life as time goes on. I think it is up to us to try to do the best we can to establish a truly efficient administration of government based on merit. That is the reason I am for this legislation.

Furthermore, I would like to be able to do my real job as a Congressman. Naturally, as long as people need work and as long as there is any chance that I can help them get it and be able to support their families I am going to try to help. But I would like to have more time to do my real job, and I am not going to be particularly worried if it is not possible for me to spend a lot of time on employment matters which I ought to be spending on things that are much more important to the Nation as a whole. I am convinced, furthermore, that there is the important consideration in matters of appointments that people be chosen on the basis of qualifications. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 8 minutes.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I have become so accustomed on the Judiciary Committee to seeing legislation reported unanimously that I was not surprised in the slightest degree when this measure, into which politics could very easily find its way, was reported unanimously and without a minority report being filed against any provision of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan, of course.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman understands, does he not, that it was understood that the members of the committee could offer such amendments as they saw fit.

Mr. WALTER. I distinctly recall that 2 days after the bill had been reported and certain newspapers started a campaign we found that members of the committee suggested that perhaps amendments would be offered when the bill came up for consideration.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I shall be very pleased to yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I certainly do not want to take issue with my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania. I merely call to his mind the fact that before we voted on the bill in its final stage I propounded the inquiry as to whether a vote in favor of the bill would preclude any member of the committee from opposing any amendment which the committee suggested.

Mr. WALTER. I distinctly recall that.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. And it was agreed that it would not.

Mr. WALTER. I distinctly recall that incident, I may say to my friend from Nebraska, and that occurred at a time when we very nearly struck out of this bill the only controversial section in it. It was by difference of just one vote that section 9 was retained in the bill. It was at that time that the gentleman from Nebraska suggested that perhaps he would offer some amendment when the bill came up on the floor.

During the course of the debate this afternoon no one has seemed to catch the significance of section 2 of this bill; namely, it makes it illegal to use official authority to influence or affect the election of any candidate. As I remember, "official authority" means whatever is done under color or by virtue of office, and I quote from Sixty-seven Atlantic, page 320:

> All acts of officials are not official acts, but only such as are done under some authority derived from the law or in pursuance of prescribed duties.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. In just a moment.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in this measure that anyone need fear. Our committee considered this problem calmly and carefully, and when we took it up it was with the idea of eliminating pernicious political activities and nothing else, and, with the knowledge that there were certain political activities that were pernicious, we attempted to attack the problem.

Concerning the report of the Sheppard committee, permit me to say that the recommendations made by that committee were dealt with in the relief appropriation bill. It is a question in my mind whether we ought to write permanent legislation to meet a temporary situation. I welcomed, however, the opportunity to go further with things that have occurred in W. P. A. than was done at a time when the relief appropriation bill came up. Let me say to you that in my State those people who were masquerading as Democrats last year—the year before they were Republicans, and today I am sure they are Republicans—did things that made a great many people ashamed of the fact that they were members of the great progressive Democratic Party. By resorting to practices that I did not approve of, by a short-sighted program that anyone could see would bring opprobrium to our relief program, many unfortunates have been deprived of employment through the failure of political subdivisions to sponsor new W. P. A. projects. The opponents of our work-relief program were quick to take advantage of the abuses that unfortunately crept into the W. P. A. set-up and by continuously pointing to those abuses diverted the attention of the masses of our people from the benefits so many of our unemployed workers, merchants, and all classes of our people derive from the purchasing power provided by the W. P. A. program.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman explain what the word "influence" means as used in both sections 2 and 9?

Mr. WALTER. "Influence" certainly does not mean the prestige of one's position, if that is what the gentleman has in mind. There need be no fears about that at all.

Mr. PARSONS. Where is the meaning so restricted?

Mr. WALTER. Using an official position to influence certainly does not mean that a man who occupies an office to which there is some prestige cannot express his opinion and advance arguments in any forum in this land.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALTER. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the language of the bill reads "official authority or influence."

Mr. WALTER. That is right. "Official influence" means just this, may I say to my friend from Illinois, that a man on the Federal pay roll could not offer to refrain from doing a duty imposed upon him by law, or could not threaten to do something in violation of his oath of office. That is all that language means.

Mr. BARRY. Does the gentleman believe that if a Member of Congress whose only income is his salary hires a man to nail some posters on trees, political activity, for which the Congressman pays the man $3 a day, that it would be a violation of this language?

Mr. WALTER. Of course not, and section 3 does not mean that.

Mr. BARRY. May I read it to the gentleman?

Mr. WALTER. I have seen it before. It certainly does not mean that, and no one believes it means that. That language was put in to prevent the improper use of Federal appropriations for works projects where part of the money expended comes from a political subdivision of the United States and the rest of it from the United States.

In order to strengthen that portion of the bill and in order to make it certain that no one can play politics with the relief program we inserted that language in the measure.

Mr. McDOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDOWELL. The gentleman said there was nothing in this bill that anyone could be afraid of.

Mr. WALTER. I mean as far as the opposition of some of the membership of this body to the pending measure is concerned; but there is ample in this measure to bring fear to people who want to make it a practice of engaging in practices that in my opinion are reprehensible.

The gentleman from Virginia said that sections 2 and 9 should be stricken from the bill and the so-called Dempsey amendment substituted. May I say in that connection if you strike out section 2 of the bill, then there is no punishment for the things for which we feel there should be punishment. For this reason section 2 should remain in the bill, because if that is stricken out and if section 9 is stricken out and the Dempsey amendment substituted, there is absolutely no authority in anyone to enforce the provisions of the Dempsey amendment. It is simply an idle gesture and will weaken and destroy the bill. It will certainly make possible some things we do not desire to have exist.

As far as the language that was deleted is concerned, which my distinguished friend from Kentucky mentioned in his discussion, that language on page 2, line 19, was taken by the committee from the civil-service regulations. We did not feel that harsher conditions should be imposed upon the people covered by this bill than are imposed upon people who are in the classified service.

I appeal to you to support this bill in its present form. It represents the careful work of a committee that has always been proud of the fact that it is careful.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BUCK). All time has expired. The Chair desires to make a statement.

The debate on this bill has gone on so harmoniously this afternoon that the Chair has not felt it necessary to strictly enforce the rules of the House. The Chair anticipates there will be a large number of amendments offered to the pending bill and that a number of Members will rise to their feet, either to interrupt those who are speaking or to offer amendments. The Chair will therefore request all Members to adhere strictly to the rules of the House and to address the Chair before seeking recognition either to offer an amendment or to interrupt a speaker.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, or to attempt to intimidate, threaten, or coerce, any other person for the purpose of interfering with the right of such other person to vote or to vote as he may choose, or of causing such other person to vote for, or not to vote for, any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives at any election held solely or in part for the purpose of selecting a President, a Vice President, a Presidential elector, or any Member of the Senate or any Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "Representatives" insert a comma and the following words: "Delegates or Commissioners from the Territories and Insular Possessions."

The same to be inserted at page 2, section 2, line 16, after the word "Representatives" insert "Delegates or Commissioners from Territories and Insular Possessions."

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, Presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of the House of Representatives: Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or to vote as he may choose.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 18, strike out the words "vote as he may choose" and insert "participate in the activities of a political party."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as stated in my remarks in general debate it was my intention to propose an amendment which would place the bill before the House in the same form and in the same condition in which it came from the Senate. I find it is not necessary for me to propose the amendment in order to accomplish that purpose but that the purpose I have in mind will be accomplished if this committee amendment is voted down.

As has been stated repeatedly, the members of the Judiciary Committee in the discussion of this bill in committee and in executive session reached the agreement that a vote for reporting the bill favorably would not preclude any Member proposing an amendment on the floor of the House; consequently I am taking the position I do, in accordance with that agreement.

Section 2 as it came from the Senate contained a proviso reading as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or to vote as he may choose.

The committee submitted an amendment, which is pending before the House at this time, reading as follows:

Page 2, line 18, strike out the words "vote as he may choose" and insert in lieu thereof "participate in the activities of a political party."

This would make the complete proviso read as follows:

That nothing herein shall be deemed to affect the right of any such person to state his preference with respect to any such candidates or to participate in the activities of a political party.

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that this is in contradiction of the section itself. The complete section—section 2—reads as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in an administrative position by the United States—

And so forth—

to use his official authority for the purpose of interfering with, or affecting, the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President—

And so forth. The committee amendment would permit persons to participate in the activities of a political party who are prohibited by another provision of the section from interfering with or affecting the election of the candidates named in the bill. I submit if we are to carry out the intention of this worthy measure it is necessary for us to strike out the committee amendment and put the bill in such shape that it will forbid those who are affected by this bill not only from using their official authority for the purpose of interfering with or affecting the election of any candidate for the office of President, Vice President, and the other offices named, but will also forbid them from participating in the activities of a political party. It is only by the striking out of the committee amendment, in my opinion, that the intention of this bill will be carried out and the bill will be made a vital force legislatively in this country.

I approached the consideration of this bill from a nonpartisan standpoint. I have heard partisan discussion here today, but I submit that it should not control our action. We are legislating for all time, not for any particular situation in any particular State. Let us legislate correctly. Let us clean the situation up when we have an opportunity to do so. I ask that the committee amendment be voted down. [Applause.]

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest respect for my friend from Nebraska, but I certainly cannot understand why he is willing, when he talks about our legislating for all time, to write into the law anything as ridiculous as this language, which was in the bill when we first took it up, giving a person the right to vote as he may choose.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. No; I cannot yield.

I cannot imagine our doing anything that would appear more ridiculous to any person who has any idea at all of the fundamentals of our law and our Constitution than to make a gesture that we are giving a person by statute a right that cannot be taken away from him. The right to vote is a right that cannot be affected no matter what we do or what we do not do. The language with reference to giving a person the right to participate in the activities of a political party was inserted in this section because that is the exact language of the civil-service rule in connection with employees under the classified service. Certainly, if those employees have the right to participate in the activities of a political party everyone who is in the administrative branch of our Government ought to have that same right.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Committee to support the committee amendment.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HEALEY. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact this language refers to person in the nonclassified civil service.

Mr. WALTER. Exactly.

Mr. HEALEY. The right to participate in political activities is retained as to those people.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The gentleman is aware, I am sure, that I am much opposed to the inclusion of the words "vote as he may choose."

Mr. WALTER. I should think so.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I so stated in the committee. However, my amendment would strike out the words "participate in the activities of a political party."

Mr. WALTER. And leave this perfectly ridiculous language in the bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I would like to have the other language stricken out.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wish the Members of the House would take the time to refer to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and read what happened in the Senate when the Hatch bill first appeared in that Chamber. There was not even a reading of the bill because the reading was dispensed with. Only one or two questions were asked, and ipso facto the bill became a statute as far as that Chamber was concerned. It was dumped into our lap, and the Committee on the Judiciary has worked arduously and labored fearlessly to bring you a bill which you can now in good conscience accept.

We have examined carefully the civil-service rules, and as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has indicated to you just now, we added these words "participate in the activities of a political party" because the civil-service rules say that such employees—that is, those in the nonclassified positions—may engage in politics provided they do not use their official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting its results. We say no more, we say no less, than is called for by the civil-service rules as to nonclassified service.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CELLER. I cannot yield now.

Let me go back into history a little for you. During his first Presidential election the President, in August 1932, summoned to help him in his campaign the following Senators: Senators Pittman, Walsh, Robinson, Hull, King, Byrnes, and Johnson of California. He invited them by saying, "Between now and the end of the campaign a good many matters for immediate decision will arise—matters relating to issues and policies of various kinds—and I am asking a small group to hold themselves in readiness for consultation. This will not be in any sense a formal advisory committee but only a few people whose judgment I value." If this bill had been in effect as it was written in the Senate at that time, August 1932, or if it had been in effect as the gentleman from New Mexico would have you write it, the President would have been deprived of the right to take advice and counsel on party matters from the Senators I have mentioned. Remember, section 2 prohibits political activities—practical political activities—of a member of "any department." That means even Senators or Representatives. Of course, they cannot use their so-called official authority for political purposes. But where does official authority end and private capacity begin? Who knows? I do not.

Mr. DEMPSEY. When the gentleman states the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] would not want the Senators or the Representatives to be politically active he is making a mistake.

Mr. CELLER. Then I say the gentleman ought to read the bill all over again, and read section 2, because section 2 provides as follows, and it is well to keep this in mind—

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position, or by any department—

Any department of Government that means.

Mr. MASON. "Administrative."

Mr. CELLER. Wait a minute; I have the floor. I repeat—

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States—

The comma is after the words "United States"— or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States, to use his official authority.

It does not mean administrative position in any department.

Now turn to section 9.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I refuse to yield.

Turn to section 9, and you will find this:

All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or political campaigns.

That is broad language. I say that the gentlemen of the House should consider carefully what they are doing before they vote on this amendment. I ask them to vote for the Judiciary Committee amendment, because it is a sound and it is a sane amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, the title of this bill is: "An act to prevent pernicious political activities."

The word "pernicious" is defined in Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary as: "malicious, wicked, baneful, deadly, destructive, evil, harmful, hurtful, injurious, mischievous, noxious, perverting, ruinous."

Now, what are the prohibited political activities which exhaust the vocabulary of bad words in the dictionary? They embrace all the political rights and privileges of American citizenship except one. I have not the time to enumerate them all, but I can name a few: attending a precinct caucus, attending a county convention, attending a State convention, attending a national convention, making a political speech, publishing an article on any political subject, writing a letter on any political subject, publicly expressing an opinion on any political subject, advocating the election of any candidate for office, expressing an opinion about any candidate for office, affiliating with any political party, contributing money or any form of aid to a political candidate, or party.

In sum, any of the activities inherent in the political institutions by means of which the Government was created and is maintained. Any such activities are prohibited to "any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States."

All the activities I have enumerated, and countless other incidental activities, are calculated to or may "affect" an election and come under the ban of the law.

I have some definite rules which I put into practice regarding the activities of a Member of Congress. I never ask an applicant for a job what his politics are. I have never asked a postmaster, and that is all the patronage I have had, to attend a caucus or a convention for me, and I have never asked or received a dollar from one, in my campaigns or otherwise.

I voted to put them under civil service and beyond my power to influence their action in any way, even if I so desired. I am in favor of the civil service and have voted for every measure to maintain and extend and bulid up the civil service since I have been in Congress.

But there is one feature of the civil service to which I have never become reconciled, and that is the feature which completely strips a citizen of the exercise of all his political rights and privileges except that of voting, and thereby unfits him to participate in the affairs of the Government.

There is nothing new in my views on this subject. One provision of this bill, section 2, recalled to my mind an utterance by me on the floor in the Sixty-second Congress when the House had up a kindred proposition, and I have taken the trouble to look it up in the RECORD. The House had under consideration a post-office appropriation bill which contained a section having the effect of nullifying an Executive order issued by President Taft, which was modeled on an order issued by President Theodore Roosevelt, against certain activities of all civil-service employees. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Mann, moved to strike the section from the bill. May I be pardoned for reading a short paragraph from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 30, 1912, page 5635, punctuated as it appears in the RECORD:

> Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want to say that I do not believe in the denatured Americanism that results from these Executive "gag" orders. [Applause.] I think the sacred rights of American citizenship too high a price to pay for any job, even under Uncle Sam. [Applause.] And I sincerely hope that the House will emphatically and overwhelmingly sustain the action of the committee in this matter, reestablishing the full citizenship rights of Government employees, and so put the attitude of Congress on this question forever beyond dispute. [Applause.]

The interesting finale appears on page 5639. I quote:

> The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] to strike out the section.
> The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Mann) there were—ayes 1, noes 132.
> So the amendment was rejected.

At that time the Republican Party had been in power continuously for 16 years, 16 long years, so there could not have been many Democrats affected by the gag order, and there could have been no politics in the unanimity of the vote against it.

The word "denatured" had been current for some time in a controversy over denatured alcohol, and I merely appropriated it. Its application made the newspapers and survived in the Chamber for some time. I have changed my mind about some things in the last 30 years, but not that thing, which makes political eunuchs of American citizens.

But the appointees to which section 2 of this bill applies are not even in the civil service. They, like us, owe their places to the putrescent mire of politics. Like us, they are lilies floating for a time on the scummy bosom of a frog pond, sustained by all the activities condemned by the bill. Like us, when the returns go wrong, they fold up. They do not get their mess of pottage in exchange for the loss of their rights of citizenship. If you want to put them under civil service and make their tenure permanent, bring in your legislation, and I will support it. Until then, I shall adhere to my ancient rule against "gag" laws and support the committee amendment to section 2. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, section 2 of this bill would bar every employee of every National or State bank in the United States in which the R. F. C. held preferred stock, and if you do not believe it, listen to this:

> It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative position by the United States, or by any department, independent agency, or other agency of the United States (including any corporation controlled by the United States or any agency thereof, and any corporation all of the capital stock of which is owned by the United States or any agency thereof), to use his official authority—

And so forth. For, my friends, national banks, at least, are instrumentalities of the Federal Government, and this section would apply.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS F. FORD. Not just now.

Why, gentlemen, you are going clear out into the private banking field. There is another section of this bill I would like to call your attention to, and that is section 6.

Section 6 states:

> It shall be unlawful for any person for political purposes to furnish or to disclose, or to aid or assist in furnishing or disclosing, any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment, or benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of, funds for work relief or relief purposes to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager, and it shall be unlawful for any person to receive any such list or names for political purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, right there you are laying any candidate open to having his opponent secure a list of names from W. P. A.—they may be 2 years old—and taking those names or sending them into this man's campaign office by a spy, leaving them there and then reporting it and having them discovered and in this way put the candidate in a very embarrasing position, to say the least.

The only amendment to this bill I can vote for with enthusiasm is one to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT as a substitute for the committee amendment:
> On page 2, in line 16, after the word "Representatives" as amended, change the comma to a period and strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a careful reading of section 2 of this bill will disclose the fact that there is only one prohibition contained in it, and that is the prohibition against a Federal employee using his official authority for the purpose of trying to interfere with or to influence an election. This is the whole subject of the section. It does not prohibit an employee taking part in politics. It does not prohibit an employee, as such, from doing anything except using his official position and authority to interfere with or to affect the election of candidates for Federal office. Now, that being the fact, and it is a very obvious fact, the proviso in this section is absolutely without any meaning at all and it should therefore be stricken out.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then I understand that if a district attorney were to make a speech, he would always start out his address to the voters by saying, "I am not in my official capacity." This is all he would have to say, and he would be clear. Is that right?

Mr. WALTER. If the gentleman will yield, that does not say official capacity, it says official authority.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Then he would say, "I am not acting under my official authority."

Mr. MOTT. I will be glad to answer the question. The answer is this: A district attorney making a speech in a political campaign would not, in my opinion, be using his official authority to interfere with or to affect an election. He would be acting as an individual. Certainly there is nothing in the language of section 2 that could possibly be construed as prohibiting a district attorney or any other Federal officer from making a campaign speech or from otherwise participating, as an individual, in other political activities. That is not the purpose of this section.

There are provisions in other sections of the bill which prevent active participation in political campaigns by certain Federal employees, but the only thing this section prevents is the use of official authority for the purpose of influencing an election, and therefore the proviso which refers to something entirely outside the scope of the section makes no sense.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Who then construes when that man is using his official authority?

Mr. HANCOCK. It is made a crime and the grand jury would determine that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. He must not use his official authority, but who construes that?

Mr. MOTT. The jury would have to decide whether the act done by the official constituted a use of his official authority for the purpose of influencing an election, because this law could be enforced only by bringing a criminal action against the alleged violator of the law.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Then if the gentleman's language is adopted, I understand he believes it will be perfectly all right for one of these employees to participate in political activities, as long as he does not use his official authority.

Mr. MOTT. No; I did not say that at all. My statement was that the only prohibition in section 2 is a prohibition against the use of his official authority by an executive employee for the purpose of interfering with or affecting an election. That is the sole and entire subject of the section. That being the case, will the gentleman from Massachusetts tell me what is the sense of that proviso? I say it should go out. The prohibition is complete in itself, and the proviso means nothing. There are other sections in the bill, as I have stated, and other amendments to be offered, to take care of that matter, but it does not belong here.

Mr. HEALEY. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman's point of view, but the language was offered to conform to the civil-service rule, and the interpretation of the civil-service rule as contained in their regulations.

Mr. MOTT. I do not agree with that at all. The civil-service rule that the gentleman is speaking about is a rule preventing employees from taking an active part in politics. That is not the subject of this particular section at all. The subject of this section is the use of official authority and nothing else. Therefore the proviso, which deals with another subject, is meaningless and it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. A moment ago the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS F. FORD] stated that this section would deny the right of political activity to people employed in national and State banks. Is not that statement silly?

Mr. MOTT. Obviously, the gentleman from California was in error in making that statement, because this section does not undertake to prohibit Federal officials or employees from engaging in political activity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I propose to support the position of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN]. If the committee amendment remains in this bill you have no prohibition against any political activity on the part of any employee of the Federal Government not in the classified service. This is an open invitation to every office boy and girl, every man and woman working in the Federal service whose salary is paid by the taxpayers' money out of the Federal Treasury, to take their coats off and get busy for the particular political party in power. I do not wish to discuss politics on this floor. This should be a nonpartisan matter and I resent some of my friends on our side saying, "Well, when the Republicans were in, see what they did. We ought to get the employee votes in when we are in power."

Our business here ought to be to clean up this situation now, and we all know that it is exceedingly bad. So far as I am concerned I want to see this committee amendment stricken from the bill, and I want to see the amendment they have placed in section 5 stricken from the bill also. In that section they absolutely went against the wishes of this House as expressed when we voted the relief appropriations bill on June 30, prohibiting any of that fund being used for political purposes. In this bill they prohibit only the solicitation from certified relief workers. Where the politics really come in is with the supervisors. There is no politics with the worker. He is driven and coerced by the supervisor, and these people are subject to all sorts of chiseling by treasurers and so-called treasurers of political parties of all kinds. I think both of these committee amendments should be stricken from the bill if we wish to have a clean piece of legislation passed by the House tonight.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. How many weeks does the gentleman think it will be after the Republicans come into power, if they ever do, before they will repeal this act?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I can say to the gentleman that if they repeal the act and resort to some of the things that have been done, they will not be in power very long.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. I wonder if we cannot agree on time for debate on this section?

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 20 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to some very interesting and sometimes humorous statements on the floor this afternoon. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL] talked about States' rights, when I think what he was interested in was candidate's rights. [Applause.] The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCLEAN] complained about the method of appointing postmasters, when all of us who have studied the results under the civil-service laws while the Republicans were in power know that they never selected anyone but Republican eligibles, if there was one on the list sent to them. I am not quarreling about that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sorry I do not have the time. I am not quarreling about that, but we have here this afternoon a bill which its proponents say will prohibit political activity and the use of public employees as pawns in the political game, yet section 2, as reported by the committee, in my judgment, does not do anything in the world but reenact in part the substance of the Corrupt Practices Act, and a rule of the Civil Service Commission, applying not to civil-service employees but to employees not under civil service. Therefore, I find myself in agreement with the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] when he opposes the committee amendment permitting these employees to participate in the activities of a political party.

If you want to prohibit the use of public employees in politics, then you do not want the committee amendment in section 2. The reason I am supporting Mr. MCLAUGHLIN'S position on the matter is that I would like to put all of these people under civil service, and when you fellows who have been exempting them for the last 6 years get the handcuffs on them so that you cannot use them in politics, then I think you will be willing to vote to have them all put in civil service. [Applause.]

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Those who are in the classified civil service can participate in the activities of a political party, can they not?

Mr. RAMSPECK. They cannot.

Mr. CELLER. Can they not go to a meeting?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes; they can go to a meeting and express their personal opinions as to who they are for. They can contribute to campaign funds, but they cannot take part in the activities of a political party, as I understand it. That is, they cannot manage a campaign, they cannot make a political speech, but they can go to all the meetings they want to, they can contribute all the money they want to, and they can express their personal opinion as to who they are for.

Mr. CELLER. But under the wording of this original section they could not do that. It was for that reason that we added that language, to make it conform to the activities that the civil-service employees can now perform.

Mr. RAMSPECK. I do not agree with the gentleman's construction of the section. I do not think the section does anything but reenact existing law.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. HARE. Under this wording, would not an employee be permitted to make a speech at a political campaign meeting?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Oh, I think unquestionably with the committee amendment in there he can do anything in the world that Jim Farley can do. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Why should we take away from any employee of the Government the right to get up and say what he wants?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is a question of what you believe in. I know the gentleman does not agree with me about it, but I believe if we are going to maintain good government in this country and have a democratic form of government that is to survive, we have to remove the rank and file employees from being pawns in the political game. That is what I believe. [Applause.] The gentleman has a right to his own opinion and of course I do not quarrel with him about that. But I believe that the thing that is going to destroy this Nation, if it is destroyed, is political corruption, based upon traffic in jobs and in contracts, by political parties and factions in power.

Mr. KELLER. Does the gentleman mean to insinuate that when a man makes a speech he is corrupt?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Oh, not necessarily at all. But this is part of the game. The gentleman knows it as well as I do. The gentleman knows that in various places recently machine politicians have been convicted of corruption. Such practices tend to destroy the faith of our people in free government. In disgust people in other lands have accepted dictators.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. KELLER. And in Georgia?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FADDIS] for 3 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take advantage of this occasion to congratulate the Committee on the Judiciary for acting as an efficient back-stop for the members of another body, who seem to take extreme delight in endeavoring to please organized minorities by enacting drastic legislation, in order that they may gain credit thereby, in the fond hope and belief that the House of Representatives will modify this legislation in a manner that will save them and the Nation from the disastrous effects of drastic legislation. [Applause.]

I also want to say to some of those who have preceded me that politics may be a reprehensible institution, but just the same I want to call their attention to the fact that politics and politicians built the grandest Nation on the shores of this continent that the world has ever seen. [Applause.] They may attempt to repudiate all that politics or politicians have done and pin their faith on some theoretical philosophy of government, such as the civil service; they may desire to take from the employees of the Government some of the rights of citizenship and say to them, "Because you are an employee of the Federal Government, you shall not participate in politics"; but I say to you that this is but the start of a system that may say to a man, "You may not participate in political activities because you are a member of the Elks Lodge or the Presbyterian Church, or some other organization." This legislation savors entirely too much of the principles of dictatorship to suit me.

It is a doctrine too un-American for me to follow. To be willing to write a law saying to the employees of the Federal Government: "You are holding a Federal job, you shall not participate in political activity" is the beginning of an invasion of the civil liberties of the American people.

I say to my friends on the Republican side who are supporting this measure that if the day ever comes that they are returned to power that they will either repeal it or modify it. They will use it as a knife to cut our throats and then repeal it so that they may operate in the time-honored manner which served to build up this Nation. I believe this bill to be a violation of the Bill of Rights, and therefore unconstitutional. Legislation is already in force regulating the political activities of those on relief and protecting those on relief from being exploited politically. We are all in favor of this safeguard for those on relief. There is no difference of opinion there. Since this matter has been taken care of in other legislation I hope this bill will be defeated. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, it has been stated many times on the floor during this debate that section 3 of this bill and other provisions of the bill were simply a reenactment of the Corrupt Practices Act. In the first place, if that were true it would not be necessary to pass this legislation. As a matter of fact, however, it is not true. So that the committee may be advised as to what the Corrupt Practices Act is I take this time to read it; it is very brief:

246. Statements by candidates for Senator, Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner filed with Secretary of Senate and Clerk of House of Representatives. (a) Every candidate for Senator shall file with the Secretary and every candidate for Representative, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner shall file with the Clerk not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before, and also within 30 days after, the date on which an election is to be held, a statement containing, complete as of the day next preceding the date of filing:

(1) A correct and itemized account of each contribution received by him or by any person for him with his knowledge or consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy for election, or for the purpose of influencing the result of the election, together with the name of the person who has made such contribution;

(2) A correct and itemized account of each expenditure made by him or by any person for him with his knowledge or consent, in aid or support of his candidacy for election, or for the purpose of influencing the result of the election, together with the name of the person to whom such expenditure was made; except that only the total sum of expenditures for items specified in subdivision (c) of section 248 of this title need be stated;

(3) A statement of every promise or pledge made by him or by any person for him with his consent, prior to the closing of the polls on the day of the election, relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any public or private position or employment for the purpose of procuring support in his candidacy, and the name, address, and occupation of every person to whom any such promise or pledge has been made, together with the description of any such position. If no such promise or pledge has been made, that fact shall be specifically stated.

(b) The statements required to be filed by subdivision (a) shall be cumulative, but where there has been no change in an item reported in the previous statement only the amount need be carried forward.

(c) Every candidate shall inclose with his first statement a report, based upon the records of the proper State official, stating the total number of votes cast for all candidates for the office which the candidate seeks, at the general election next preceding the election at which he is a candidate. (Feb. 28, 1925, c. 368, title III, sec. 307, 43 Stat. 1072.)

Now, let us go to section 249, which is headed "Promises or pledges by candidates."

249. Promises or pledges by candidates. It is unlawful for any candidate to directly or indirectly promise or pledge the appointment, or the use of his influence or support for the appointment of any person to any public or private position or employment, for the purpose of procuring support in his candidacy. (Feb. 28, 1925, ch. 368, title III, sec. 310, 43 Stat. 1073.)

The Corrupt Practices Act insofar as pledges are concerned stops there and goes no further. Under the Corrupt Practices Act you are prohibited from promising a person that if he will vote for you, you will attempt to get him a job. This bill does not stop there.

In just a few minutes I shall offer an amendment to strike section 3 from the pending bill and at that time will discuss it. My only purpose in taking this time was to read you the Corrupt Practices Act and to point out to you wherein it stops insofar as pledges and promises are concerned and then to point out the difference between that and section 3 of the pending bill and show you the ridiculous thing that we would do if we were to enact this bill into law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma has been discussing section 3. That is not the matter before the House now. The matter before the House now is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska, a member of the committee, to include the language in italics on page 3. As has been stated by several Members, including the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], this is the heart of the section so far as the Hatch bill is concerned. Those who want to ruin the Hatch bill and want to make section 2 ineffective should vote for the committee amendment. Those who want to give some life, and some power to, those who want teeth in the section should vote against the committee amendment.

The committee amendment does not mean that all the members of the committee agreed to it. These amendments were adopted by a very close majority in the committee, and they were not political majorities. It is just a question of those who want to help accomplish what the Hatch bill attempts to accomplish as against those who want to destroy the purpose of the Hatch bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think this bill as it came from the Senate, Members will agree, bears evidence of having been written in a great hurry. Why in the name of common sense the people who wrote this bill did not put section 2 and section 9 together is more than I can understand, because they cover practically the same matter and it would have shortened and simplified the bill. Furthermore, if the hurry had not been quite so great, in all probability they would have amended the Corrupt Practices Act instead of bringing out a bill like this.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HEALEY. Do I understand that all time has been consumed on this section?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts for 2 minutes.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members are aware of the effect of this language if it is kept intact without the committee amendment. It would place all Government employees in a strait jacket and prevent them from participating in any type of political activity.

The civil-service rules cover all persons in the classified service and do not permit any kind of political activities. The persons whom we seek to embrace in this section are those Presidential appointees and other unclassified persons who are not embraced in the classified civil service. The Civil Service Commission by its own interpretation states that the law does not literally apply to nonclassified public servants, that such persons may engage in political activities provided they do not use their official position or authority to influence or affect an election.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is the objective that we seek to gain by this bill, because, as has so well been explained by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], the civil service classified people have a quid pro quo for giving up their right to engage in political activities because they receive in return certain benefits and protection under the civil service; but these nonclassified public servants do not have such benefits or protection. I believe we ought to think well before we deprive them of rights that have always been considered inherent and constitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, am I correct in my understanding that a "yea" vote on the pending motion will have the effect of striking out the words "participate in the activities of a political party" in lines 19 and 20?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the motion. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]. The answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McLAUGHLIN] is "no."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] may be again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the Mott substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair have the attention of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT]?

The Clerk has reported the gentleman's amendment as beginning after the colon. The gentleman from Oregon will recall that an amendment offered by the Commissioner from Puerto Rico was adopted. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Oregon to accept that amendment?

Mr. MOTT. It is the contention of the gentleman from Oregon that he offers this amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. But after the amendment already adopted, as offered by the Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

Mr. MOTT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants the record clear on that.

Mr. MOTT. The amendment offered by the Commissioner from Puerto Rico, which was adopted, would not affect this at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), there were—ayes 151, noes 90.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment as amended by the substitute.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARSONS. Since the so-called Mott amendment has been agreed to there is nothing left of the committee amendment as far as the bill is concerned, is there?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon was offered in the nature of a substitute for the committee amendment. It was agreed to. Therefore, the Chair was under the necessity of putting the question on the committee amendment as amended by the amendment in the nature of a substitute, and that was agreed to by the committee.

Mr. PARSONS. But that strikes out the original House committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that it strikes out the proviso.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. May I inquire if my understanding of the parliamentary situation is correct: This section as adopted includes the language down to the proviso, and nothing else. It includes that part of the section before the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The section as it now stands includes the printed language through the middle of line 16, with the addition of the amendment offered by the Commissioner from Puerto Rico.

Are there further amendments to section 2?

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: On page 2, line 14, at the beginning of the line before the word "of", insert "or the nomination."

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, may I be recognized on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for debate on the amendment. All time for debate on the section has expired.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this section as written only goes half way toward our objective, if we are trying to cleanse and purify politics. It would permit high Government officials to use all the power and authority of their offices to control primaries and nominations while prohibiting them from doing likewise at Presidential and congressional elections.

Nominations are nearly as important as elections everywhere in this country and in some States they are far more important, because nomination in those States is equivalent to election.

My amendment makes this section applicable to nominations as well as elections. Bear in mind that the section does not forbid participation in politics. It merely prohibits the use of official authority to influence elections. If this is a bad practice, and I think it is, the prohibition against it should be extended to apply to primaries and conventions.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK) there were—ayes 165, noes 55.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri: On page 2, line 7, after the comma following the word "states" and before the word "or", insert the words "including members of the Cabinet."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 39, noes 127.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VORYS of Ohio: On page 2, line 12, after the word "use" insert "or offer to use."

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit, provided for or made possible by any act of Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 24, after the word "possible" insert "in whole or in part."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: On page 2, beginning in line 21, strike out the language in lines 21 to 25, inclusive; and on page 3, strike out lines 1 and 2, inclusive.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NICHOLS. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, there is no one in the House who is more firmly and stanchly opposed to pernicious political activity than I am. I want to read you section 3 carefully, however:

It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation—or other benefit, provided for or made possible in whole or in part by any act of Congress, to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity—or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

I know the membership of this House does not want to enact that language into law because it will compel any man running for office, and any political party writing a platform for the party, to tell a deliberate falsehood and perjure themselves in order to obtain election to office. I submit that under the language of this section, if a candidate for office says, "If you will elect me I will attempt to get the old-age pension raised," that is a benefit; if you say to the farmers, "I will attempt to get an increase in the price of cotton, corn, wheat, hogs, cattle, or any other thing," that is a benefit; if you say, "If you will vote for me, Mr. Laboring Man, I will attempt to get you better working conditions," that is a benefit; and under the language of this section, if you promise any benefits and upon that promise anybody votes for you, then, under this section, you are not entitled to hold your office and are subject to $1,000 fine and a year's imprisonment.

I want to hear an explanation on the part of any Member of this House who can gainsay this statement. Why, no political party, Mr. Chairman, could write a platform under the provisions of this bill without perjuring itself, and every member of that party who subscribed to that political platform would be guilty of a falsehood if they said they did not hold out promise of benefits in the future. What is the purpose of political platforms? Ever since the beginning of time in this Nation political parties have got together in conventions, Republicans and Democrats alike, and they form and write a platform. That platform simply states things that the party stands for, things that the party hopes to do, if it is successful, and upon the basis of that pledge and upon the basis of that promise, as contained in the platform, they seek the favor of the electorate of this country. If this section remains in the bill you have falsified your statement when you take your oath of office, and the provision should be stricken out. [Applause.]

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment because I believe that the present language contained in the Corrupt Practices Act is sufficient to carry out the purport and intent of the section.

In addition to what the gentleman from Oklahoma has said, I want to call the attention of the House to language contained in this section which, if enacted into law, would, in my opinion, make the great majority of this body eligible for jail before next election day, and I am absolutely serious in making that statement.

I would like you to listen carefully to the language of this section:

It shall be unlawful for any person to promise compensation, provided for or made possible in whole or in part by an act of Congress, to any person as consideration for any political activity.

I know there are many Members of this House whose only compensation is the salary which they get as a result of a congressional act. I contend if this language is followed, whenever you hire a man to go out, at a couple of dollars a day, and put up placards on trees or go around and distribute circulars with your biography on them, and you pay him and that sum is traced to your congressional salary, you are guilty of a crime under the language of this act. You will be putting yourself in a position where any crank can take advantage of the act. I know that is not the intention of the act, but any crank can have you indicted under this language and have you convicted. If you strike out this section we still have the Corrupt Practices Act which carries out the intent and purpose of this section. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate my good friends on the left—Republican side—for writing this legislation. I believe if they had been in charge of this Congress they could not have written a better political bill than they are writing today.

I want also to congratulate you on the fine wave of political reform which has come over you. I remember back in 1924 your political activities. I remember again in 1928, when I was a candidate. I remember the political activities of your party at that time. I remember them again in 1932. I am not complaining about it. You had a perfect right to do it. There has always been politics in this Government, and I believe there always will be. Of course, you are not in control of the House today, except figuratively, and you are very much interested in this bill.

I have watched my colleagues on this side of the aisle take the slaps you have given them and the administration, and I am watching them now turn the other cheek and go along with you.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN. No; I refuse to yield.

I have sent to the Clerk's desk an amendment which provides that "it shall be unlawful for any candidate for Senator or Representative in Congress in any primary or general election to make any public, audible speech in his own behalf or in behalf of any political party of which he is a member or to pay out directly or indirectly any sum or sums for advertising in any newspaper, magazine, periodical, bulletin, or program or for buttons or novelties or engage in any political activities whatsoever in his own behalf or in behalf of any political party, provided, however, he shall be permitted to vote."

All of us are interested in preventing those on relief from being subjected to political pressure. The law already does that as contained in the relief bill.

I have been particularly impressed with the fact that the committee has been willing to give a man working in a department or agency under this administration the right to vote. That is great liberality upon their part.

Mr. Chairman, I was elected to this House as a Democrat and I still am a Democrat and I want to say to you gentlemen on the Republican side, because it will not do any good to talk to anyone over here, that I am unwilling to go along with you fellows and write a purely political bill regardless of what my colleagues on this side of the House wish to do. When I am ready as a Democrat to write a political bill, I want to write it as a Democrat, and I want to pass it through the House as a Democrat, and not let my Republican friends and colleagues write the legislation. This may not be a serious amendment that I have proposed, but if we are going to take away all of the rights that the employees of this Government have to get up and express their opinion in politics—and after all that is what it means—then I say, let us take it away from ourselves as well; let us gag ourselves; that will be in accordance with the principles of this bill.

I ask you, my Democratic friends, do you not believe that it is time to be Democrats instead of letting Republicans in this House write a purely political bill? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, it would indeed be unfortunate if we should strike from the bill section 3, which provides that one cannot reward political activity by the promise of a job. If you strike out section 3, as the amendment calls for, it would present a very serious matter.

Mr. BARRY. The language of section 3 is exactly the same as contained in the Corrupt Practices Act, insofar as it applies to jobs.

Mr. CELLER. The Corrupt Practices Act applies to candidates by section 249 of the United States Code. The section in this bill applies to any person, and it should apply generally to everybody, and should not be limited to a candidate, as is the present law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Did I understand the Chair to say that the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from Missouri had offered his amendment, but the Chair has been informed that he merely discussed his amendment, and did not offer it.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNCAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma was recognized to offer his amendment, and I could not offer mine until his amendment had been voted on, because it was not a substitute for his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It was in order for the gentleman to offer his amendment to the section. It would have been a perfecting amendment.

Mr. DUNCAN. But it was not a perfecting amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri did not offer his amendment, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 66, noes 139.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma demands tellers. As many as favor taking the vote by tellers will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Thirteen Members have risen, not a sufficient number, and tellers are refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUNCAN: Page 3, line 2, after the period in line 2, add a new paragraph to be known as (a):

"It shall be unlawful for any candidate for Senator or Representative in Congress in any primary or general election to make any public audible speech in his own behalf or in behalf of any political party of which he is a member or to pay out directly or indirectly any sum or sums for advertising in any newspaper, magazine, periodical, bulletin, program, or for buttons or novelties, or engage in any political activities whatsoever in his own behalf or in behalf of any political party: Provided, however, He shall be permitted to vote."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, there was so much confusion on the Republican side of the aisle that many Members on that side did not hear the reading of the amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 95, and noes 145.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. MICHENER and Mr. DUNCAN to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 72, noes 188.

So, the motion was rejected.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes 88, noes 162.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. PARSONS and Mr. MICHENER.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 67, noes 167.

So, the motion was rejected.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SACKS: Page 2, line 21, strike out section 3 and insert:

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for any person or political party to make or publish any platform which in any part promises the voters anything."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SACKS) there were—ayes 28, noes 141.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SACKS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SACKS. Does the defeat of this amendment mean that the Republicans put the stamp of approval on promises?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a proper parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California: Page 3, line 2, after "election", strike out the period and insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to any statement of political program, policy, or platform."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. Except as may be required by the provisions of subsection (b), section 9 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes, on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

SEC. 5. It shall be unlawful for any person to solicit or be in any manner concerned in soliciting any assessment, subscription, or contribution for any political purpose whatever from any person known by him to be entitled to or receiving compensation, employment, or other benefit provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating funds for work relief or relief purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 13, after the word "solicit", insert "or receive."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, lines 14 and 15, after the word "soliciting", insert "or receiving."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 3, line 18, after the word "benefit", insert "as a relief worker or a person on relief."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 58, noes 118.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. CELLER and Mr. MICHENER to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 70, noes 152.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful for any person to furnish or to disclose, or to aid or assist in furnishing or disclosing, any list or names of persons receiving compensation, employment, or benefits provided for or made possible by any act of Congress appropriating, or authorizing the appropriation of, funds for work relief or relief purposes, to a political candidate, committee, campaign manager, or to any person for delivery to a political candidate, committee, or campaign manager, and it shall be unlawful for any person to receive any such list or names for political purposes.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 21, after the word "person" insert "for political purposes."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CREAL: Pages 3 and 4, strike out all of section 6.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, some of the Members made speeches the other day about old-age pensions, both for and against. Some of the Members have talked about the W. P. A. appropriation bill. Doubtless you did not care to send your remarks to people not interested, but perhaps you intended, regardless of which way you voted, to send your remarks to a select group of people. Mr. Chairman, I say that is for political purposes. When a campaign comes around and you are misrepresented before a certain group of people or Government beneficiaries as to what you said upon the floor of the House, or in giving your present views or future views pertaining to a particular thing in which you are interested, you have a right to get a list of names, and I maintain that no Government agency has the right to deprive a Senator or Congressman from any list of names on the Government pay roll. We may want it for various purposes. We may want it for the purpose of purging the rolls of loafers who are thereon, and who have been often found on the Government pay rolls. I maintain it is a monstrosity to say that we cannot receive such a list, if we want to send our remarks for or against some bill in which they are interested, after having received numerous letters. I believe that section ought to be stricken out. It provides that you cannot get a list of names of people whom you have been voting for or against, so far as the governmental agencies are concerned, and you cannot find out what the Government did, or who was employed, or who was not.

I maintain the section goes a long, long ways in invading the prerogatives of the Members of the Senate and House by depriving them, whether they be Democrats or Republicans, of their rights. You send down here in Washington and ask an agency for a list of names of workers under the civil service. You cannot in your own county know who is on the W. P. A. or who is on the relief rolls. You may want this information in order to tell them your views on certain legislation in which they are interested.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. We put in the last relief bill a provision that the W. P. A. must give the names and addresses of all those who occupy a supervisory capacity, if requested by any Member of Congress.

Mr. CREAL. The gentleman refers to supervisory capacities only. This means anybody. I maintain that no man, high or low, whether in the Cabinet or any place else, down to anybody who is drawing Government compensation, whether it is the Weather Bureau man or a star-route carrier, should have the right to withhold those names from the people who make the laws and appropriate the money to pay their salaries.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. The gentleman's argument might have had some force had we not adopted an amendment a while ago which limits the use for political purposes.

Mr. CREAL. I maintain it is for political purposes when you and I send out our remarks to a particular group to show how we voted on a particular bill. You cannot get away from that. You cannot separate that from a political activity. It is a political activity. What do you want that list of reliefers for except to ingratiate yourselves into their good graces and get their vote.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The taxpayers would save a great deal of money if these lists were obtained from the city directory and telephone directory. It costs money to compile these lists.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CREAL. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I firmly believe there should be no politics in relief, or coercion of those men and women who are on the work-relief program. I favor the so-called Dempsey amendment and I shall support the bill designed to correct abuses that have arisen. I understand the gentleman contends that the information concerning every employee on the pay roll of the Federal Government should be made public if requested by a Member of Congress.

Mr. CREAL. Yes; for the men who appropriate the money and create the jobs. There is not a Member in this House or at the other end of the Capitol who has not selected a list and sent his remarks to those people. They do it for political purposes and for the purpose of clarifying himself and obtaining the votes of those people. It is therefore for a political purpose.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment.

I may say that the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee which first considered this bill asked the Senator from New Mexico, who appeared before us, why this particular section was included in the bill and what was behind it. He informed us that the Senator from Texas who conducted the investigation into political activities last summer found that the exploitation of the persons on relief always began with the securing of a list of names, and that if we would include in the bill a prohibition against furnishing lists of names of those on W. P. A. for political purposes, it would go a long way toward stopping the exploitation of such persons and protecting them against the ward heelers and solicitors of campaign funds. That is the reason for the section, and I believe the section ought to stay in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CREAL].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CREAL) there were—ayes 47, noes 150.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. No part of any appropriation made by any act, heretofore or hereafter enacted, making appropriations for work relief, relief, or otherwise to increase employment by providing loans and grants for public-works projects, shall be used for the purpose of, and no authority conferred by any such act upon any person shall be exercised or administered for the purpose of, interfering with, restraining, or coercing any individual in the exercise of his right to vote at any election.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOOK moves to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the motion that it is not in proper form.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOOK. No, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The motion as submitted is not in proper form.

Mr. HOOK. I move to strike out the enacting clause, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The proper motion, the Chair may state to the gentleman from Michigan, is that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. That is not the motion the gentleman has submitted.

Mr. HOOK. I will submit such a motion later.

The Clerk read, as follows:

SEC. 8. Any person who violates any of the foregoing provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a felony and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 4, line 17, after the word "Act", strike out the remainder of line 17.

Page 4, line 18, after "conviction", insert "thereof."

The Committee amendments were agreed to.

The Clerk read, as follows:

SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or of affecting the results thereof. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 5, line 1, after the word "thereof" strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 91, noes 132.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. CELLER and Mr. MICHENER.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 111, noes 157.

So the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 5, line 8, after "Congress", insert "for such position or office."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOOK moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. HOOK. This bill as it stands right now, with the amendments as adopted, has been written by the Republican Party. I want to congratulate the Republican Party for their solid vote. I think they are doing a very fine job, and I have no criticism to make whatsoever. It is their duty to sabotage the Democratic program if they can. I will say that they are doing a very fine job of it this afternoon.

To my Democratic friends let me say that it is about time we start writing some legislation ourselves. It is about time that some of you Democrats go down the line and vote in a Democratic manner and not follow the Republican leadership.

Many times this afternoon I have seen Democrats walk down here behind a solid phalanx of Republican membership.

This bill has been used by the newspapers of this Nation to blackmail the membership of this House before it ever came to the floor for consideration. It is about time we Democrats realize that we should stand up and fight and not go down under the blackmailing that has been going on in the past.

I have always placed high value on human rights. I regard them as basically more important to society than property rights. It necessarily follows that from the political aspect the state exists for man. Man does not exist for the state. If government is worth anything it is for what it wins for man, and certainly this kind of a bill that you are trying to enact here this afternoon is not going to win anything for anybody. On the contrary, it is taking away the basic rights guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States.

It is a violation of the first and fifth amendments of that Constitution. I therefore give warning here on this floor that if this bill passes in its present form I will be the first man to violate the provisions of the bill and challenge it by going to the courts and trying out the constitutionality of it. [Applause.]

You Republicans have been talking about the Constitution, and a few years back you were letting out a hue and cry of "Protect the Supreme Court of the United States"; you seemed to think at that time it was treason to criticize that august body; now you are blasting the Supreme Court of the United States and again you repudiate the very principles you so proudly paraded here in this body. You have advocated the protection of the Constitution, but at the present moment you are voting to violate the Constitution of the United States. We Democrats should stand by the Constitution and vote against this obnoxious monstrosity.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

Mr. Chairman, at this moment I am very proud and happy to be a Member of this great body. By action of the House a minute ago in refusing to agree to the committee amendment in section 9, I saw the rights of the people again asserted. The fearless, revolutionary stand taken by my colleagues on that occasion I wholeheartedly commend. Why, the Bill of Rights was about to be abrogated. The Bill of Rights, by this legislation, was about to be overridden, but by the fearless statesmanship of the membership of this body, I am happy to see has protected the American people, and I compliment you on asserting yourselves when you make so bold as to say by your action that all persons shall retain the right to vote—a great, big, revolutionary movement on your part.

Not only do you restore to them the right to vote but you actually give them to right to express their opinions, not publicly but privately [laughter], a fearless attitude, and the statesmanship that has been demonstrated here I could not let go by without taking opportunity to compliment you on. [Applause.] The portion of section 9 to which I refer and which the committee has so fearlessly voted to keep in the bill is as follows:

> All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but that they shall take no active part in political management or political campaigns.

This provision is perfectly silly and ridiculous. This Congress cannot by legislation tell the American people that they can retain the right to vote. This is an inherent right and one guaranteed by the Constitution, and for this Congress to say that American citizens shall have the right to express their opinions in private is to abrogate the Bill of Rights, which guarantees to every American citizen the right of freedom of speech, freedom of assemblage, and the privilege of worshiping God according to the dictates of his own conscience. You cannot remove this right guaranteed by the Constitution simply because a person holds a Federal position.

Of course, this silly language should have been stricken from the bill, and it is beneath the dignity of a great deliberative body such as the Congress of the United States to even think that they could so hoodwink and fool the public by the passage of such legislation to the extent that the public would think that the Congress was attempting to protect some sacred right of theirs. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

The question was taken and the motion was rejected.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 5, line 2, strike out the word "privately", and in lines 3 and 4 change the comma after the word "subjects" to a period and strike out all the words in lines 3 and 4 thereafter.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, this really brings us to the milk in the coconut. If you wish to write into this bill or to leave in the bill as you have done by defeating the committee amendment the limitation upon the right of officials in administrative or supervisory capacities to express their own opinions upon political subjects, you will have denied the right of free speech guaranteed by the first amendment of our Constitution. If you leave those words in there, you at the same time deny liberty to American citizens merely because they happen to be officials of our Government, in violation of the guaranty of the fifth amendment, for due process of law is not supplied by such a statute as this bill proposes.

In addition to these considerations, although the ex post facto inhibition of the Constitution only applies in criminal cases, there is here a plain analogy, for when a man goes under the civil service, he voluntarily "takes the veil" in exchange for the assurance of perpetuity in office, which is not present as to any office not under civil service. Therefore he voluntarily bargains and surrenders his rights of free speech and liberty of action for the quid pro quo of that guaranty. So he knows in advance what is going to happen to him and he voluntarily accepts the position with that string to it, but here you would make every one of the officeholders in an administrative or supervisory capacity in the United States, who entered upon the performance of their duty in office without any knowledge of any such restriction as you here would place subject to these provisions ex post facto, and without a choice; in other words, you would take away from them the rights that they had when they accepted their offices.

Pretermitting further discussion of the constitutional aspects of this question for the moment, I invite the serious attention of Members on both sides of the aisle while I talk a little practical, plain, common sense.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. MICHENER. Will the gentleman please read the sentence as it would read with his amendment adopted?

Mr. HOBBS. The concluding sentence of section 9 would read as follows:

> All persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

What I rose to say is simply this. Every single solitary pernicious activity is interdicted by the terms of this bill. Every abuse of power, bribery, coercion, threats, intimidation, solicitation of funds from relief workers, or from anybody on relief, every exercise of official authority or influence, all of those things you cry out against are interdicted by this bill already. But when you come to this section of the bill you say that no matter how honestly a Federal officeholder in his supervisory or administrative capacity may conduct himself, no matter how clean his hands may be, he cannot participate in political management or campaigns. No matter how scrupulously he may avoid any abuse of his rights of free speech and liberty of action guaranteed by the Constitution. If you do this thing, you not only violate the Constitution, you not only violate every natural right of every citizen in the United States, but by doing this you divest him of citizenship and you have set up the process of disintegration, whereby the Government "of the people, by the people, and for the people" will have begun to perish from the earth.

I beg of you that you leave it not only to the penal provisions under this act, but also to the pains and penalties of the Corrupt Practices Act, to curb abuses of the types feared, and not deny the fundamental rights of American citizens. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Alabama be extended for 5 minutes. As far as I am concerned the gentleman has made the only rational speech I have heard this afternoon, and In view of that fact I think his time should be extended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is it not a fact that no act of Congress can deprive the people of the right to their opinions on political matters?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course; the gentleman is absolutely right. I am pleading that we do not commit the asininity of attempting to repeal the Constitution by act of Congress.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Would not the gentleman's purpose be accomplished if he would leave the language in that sentence with the exception of the word "privately"?

Mr. HOBBS. No, sir.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. What further is there that would be in conflict with the Constitution?

Mr. HOBBS. The rest of that section—

But they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns—

Would still be there, and I contend that liberty of action is just as much a right as freedom of speech.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The gentleman contends that that is in conflict with the constitutionality authority also?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir. I am perfectly sure of it in my own mind, and not only that, but I maintain that if there were no such thing as the Constitution, we would still be violating the fundamental concepts of this Government when we inhibit activity on the part of our people, or any one of our people, in that greatest art known to democracy, the art of self-government. I believe that you gentlemen of the minority can see this as plainly as I. It is not a political question. When you come down to it there is no finer, higher attribute of an American citizen than the capacity and right to participate in government by democratic processes, and there is no nobler art than that of seeking, honestly and purely, to lead the thinking of fellow citizens on political questions. [Applause.] I believe that is what we should do. I think we should encourage rather than inhibit that. I am not trying to sway your emotions—if I could I would not—but in this solemn hour I warn you that you think for yourselves, clearly and soberly, on this most important subject. I reiterate that every abuse conceivable is curbed and interdicted by this bill.

It is punishable not only under the penal provisions of this bill but it is also punishable under the corrupt-practices law. I beg of you that you stop, look, and listen before you run over the warning signboards of experience and history, merely on the caprice or whim of the moment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am delighted to yield to my friend.

Mr. McCORMACK. "To express privately their opinion," under that language is it beyond the realm of probability or possibility that a man could only be protected if he expressed his opinions to his own wife? In other words, if he expressed them to anyone else politically, and if he occupies an official position, he would come within the purview of the language as now contained in the bill?

Mr. HOBBS. I think so, sir. I think also that you are right in saying that the courts could interpret that in any way they might see fit. I also submit that both the words "privately" and "active" are utterly stupid and have no place in any legislation, because of the impossibility of clear definition. I could say, "Well, I am only making a political speech in my own behalf, but I am not active. I am not actively espousing my cause. I am simply, soberly, and clearly submitting the issues to my constituents." And who could condemn me for political activity if the courts agreed with me, and they might? What you should do is what is done in the rest of this bill—shoot squarely at the abuses of liberty. Shoot squarely at those things which disgrace our democratic processes. We have systematically in this bill interdicted all forms of coercion, intimidation, threats, bribery, by promise of a job, or by threat of deprivation. [Applause.]

I submit that my amendment ought to be passed. Let us all rise to this occasion. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the acting chairman of the committee is for the amendment?

Mr. CELLER. We will support that amendment.

Mr. MICHENER. I am opposed to it. I want to be heard in opposition at some time.

Mr. CELLER. I will yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. MICHENER. No. Just so I am not shut off.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to recognition, if he wishes to be recognized at this time.

Mr. MICHENER. No; just so I am not shut off.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] is recognized.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, as acting chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I wish to state that after brief consultation with other members of the committee I feel that we should accept this amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. We feel it is a good amendment.

On the subject generally of political activity of non-civil-service Federal employees, let me point out what a very famous Republican once said about the impracticality of trying to enforce these strict rules as far as these nonclassified employees are concerned. I refer to Theodore Roosevelt, who had the following to say on this subject:

I had become convinced that it was undesirable and impossible to lay down a rule for public officers not in the classified service which should limit their political activity as strictly as we could rightly and properly limit the activity of those in whose choice and retention the element of political considerations did not enter; and afterward I became convinced that in its actual construction, if there was any pretense of applying it impartially, it inevitably worked unevenly, and, as a matter of fact, inevitably produced an impression of hyprocrisy in those who asserted that it worked evenly. Officeholders must not use their offices to control political movements, must not neglect their public duties, must not cause public scandal by their activity; but outside of the classified service the effort to go further than this had failed so signally at the time when the eleventh report, which you have quoted, was written, and its unwisdom had been so thoroughly demonstrated that I felt it necessary to try to draw the distinction therein indicated.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. In my opinion, the Hobbs amendment is a very democratic amendment and should be voted for unanimously by the House.

Mr. THORKELSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. THORKELSON. Is it not a fact that the people themselves reserved the right in the tenth amendment to do as they pleased in regard to voting and expressing their opinions?

Mr. CELLER. I think that is right.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. CREAL. Unless the word "privately" is stricken out, just when is an expression made in private and in public? Is a hotel lobby with six men present public or private, or do you have to take them around behind the house and whisper to them privately?

Mr. CELLER. Well, it is hard to tell.

I am revising these remarks after this bill was passed, and am making this statement more or less in retrospect after what has happened in the House and which led to the passage of this measure. I particularly wish to point out two factors: In the excitement of debate the House accepted an amendment providing that no one can remain in the employ of the Government if he advocates the overthrow of the Government. The words usually used are "overthrow of the Government by force and violence." The words "by force and violence" were omitted, apparently advisedly. What does all this mean? This can be construed to give some very unusual results. It may mean that anyone who believes that the Government should not remain static and unchanged can be dismissed from service, in pursuance of the terms of this bill, or can have his salary withheld from him by the Comptroller General. It means, further, that anyone in the employ of the Government who advocates a constitutional amendment, who advocates the overthrow or the change of our Government by legal means—that is, by a change in the Constitution—would suffer these aforementioned penalties.

Just what is meant by the "overthrow of the Government"? I presume the author of this amendment intended it to mean a sort of revolution; a change from a democracy to a dictatorship—a dictatorship of communism, fascism, or nazi-ism. But the language does not say that. Intent may be one thing, but the actual words used may be quite different from the intent.

The other factor I wish to point out is this: In the excitement of debate an amendment was permitted to include control of primaries within the provisions of the bill. We cannot control primaries. That is a matter purely within the jurisdiction of the various States. The Supreme Court has thrown out bills as unconstitutional when they attempt to affect or control primaries. Yet here we include a clause as an amendment which is wholly unconstitutional.

Of course, in a way, the Government, as an employer, can lay down conditions precedent to govern employment through conditions relating to age, intelligence and experience. The Government cannot, however, govern the right to participate in a primary, of either a State official or a Federal official. Any such restriction is unconstitutional.

Section 9, as it was originally written and as it came from the Senate, placed greater burdens on a nonclassified administrative or supervisory officer than on anyone in the civil-service classification. I have before me a sheet entitled, "Warning—Political Activity of Classified Employees Prohibited." Referring to Presidential officials and appointees, this notice says:

> Presidential appointees are forbidden by statute to use their official authority or influence to coerce the political action of any person or body, to make any contribution for a political object to any other officer or employee of the United States, or to solicit or receive contributions for political purposes from other Federal officers or employees.

This would not preclude such appointee's contributing to a political party or his going to a Jackson Day dinner. But under section 9, as originally written and which, as originally written, was so ardently supported by many newspapers, a Presidential appointee would not be able to make a contribution to a political party or to participate in a Jackson Day dinner. This civil-service announcement further states:

> A Presidential appointee will be allowed to take such a part in political campaigns as is taken by any private citizen.

Under the bill as originally drawn, section 9 and section 2 would have made it utterly impossible for a Presidential appointee to take part in a political campaign on parity with a private citizen.

Because of my protests and those of my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee we were responsible for at least getting amendments to the bill which were offered by Congressman DEMPSEY and which Senator HATCH finally accepted. Without our fight the bill would have been rushed through the House as it was rushed through the Senate—with all the obnoxious provisions intact.

Under the civil-service rules, employees in the executive civil-service branch of the Government working in the District of Columbia are now permitted to run for local office in those municipalities adjacent to the District of Columbia. Under the Hatch bill all this is changed and made impossible. I herewith insert the order of the Civil Service Commission permitting such local political activity:

> Employees residing in municipalities near the District of Columbia: Employees of the executive civil service permanently residing in the following incorporated municipalities adjacent to the District of Columbia will not be prohibited from becoming candidates for or holding municipal office in such corporations:
> In Maryland—Takoma Park, Kensington, Garrett Park, Chevy Chase, Glen Echo, Hyattsville, Mount Rainier, Somerset, North Beach, Capitol Heights, Laurel, Riverdale, Bladensburg, Brentwood, Berwyn Heights, Cottage City, North Brentwood, Edmonston, Colmar Manor, Fairmont Heights, Eagle Harbor, Cobb Island, Seat Pleasant, Cheverly, District Heights.
> In Virginia—Falls Church, Vienna, Herndon, Potomac.
> In the exercise of the privilege granted by this order, officers and employees must not neglect their official duties and must not engage in National, State, or county political activity in violation of the civil-service rules, and if there is such violation, the head of the department or independent office in which the person is employed shall inflict such punishment as the Civil Service Commission shall recommend.
> The Civil Service Commission may extend the privilege of this order to other incorporated municipalities in Maryland and Virginia when it shall deem it necessary to the domestic interests of the Government employees resident therein.

All of the above is now prohibited under the terms of the new Hatch bill.

I also give you another order from the Civil Service Commission concerning employees of the navy yards, arsenals, and military establishments.

> Employees of navy yards, arsenals, and military establishments: Whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War a strict enforcement of the provisions of section 1, rule I, of the civil-service rules would influence the result of a local election the issue of which materially affects the local welfare of the Government employees in the vicinity of any navy yard or station or of any arsenal or other military establishment, the Civil Service Commission may, on recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, and after such investigation as it may deem necessary, permit the active participation of the employees of the yard, station, arsenal, or other military establishment in such local election. In the exercise of the privilege which may be conferred hereunder, persons affected must not neglect their official duties nor cause public scandal by their activity.

The above order is utterly nullified by the new Hatch bill.

All of the above appears strange indeed. But stranger still is the fact that the Senate swallowed these provisions hook, line, and sinker, without even a debate, when the matter was presented a second time to the Senate. These are strange happenings. This bill was not considered with the dry light of reason. There were many selfish motives which actuated the Members of both Houses. The fight centers around the control of delegates to the next Democratic Convention. The work of the House Judiciary Committee, which committee worked fearlessly and judiciously, was primarily impaired.

I should like sometime to tell the whole story concerning this measure; it would make very interesting reading. But this is neither the time nor the place.

As the bill originally came from the Senate, even our secretaries could not have aided us in our campaigns. See how ridiculous that was. Only because of our remonstrances in the Judiciary Committee did the authors of the bill permit changes in the operating and penalty sections of the bill. Only because of our insistence were the policy-making appointees of the President exempted from the provisions of this measure. Also, only because of our insistence were the members of the President's Cabinet excluded. Just imagine, the President endeavoring to test out some theory, measure, plan, or policy, and being unable to permit one of his trusted lieutenants to sound out public opinion by making a political speech!

This Hatch bill delivers a telling blow against our party system. Jefferson said:

The party has a great useful nationalizing influence, creating national opinion and judgments as over against local interests and preferences. The greater the centralization of government the greater becomes the necessity of opposition party.

To the extent that this bill strikes at these pronouncements, it is an unmitigated evil.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute amendment for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MICHENER as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS: Page 5, line 1, after the word "shall", strike out the rest of the line and all of line 2 and line 3, including the word "shall"; so that the paragraph will read "all such persons shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns."

Mr. MICHENER. I say to the Members that I offered this same amendment in the committee. There is no question about the constitutionality. What the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has said is largely true so far as constitutionality is concerned, because we cannot deny, under our Constitution, any individual in this country the right to vote as he pleases, and the right to express privately his own opinion on public subjects. So I attempted to eliminate that in the committee, and I think it would have been eliminated if the whole sentence had not been eliminated.

By eliminating what I have suggested, by accepting this substitute, you eliminate useless words.

There is no question about the constitutionality of the substitute which I have offered. If you want something to talk about, if you want an excuse, then you may toy with words; but if you want to get right down to substance and accomplishment, then accept this substitute. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

There is no Member of this House who has a higher regard than I for the distinguished gentleman from Michigan. When he speaks on legal matters I always give ear; but I am so bold as to accept his challenge and to say that I think his amendment, which is helpful as far as it goes, has not corrected the unconstitutionality of even that part of section 9 to which it is addressed. I want to say before I pass on that his invoking of the precedent of the civil-service law has no application whatsoever, for the reasons I have attempted to give, namely, those men have taken the veil voluntarily and with full knowledge of those regulations which restrict their freedom in exchange for the assurance that they cannot be separated from the pay roll, whereas the officers we are now talking about have accepted their commissions for full terms with no such knowledge; hence it would be absolutely an ex post facto law as to them, if ex post facto applied to purely civil matters.

Along this same line let me say that, whether or not it be unconstitutional, in view of the presumption indulged in favor of every congressional enactment, I advance the argument that if I were one of these iniquitous—and that is how they class Federal officials—iniquitous Federal officials in an administrative or supervisory capacity, and a political campaign were in progress, I believe there is no constitution ever written by man, I believe there is no principle of divine justice that would say that I should be deprived of the privilege of defending my own administration. That is what you do here, however; you say that my mouth shall be closed if I am active. What does "active" mean? No one can define it. It is, therefore, upon its face an absurdity. I maintain that I can be within my legal rights and just as active as a bee in a tar bucket and violate no law of God or man. The Congress of the United States, in view of the context of section 9, ought not to seek—even without any question of constitutionality being raised—to interdict that kind of action, for the preceding part of section 9 has absolutely forbidden me as a Federal official to use my official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. All that the succeeding portion of section 9 undertakes to do, therefore, is to deprive me, not of the prestige of my office in exercising my political influence, but of my own personal right under the Constitution and the laws of the United States of pure, clean action, no matter how active I may be, in defense of my own administration.

This is simply highway robbery; and you men, no matter on which side of the aisle you sit, by your oath are bound, as I am, to support the Constitution and the laws of the United States and her proud traditions. You are not, therefore, going to condemn unheard that big group of Federal officeholders who are just as clean as you are, and who will conduct themselves in the future as they have in the past—with the highest morality. That is the salvation of this or any other democracy, and when you destroy it you have set to work the forces of dissolution. I, therefore, ask you to vote down this well-intentioned substitute and to vote up my amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. PARSONS. Does the gentleman not seek to do throughout this bill just the very thing he is describing this legislation does in principle?

Mr. HOBBS. Thank you for that question, sir. No, sir; I do not believe so. I do not for 1 minute think that Congress has not the power to interdict and inhibit all fraud, corruption, use of official power for coercion, intimidation, threats, or what not, interfering with the fairness of free elections. I believe that the sanctity of our homes, the perpetuity of our Government, depends upon the utmost limit of eradication of all evil influences in our elections, and not until we do that have we done our duty; but when we go beyond that point we have transcended the bounds of legitimate legislation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) there were—ayes 114, noes 152.

So the substitute was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes 191, noes 3.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: On page 4, strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and on page 5, strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may chose and to express their opinion on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer or employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States, (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President, (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments, (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

"(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person."

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to speak for 5 minutes, because I have explained this amendment several times.

Section 9, as reported by the Senate, was rather confusing in that the author of the bill, Senator HATCH, and those who sposored the bill with him—Senators SHEPPARD and AUSTIN—did not propose to put a restriction on the executive branch of the Government to the extent that the bill may do in its present form.

The amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk, which has just been read, clearly exempts the President and Vice President of the United States, as well as the staff of the President and those who obtain their salaries from the appropriation made for White House purposes. It also exempts all heads of executive departments, Cabinet members and their assistants, and all policy-making officials that have a national scope, such as, for instance, the head of the Work Relief Agency. That has a national scope.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. Does not the gentleman realize his amendment permits the people who are mentioned in the amendment to use their official authority to influence elections?

Mr. DEMPSEY. No; I do not so construe the amendment.

Mr. WALTER. Whether the gentleman does or not, that is exactly what it says.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman does not concede that his amendment would deprive people working on public-works projects or on relief projects of their political rights and activities?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Not at all. They may express their political preference as they see fit.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I would like to secure a little information from the gentleman right along the line suggested by the gentleman from California. Many provisions of this bill seek to protect the W. P. A. worker from being exploited by politicians; is that correct?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Is there anything in the bill that will protect a Congressman from being hung in effigy in the public square at the hands of W. P. A. workers for doing his duty?

Mr. DEMPSEY. As I look at the distinguished gentleman from Virginia, I am quite sure he would be able to protect himself in case of attack.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PARSONS. I notice the gentleman's amendment exempts Cabinet officers and certain other officials.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. PARSONS. Why is it a worse crime for the poor fellow who is out in the open somewhere, drawing $100 or $150 a month, to engage in political campaigns any more than a Cabinet officer?

Mr. DEMPSEY. The sin that attaches to that is this: He engages in political campaigns in most instances as he is directed, as he is forced to engage in it. That is the difference. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to our distinguished Speaker.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Committee by its recent action on the Hobbs amendment practically voted in favor of the adoption of the Hobbs amendment, did it not?

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Hobbs amendment struck the following provision in the bill: "They shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns." The gentleman's amendment still retains that language. Is there not a conflict between the recent action of the Committee and the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This amendment would eliminate the Hobbs amendment, and my amendment would be the entire section 9 if adopted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But it is in opposition to the recent action of the Committee when it agreed to the Hobbs amendment?

Mr. DEMPSEY. This permits any person to express his political preference as he may see fit. It does not permit people in the executive branch, except those specifically exempt, to manage a campaign or to be politically active in a campaign.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman realize that by his amendment he places the Congress in the ridiculous position of permitting the President of the United States and the Vice President to express their opinions on political questions?

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Mexico may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire no additional time.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOBBS to the amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: Strike out of the Dempsey amendment the following words: "No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns."

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PATRICK. If the Dempsey amendment is adopted, does not that entirely dispose of section 9 as amended by the gentleman from Alabama? If so, how does the gentleman from Alabama now come back with an amendment to the Dempsey amendent, which is to abrogate the entire action just taken by the Committee in sustaining the position of the gentleman from Alabama?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is now offering an amendment to the substitute which was offered by the gentleman from New Mexico. In answer to the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman the Chair will state that if the Dempsey substitute amendment, whether amended or not, is adopted, it will abrogate the previous proceedings taken by the Committee as to section 9.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. In other words, the Dempsey amendment is an amendment to the Hobbs amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico is in the nature of a substitute for the entire section, which was amended a little while ago by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take the 5 minutes allotted me. I simply wish to take this opportunity to explain as clearly as I can in a minute or two the parliamentary situation.

The Committee amendment was voted down. That left in the section the words that were proposed to be stricken by the Committee amendment. By the adoption of my amendment the Committee of the Whole House, by an almost unanimous vote, struck out the word "privately" and the other offensive words from the latter part of section 9.

The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] now offers a substitute for section 9 which has many good qualities. It may be more desirable than the present section 9, provided we again strike out those same offensive words which he has again employed. My amendment simply seeks to strike out those offensive words which 5 minutes ago we struck out of old section 9. I hope we will strike them out of the Dempsey amendment and then decide between the section as it had been amended before the introduction of the Dempsey substitute amendment, and the remainder of the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am very happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman's amendment practically nullifies the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. HOBBS. No; the Dempsey amendment now offered would nullify my amendment, but the amendment which I am now offering to his amendment will improve his amendment and make it acceptable legislation, whereas now it is not so.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman's amendment would nullify the purpose of the Hatch bill.

Mr. HOBBS. No; not at all. I believe that the Hatch bill, as I have stated repeatedly today, is aimed at abuses of liberty, at corruption, at fraud, at coercion, at intimidation, and at interference with the free electorate of America. Those things I espouse wholeheartedly, and so do the vast majority of the Members of this House. However, this is something that strikes at the root of our fundamental liberties as we have them stated in our Bill of Rights. I do not believe we are injuring the Dempsey amendment in the slightest degree when we strike out this part which I am seeking to have stricken out by my amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CELLER. If I understand the parliamentary situation correctly, the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama strikes out certain words from the Dempsey amendment, namely:

> No officer or employee of the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

But when the question recurs on the Dempsey amendment, I take it the gentleman will oppose the Dempsey amendment because of the overwhelmingly favorable attitude shown to the gentleman's amendment. The gentleman prefers his own amendment to the Dempsey amendment, I take it.

Mr. HOBBS. If the Committee adopts my amendment and strikes those words from the Dempsey amendment, then I believe that everyone would be free to vote for the present section 9 as now amended and in the bill, or for the Dempsey amendment as amended by my amendment, whichever way he might see fit, and I would have no quarrel with him; but unless my amendment is adopted, striking those offensive words from the Dempsey amendment, I respectfully submit that none of us can safely vote for the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. CELLER. But if those words are stricken out of the Dempsey amendment, the gentleman would still prefer his own amendment as against the Dempsey amendment?

Mr. HOBBS. I have answered that, sir.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the questions of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and the answers thereto are perhaps confusing. If the amendment the gentleman has pending now to the Dempsey substitute is adopted, then the gentleman will not be going back on the previous amendment that was adopted to section 9 as it stands now because, whatever is passed, either the gentleman's amendment to the Dempsey substitute or section 9, as amended, the bill would not have in it the words that the gentleman is talking about.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right.

Mr. RAYBURN. I do not know how others may feel, but it appears to me that with those words stricken out the Dempsey substitute will certainly be preferable to section 9 as it now stands in the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. In answer to the question of the distinguished majority leader, that was exactly why I declined to pass judgment on that matter. I am not here fighting windmills; I am fighting for what I conceive to be vital principles of Americanism; and when this bridge is crossed and these words are stricken from the Dempsey amendment, then I have no further zeal as to whether the Members of this House may prefer the bill as now written or as it would be changed by the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, there need be no misunderstanding about this matter. The Hobbs amendment offered a minute ago in substance strikes out the language "but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns." That strikes at the purpose of the Hatch bill. When you take that out you have ruined it, and no one familiar with it at all will contradict what I say; surely no member of the Judiciary Committee.

You have now ruined section 9 by adopting the Hobbs amendment to that section. I think there were three or four of us who realized what it was about and did not vote for it, but that is the situation in which you find yourselves now. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] knew the effectiveness of his amendment. His amendments are not idle gestures.

This amendment which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] has offered to the Dempsey amendment will be just as deadly to the Dempsey amendment as it was to section 9. What I ask you to do is to accept this part of the Dempsey amendment and restore to the bill the eliminated part which was vital in the last sentence of section 9.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] left this much of the last sentence of section 9:

> All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

This is perfectly harmless, and I ask that that be stricken out. That is what Mr. HOBBS leaves, and he strikes out the vital part. You cannot take away from a person the right to vote as he pleases, under our Constitution, yet the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] stressed that and left it in the bill, and you voted for it. You listened to a good speech and voted for form and not substance.

I now say to you that the Dempsey amendment does what I attempted to do, so far as this phase of it is concerned. It restores what was stricken out.

We discussed this thoroughly in committee, and I dare say there is no member of the committee, because it certainly was not partisan, who will deny what I have said. There is not any question about it.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman is making a very clear statement and every word he says is correct, except his intimation that I put those foolish words into the bill. I simply did not move to strike them out because I knew that they amounted to nothing.

Mr. MICHENER. I will answer the gentleman by saying that he is absolutely correct. The gentleman is a splendid lawyer, he is a good legislator, and he knew exactly what he was doing. Because he left a few meaningless words in the sentence some of the Members applauded and voted for his speech without much reference to his amendment. The things he left in the bill, as every man knows who knows anything at all about this bill, are guaranteed by the Constitution anyway, and we could not take these rights away.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. My time is going, and I just have not the time to yield.

Now, may I say in conclusion that if you believe in the principles of the Hatch bill, if you believe that these people employed by the Government should take no active part in political management or in political campaigns—and if this bill has not that purpose in mind, then it has no purpose whatever—then you will vote against the Hobbs amendment when the time comes in the House, if there is a roll call, and you will now vote against the Hobbs amendment to the Dempsey substitute. [Applause.]

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Hobbs amendment. I think it is in order to explain the parliamentary situation and clarify the existing situation with relation to this amendment. As the bill came before this Committee of the Whole, all of lines 1 to 4, reading—

All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns—

It carried a committee amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary to strike out these words. That is to say, a committee amendment was proposed to strike those words out. When the committee amendments were submitted to the Committee of the Whole for consideration, this body voted down that committee amendment, which left in the bill all of those words to which I have referred. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] then moved as a substitute for the words which were left in the bill as a result of voting down the committee amendment, the words—

All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express their opinion on all political subjects—

That motion was agreed to. There never was a definite, positive motion made to present to the House the question as to whether or not we should retain the words—but they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

Those words were stricken out of the bill by negation. They were not stricken out positively and definitely, so that the statement that has been made on the floor that the Committee of the Whole has already passed on this amendment proposed by Mr. HOBBS is, I submit, incorrect. The Committee of the Whole has never had an opportunity to pass squarely upon the question of whether those words shall be retained or rejected, except that when the Committee of the Whole voted down the committee amendment its vote had the incidental effect of retaining them, and the vote on the Hobbs substitute had the incidental effect of striking them out. The question before us right now on the Hobbs amendment is whether we shall strike out the words:

No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government or any agency or department thereof shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns.

On this motion we have before us for the first time squarely the question as to whether or not we shall retain those words in this bill. I submit that those words are the heart of this bill. I proposed an amendment earlier in the proceedings this afternoon which was adopted; that is, a substitute amendment was adopted which had the effect in another part of the bill of keeping in the bill the very thing that is now sought by this amendment to be stricken out.

I submit that it may reasonably be contended that the House has already passed inferentially on the question now before us and has voted in favor of retaining a provision that the holders of these executive offices shall not have the right to engage in political management or in political campaigns. I submit that this record demonstrates that this body has not passed squarely and directly on this question, and that it now has that opportunity. I trust that the Committee of the Whole will vote down the Hobbs amendment to the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Will the leaving out of the Hobbs amendment and the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from New Mexico make this prohibition to which the gentleman refers apply to a more limited group of people than it would have done originally?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. The Hobbs amendment strikes out this prohibition entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended for 2 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. BARRY. Does the gentleman seriously believe that a Cabinet member or an executive head of a department is any more free from pressure from the higher ups than is the small fry down in the lower ranks, whose right the Dempsey amendment seeks to take away?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I think the Dempsey amendment is designed to protect the small employee, that is to say, the small employee in the ranks.

Mr. BARRY. Why not protect the Cabinet members?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Oh, the Cabinet members can protect themselves.

Mr. McCORMACK. Does the gentleman feel that a United States attorney should not be permitted to engage in a political campaign for his own party?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I am perfectly willing that all United States attorneys, both of my party and the other party, should not engage in political activity.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman does not think they should so engage?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. McCORMACK. Do you think Cabinet officers should be?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. This amendment does not apply to Cabinet officers.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know, but do you think Cabinet officers should be?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. With all deference to the gentleman from Massachusetts, I am not answering academic questions. We are discussing the provisions of the amendment.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Nebraska if the Hobbs amendment is adopted, if it does not entirely destroy the purpose of this bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. I have already stated that in my humble opinion it would weaken the bill very materially.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. Am I correct in assuming that the Hobbs amendment is a substitute for the Dempsey amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is an amendment to the Dempsey substitute. It is not a substitute of itself.

Mr. NICHOLS. Now, if the Hobbs amendment to the Dempsey substitute is voted down, unless time is limited, will debate be permitted on the Dempsey amendment after the Hobbs amendment is voted down, if it is voted down?

The CHAIRMAN. It will until the Committee closes debate.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong this debate. We have been here a long time, and I know the Members are very restive at this time. But I wanted to refute the statement made by the gentleman from Michigan and my colleague from Nebraska, that the heart of this bill is the words that have been sought to be stricken out by the Hobbs amendment. If you will read the bill, the first section makes it unlawful for any person to intimidate, threaten, or coerce any person in the manner they will vote. We also have another section which prohibits the use of a person's political position to influence votes. Certainly, the objective, insofar as making persons on W. P. A. untouchable has been accomplished, and I think that is the heart of this bill. I believe that is the reason we have this legislation. That is the genesis of this legislation. It was because in the State of the gentleman from New Mexico, Senator HATCH, and the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. DEMPSEY, where there was some scandal in the administration of W. P. A., this legislation was inspired. I do not say it was improperly or unjustifiedly introduced. I think it is properly and rightfully here.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEALEY. I yield.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is entirely mistaken. The Hatch bill was offered in the last session of Congress and was defeated in the Senate long before we had any W. P. A. trouble in New Mexico. This bill grew out of an investigation made by the Sheppard committee, of which Senator HATCH was a member. The investigation did not go into New Mexico, but in other States.

Mr. HEALEY. Well, the principal purpose of this bill was to cure abuses and ills that were found to exist in the administration of W. P. A. in many of the States of this Union. There are many other abuses, as has been so well argued by my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOBBS] that have been prohibited by this bill. I think it is a splendid bill if you take out this language as Mr. HOBBS has endeavored to do. He is an able lawyer and an able legislator. If you adopt his amendment, you will then have an excellent bill, and a bill which accomplishes the purposes and objectives which we have sought from the outset.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is now 10 minutes after 9. In New York City it is 10 minutes after 10. We have been here since 11 o'clock this morning. If an employer detained an employee as long as we have been held here today he would probably be arrested under the National Labor Relations Act. [Applause.]

I think there should be another amendment to this bill, and that amendment should provide a lawyer for every W. P. A. worker, because I do not know how any citizen could be expected to know his rights if we pass this bill. I suggest at this late hour to the leadership of the House that the Committee rise and take this bill up for consideration tomorrow. I do not know how any member who has been in the Chamber as we all have been this day listening to the debate and the many amendments can possibly understand what is now in this bill. I am opposed to the amendment, and I am going to vote against the bill. I think the whole bill is just tommyrot and a waste of the time of Congress. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is recognized.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, a preferential motion. I move that the Committee do now rise.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield for a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has been recognized.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, you are about to witness, after 9 or 10 hours of effort on this floor today, the disemboweling of this bill. Make no mistake about that. A little while ago when the Hobbs amendment was written in I let it go by default, because, like all of you, I was anticipating that the Dempsey amendment would be offered. It is before you at the present time. Now comes the Hobbs amendment to the amendment, to take out the second sentence of the Dempsey amendment. What does it provide? First, let us refresh ourselves on the Dempsey amendment. The first paragraph of the first sentence provides that it shall be unlawful for anybody to use his official authority.

The second sentence provides that no person in the executive department shall be active in political campaigns and political management, and then it makes some exceptions—and this is in answer to the question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]: It excepts the President, it excepts the Vice President, it excepts the heads of the departments, it excepts those who are in policy-making jobs with relation to foreign affairs, it excepts those administrators who are administering in a Nation-wide capacity. It applies, then, to everybody else. That, gentlemen, is the guts of the bill, and they are trying to take it out at this late hour. I admonish you not to let them do it, for if they do there will be raucous laughter over on this side, and there should be, for after 10 hours of effort we will have wasted every moment of labor in order to put upon the statute books of this country a bill that would outlaw pernicious political activity. Mark you well, that is the proposition that is before us. You must vote down the Hobbs amendment. We must preserve the Dempsey amendment intact or we will have lost all the labor of this day. Make no mistake about it. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, this will be the first time that I have spoken through the microphone, and I want to say that I do not intend to consume the 5 minutes allotted to me because I can see that the Democrats, as well as the Republicans, are hungry and tired.

Mr. Chairman, I will not support any legislative measure, no matter who sponsors it, if it deprives citizens of the right to advocate the political philosophy in which they believe. I have high regard for the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]. However, I think his amendment is undemocratic.

I desire to make the following statement, which I consider very important. I have been informed by Members of the House that if it were not for the newspapers attacking them they would not support the Dempsey amendment to the Hatch bill because they believe the adoption of the Dempsey amendment would be very undemocratic.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman makes a charge. I suggest that the gentleman name the Members, rather than indict all of them.

Mr. DUNN. I recognize the voice of the gentleman interrogating me. It is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]. If the gentleman doubts my word I will put up $100 to his $25, the money to be given for the benefit of Catholic, Protestant, and Hebrew orphans in Washington, D. C., if he can prove that my statement is incorrect.

Mr. Chairman, one of the basic principles of our Constitution is the freedom of speech and when we pass legislation which deprives our citizens of the right to express their opinion regarding politics, or any other subject, we are getting away from the democratic form of government. A citizen should have the right to advocate any kind of philosophy in which he believes whether it be communism, socialism, nazi-ism, fascism, or any other kind of ism. We are not compelled to subscribe to these philosophies or any other doctrine. Do not let us pass legislation which will obstruct freedom of speech, freedom of the press, and freedom of assemblage. [Applause.]

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I voted with good conscience for the Hobbs amendment as it applied to the original language of section 9A. That original language covered "any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress." When you say that all people covered by this language shall take no active part in political management or political campaigns you are going a step too far; you are denying that right to some officials who must retain it if you are going to continue the two-party system upon which our Government rests. A President of the United States should have the right to defend his record in the arena of politics, and the same thing is true of a Cabinet member or policy-making officials, who naturally must defend the policies for which they are responsible in the field of political activity. But when you take the Hobbs amendment and apply it to the Dempsey amendment for section 9, the proposition is not the same at all. It produces a different result—a result to which I am opposed. The reason is perfectly clear, because the Dempsey amendment for section 9 exempts—

(1) The President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

By these exemptions now before the House the Hobbs amendment is no longer necessary or justified.

May I also refer to the language on page 5, which previously restricted a political opinion from an administrative or supervisory employee to "private" expression. That was a denial of free speech, and it was in conflict with constitutional rights. The word "privately" has been killed, and it should stay killed.

In conclusion, I say that it would have been wrong to prohibit all of the persons described in the original language of section 9 from taking part in political management or political campaigns, but that it is right, in view of all the abuses we have witnessed in recent years, to apply such a ban with the limitations of coverage described in the pending Dempsey amendment. I voted for the application of the Hobbs amendment to the first set of circumstances. I shall vote against its application to the entirely different set of circumstances which now prevail.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Hobbs amendment to the Dempsey substitute close in 10 minutes.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NICHOLS. If the gentleman's motion prevails, will that cut off debate on the Dempsey amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the first time in the 15 years I have served here that I have come face to face with a proposition where the minority party is writing our election laws for the country. What my constituency desires is less regulation, less Federal discipline, and more freedom and more liberty.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Chairman, is not to liberate or free the American voter, but it has as its purpose the denial of political freedom and the right to vote to the rank and file of the American people.

Whom does this regulate? Does it regulate the Governors? No. Does it prohibit the President from making his speeches? No. How about Members of Congress, can they speak? Yes. How about Senators? Yes. Those who are confirmed by the Senate and draw large Federal salaries can participate in political activities.

To whom is this bill directed? It is directed at the weak and underpaid Federal employee. It is not to remove from him the fear of casting his vote properly, but it is to put in his heart the fear that if he defends his political right, defends a principle in which he believes, defends an administration of which he is a part, attends a public dinner with the leaders of his party, contributes 5 cents for an advertisement for his political party, or engages in any kind of political activity, he will be branded as a Federal law violator.

Mr. Chairman, if you are going to place this handicap upon the weak of our Nation, why do you not place it on the rich and politically powerful? Is it right and proper to place upon the W. P. A. employee a penalty and burden that you would not place upon the chairman of your party?

I think it is wrong and un-American for this Congress to legislate to curtail the political right and the political freedom of the W. P. A. employee in my district, who is laboring with a spade for $26 per month.

Mr. Chairman, I choose not to say anything about this bill, but it is apparent that about 10 percent of the Democratic Members of the House will join with the Republican Members of the House and pass this Republican measure. You are going to do it in order to eliminate from the freedom of casting their ballot and attending their little 50-cent dinners given in their own cause the underpaid $26-a-month W. P. A. employees in my district.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the Hobbs amendment, and unless this bill is materially changed I shall vote against its passage. I shall vote to uphold the political rights of the meekest of Federal employees. [Applause.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes 68, noes 158.

So the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOOK].

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to know that the Members of the House recognize the fact that I was correct when I contended that this bill was unconstitutional and violated the Constitution of the United States. Yes; you on the Republican side can become noisy, but your leaders on that side have had to admit that I was right when I pointed out its unconstitutionality. It is hard to swallow, is it not? Now, you are attempting to remedy the mistake and bring it within the provisions of the Constitution. You have not yet, nor will you, accomplish that most impossible feat.

You cannot make this bill constitutional while you are depriving people of their rights. You are now trying to make the bill constitutional by adopting the Hobbs amendment. You tried to make it constitutional by attempting to adopt the Michener amendment, but that was pointed at the flagrant violation of the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States. How about the violation of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States? I would like to have you think that over, because this bill is unconstitutional, even though you adopt the Hobbs amendment or the Dempsey amendment, or even if you would have adopted the Michener amendment. It is absolutely unconstitutional in all its phases because it is obnoxious to the principles of a free people as handed down to us through the sacrifice of our patriots.

Let me call your attention to the fact that you are now considering what is known as the Hobbs amendment, and then you will consider the Dempsey amendment. That is to section 9. If you will refer to section 4 of the bill, you will find that it states:

Except as may be required by the provisions of subsection (b) of section 9 of this act, it shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, a person of a position—

And so forth. Now, why are there any exceptions? You may say, "We are going to put an amendment in this bill, but we are going to except certain individuals and allow them to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive, by any means, any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit." You are going to try to stop that coercion. Why have any exceptions? If it is unlawful for one person to deprive another of his position, work, or compensation, then it is just as unlawful for another person to do so, even though he holds high office in this Government. Since when is a right determined by the amount of salary a person receives? Is it any more unlawful for a supervisor or another employee to do the threatening than it is for a high official in the Government service to do the threatening?

I think you ought to stop, look, and listen. I think we should vote this whole bill down and stand on the principles of the Constitution of the United States as laid down by our founding fathers. This bill is absolutely unconstitutional. You have admitted it by your own actions. I hope you will stand by the Constitution and vote this bill down. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were ayes 122, noes 148.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. HOBBS and Mr. MICHENER.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 124, noes 200.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARSONS as an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: At the end of the Dempsey amendment, add a new paragraph, as follows:

"It shall be unlawful for any newspaper, magazine, or other printed periodical, or any printing organization, to accept funds in payment for political advertisements. It shall also be unlawful for any editor of any publication, or any writer, to express editorially or otherwise an opinion with reference to the candidacy of any person for an elective office of the United States or to attend any meeting or conference where the candidacy of any person is to be discussed. The right to vote as one sees fit shall not be abridged by this section."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the proposed amendment is not germane.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman has not spoken on the amendment yet.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet making the point of order. Nothing is contained in this whole bill with reference to newspapers or newspaper writers.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

This bill is a bill to prevent pernicious political activity. This amendment to the Dempsey amendment seeks to prevent pernicious political activity both by the candidates who run for Federal office and, of course, by the newspapers of the country. Therefore, the amendment is perfectly germane to the bill in every respect.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BUCK). The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair has no doubt as to the germaneness of the amendment to the bill. However, the Chair is of the belief, and will rule accordingly, that this amendment is not germane to the substitute which has been offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY]. The Chair, therefore, at this time will sustain the point of order.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I presume that every member of the Committee has read the Dempsey amendment, but in the event you have not I would like to have your attention for a minute in order that I may read it to you.

It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects.

For the purposes of this section—

Now, listen—

the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President—

Which includes his secretaries, the Budget officers, and a few other fortunate people—

(3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relation with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

These people are exempt from the provisions of this amendment. Why? I have heard no one assign a reason, so I am constrained to believe that they are exempt simply because they are a preferred class of officeholders in the United States.

Why should you deprive the man who wants to take part in his Government, who lives in my congressional district, who holds an unimportant Federal job, from the right of expressing his opinion on things vitally affecting this Nation and in the same bill give that right, which you deny him, to those people who have an important enough position that they must be confirmed by the Senate of the United States? In the name of common sense, has it come to the place where this Congress is going to say that the test of a man's being honorable and honest and upright is the amount of salary that he draws from the Federal Government?

Is this Congress ready to say that we cannot trust you, Mr. Citizen, if you are on the Federal pay roll and do not make over five or six thousand dollars a year? This sets off by itself, in a class preferred, Federal employees, the test of their honor, honesty, and integrity being the amount of money they draw as compensation from the Federal Government.

I do not believe this House is going to agree to any such amendment and then go home and face their country politicians and their constituents and say "I was willing to give the right to be politically active to a man who was appointed by the President, to the Cabinet and to all men who must be confirmed by the United States Senate, but you, you little wart, are not important enough for the Congress of the United States to assume that you are honorable, honest, and upright in your political intentions."

I shall not prescribe to such a philosophy, because the man or woman who holds the lowliest Federal position in my congressional district is just as honest, sincere, and conscientious in their political viewpoint as is the President of the United States or any member of his Cabinet, and I shall not vote to make fish of one and fowl of the other.

A nonrelief W. P. A. timekeeper on X project in X county in my district can be possessed of as much political integrity and honesty as can the President, you, me, or any one of the people given preferred status by this amendment, and I shall never support an amendment to any bill which attempts to discriminate against the political opinion and viewpoint of my W. P. A. timekeeper in favor of the President or any other officeholder within the United States.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am seriously concerned with the danger to the right of the man or woman who has been forced on W. P. A. to exercise his rights as an American citizen, and I am very apprehensive over the effect that the Dempsey amendment will have on these rights. It is my opinion that if this amendment is adopted in its present form, it will definitely say to the W. P. A. worker that he cannot actively participate in a political campaign. It will deprive him of his constitutional right to work actively for or against any candidate that he may see fit to support or oppose. This type of legislation is legislation which punishes the American men and women who have been forced on the relief rolls of this country through no fault of their own, and I submit that a vote for the Dempsey amendment is a vote which will absolutely establish that the unemployed of this country who are on W. P. A. shall have no right whatsoever to actively participate in any political campaign.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HANCOCK. Does the gentleman regard those on W. P. A. as holding administrative positions?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. This amendment covers everybody on W. P. A., from the administrator who receives $5,000 a year to the unemployed who receive $55 a month in the city of New York.

This particular amendment is in line with the political philosophy advanced by General Harbord, who advocated that those on relief or on W. P. A. should be deprived of their right to vote. This amendment is a step in that direction. It is a step in seven-league boots toward disenfranchising the unemployed of this country. It is a step in the direction of government by the rich and well-born, and I say, in the name of American democracy, we do not want a patrician form of government. We want that democratic form of government which our forefathers and Abraham Lincoln gave us, which gives the right of franchise to every man and woman in this country who is an American citizen.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman refer particularly to that part of the Dempsey amendment which would deprive a W. P. A. worker of the rights he refers to?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It is all-inclusive. The Dempsey amendment includes anyone receiving compensation from the Federal Government, and that includes the W. P. A. worker. If that is not true, then let us clarify that point by adopting an amendment to the Dempsey amendment, exempting the W. P. A. workers so that they do not lose their right to engage in political activity.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I asked the gentleman from New Mexico that very question, because I certainly would not vote for the amendment if I thought it would do what the gentleman thinks it will, and the gentleman from New Mexico stated it would not do that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. With all due respect to the gentleman from New Mexico, I think he is mistaken. I believe a W. P. A. worker cannot participate in a political campaign under the provisions of the Dempsey amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the Dempsey amendment close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate upon the Dempsey amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, Will Rogers, I think, said about the Ten Commandments, as produced by David Wark Griffith, that you could tell most easily where Griffith started and God stopped. There are few things that are sweeter to an American than life itself, and one of those is the right to vote and express himself politically, and the moment you step over the line there is a consciousness of it. Why is the sharp line drawn and felt today between the Dempsey amendment and the Hobbs amendment? Because Americans realize that while we are resentful of pernicious political activities, that we cross over the line when we are abridging the rights of American citizens to do that which every citizen has not only the constitutional right to do but has the fundamental right as a descendant of those who crossed the seas to do as freemen do and of such is his right to express his opinion.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. No. What light could you possibly shed on a subject like this, big boy? There is a subconscious realization of it whenever we cross over the sacred line and get into the field beyond our proper bounds. That we are about to assume to do. There is a certain class of people who will rush in where angels fear to tread; and even this body is not always safe from rashness.

Mr. BOLLES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. No; I cannot yield. I thank the gentleman for the courtesy. Politics, when properly employed, is the very life of liberty itself; and whenever we go further than is commensurate with human rights, we place a stoppage on the very thing that gives us to public life, and it was the voice and vote of political activity that placed you and me here to represent the people. Those votes expressed their opinion, no matter from what walk of life they came, and when we abridge the right to freely express the sentiments that actuate the vote, we strike down that which is dearer to an American than life itself. We got our poise here for a moment this afternoon when we adopted the Hobbs amendment. Let us get solemn and thoughtful for a change this evening and support sanity, or we may get away from being fully Americans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Chairman, I am very grateful to the Chairman of the Committee and to the Members of the House in that they have extended the privilege to me of speaking to the Committee for a few minutes. I am not going to support the amendment, and I am not going to support the bill, and my reason for it is this: The Constitution clearly provides that the powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution or denied by it to the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people. In the ninth amendment we find that the enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people. The people have reserved the right to themselves to vote. They have reserved the right to themselves to express their opinion, and Members of Congress have no right to pass any law that restricts the rights of the people. After all, the Constitution belongs to the people and it is their mandate to Congress, and you are supposed to follow that document. We are not supposed to make our own laws to tell the people what they ought to do or restrict their rights.

Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that I have had this time, and I hope that the Members will vote down the bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I have studied the Dempsey amendment carefully, and I cannot find where in that amendment the right of a W. P. A. worker is abridged in any way. I am for the Dempsey amendment, and I am for it because I sincerely believe that it is restoring to millions of W. P. A. workers who have been coerced and abused in recent years their rights as American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Pennsylvania. Not now. If there was anything unequal or discriminatory about this bill, I would be against it. It applies equally to Republicans and to Democrats. In any political campaign I, as one candidate, will start from scratch with my opponent. There is no favoritism shown. I, for one, am perfectly willing, under equal conditions and where decency is trying to be restored, to face any opponent. [Applause.] In the long run I do not believe that it is spoils or patronage which perpetuates a man or a party in office. In the final analysis it is his record of achievement which he must stand on, all of the patronage in the world notwithstanding. [Applause.]

I doubt if any W. P. A. worker will go to court to recover the privilege of contributing his money to any candidate for political office.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, it is now after 10 o'clock and the House has been in continuous session since 11 o'clock this morning. Many of us have not been out of the Chamber, and many of us have not had luncheon or dinner. In these circumstances the House is decidedly not in the proper mood to give deliberate consideration to the details necessary in drafting legislation. In short, the House is now in that mood where it is for the Hatch bill or against the Hatch bill, for the Dempsey amendment or against the Dempsey amendment, without much regard as to draftsmanship or detail.

I have prepared a clarifying amendment to the Dempsey amendment which I believe to be most vital and necessary. I realize that the bill passing the House tonight will go to conference unless the Senate agrees to the House amendments, and that a bill composing the differences between the two Houses will be returned to the House by the conferees. Therefore my proposed amendment can be given consideration by the conferees and if it is a worthy amendment may be included in the conference report and the House given an opportunity to vote on it at a later date.

The amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk reads as follows:

After the word "President" in (2) of the exemptions in the Dempsey amendment, insert the following: As classified prior to the Reorganization Act of 1939 (Public, No. 19, 76th Cong., 1st sess.).

The Dempsey amendment is best understood if divided into four parts:

First. It makes it unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of affecting an election.

Second. It provides that no officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall "take any active part in political management or in political campaigns."

Third. It reiterates that all persons shall still retain their constitutional right to vote as they choose and to avail themselves of the free speech clause of the Constitution. Up to this point the amendment is much the same as section 9 of the Hatch bill.

Fourth. Certain exemptions from the law are specifically provided.

In (1) the President and Vice President of the United States are exempted from the law. This seems fair and reasonable.

I feel sure that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], believes that in (2) he is exempting from the law the President's secretariat and incidental employees in the White House office. I am informed by Mr. Sheild, clerk of the House Committee on Appropriations, that the moneys appropriated for these functions are: salaries, $136,500; contingent, $50,000. I do not know what information the drafters of the Dempsey amendment had, but I fear that the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY], has overlooked the fact that under the Reorganization Act, referred to in my amendment, the President has submitted to the Congress two plans of Government reorganization, by both of which the method of appropriation for certain agencies of the Government is changed. For instance, under plan No. 1, the Bureau of the Budget is transferred to the "executive office of the President" and in the future will be "under the direction and supervision of the President." The same is true of the Central Statistical Board, while the duties of the Central Statistical Committee are transferred to the Bureau of the Budget and are to be under the "direction and supervision of the President." The same is true of the National Resources Planning Board. There was appropriated for these activities in current appropriation bills, $750,000.

Under plan No. 2 all functions of the National Emergency Council, other than those relating to radio and film services, are transferred to the Executive Office of the President and are to be administered under the direction and supervision of the President. For this activity current appropriations carry $850,000 for the Executive Office of the President.

Possibly other agencies or activities of the Government have also been or will be transferred to the Executive Office of the President.

Now, under (2) of the Dempsey amendment, all persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation of the Office of the President are exempt from the operation of the Hatch bill. If I am correct in this conclusion, then the Dempsey amendment not only exempts the President's secretariat, and so forth, but exempts hundreds of other employees who receive their pay through appropriations made for the Executive Office of the President. The most credulous among us must realize the vast propaganda agency which the National Emergency Council really is. The Dempsey amendment provides a fertile field for the National Emergency Council to do the very thing that the Hatch bill is attempting to stop. I hope that the conferees will see to it that the purpose of the Hatch bill, as it passed the Senate, are effectuated in the legislation as finally drafted.

Subdivision (3) of the Dempsey amendment exempts Cabinet officers and all their assistants.

Subdivision (4) exempts all officers who are appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in relation to the foreign powers or in a Nation-wide administration of Federal laws. Here is a lot of language, and no one here at the moment is able to comtemplate just who will be exempted, but there will certainly be sufficient political supporters of the party in power to make a showing in any campaign or national party convention. This provision will make safe the positions of Mr. Farley, as Postmaster General, and, at the same time, Mr. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee. This provision will make it possible for Mr. McNutt, the recently appointed head of the Federal Securities Administration, to pursue his own Presidential aspirations or to use his fine Italian hand in behalf of his political party and his chief. This provision will not, however, exempt postmasters, because they are not policy-fixing officials.

The Dempsey amendment is intended as a liberalization of the Hatch bill. It undoubtedly is a compromise and, I fear, an effort to weaken the Hatch bill as much as possible.

The people of the country are for the Hatch bill. They do not know what is in the Hatch bill other than they do know that Senator HATCH attempted to take politics out of relief before the last election. They do know that the Sheppard committee investigation proved beyond all doubt that relief funds were used to influence primaries and elections in the 1938 campaign, with particular reference to Kentucky, Pennsylvania, and many other States. This nonpartisan investigating committee recommended the Hatch bill as a specific against political corruption as practiced in the 1938 campaign. The Senate accepted the view of the committee, and the bill is now in our lap. The objectionable amendments incorporated in the bill in the Committee on the Judiciary have been largely removed. Section 9, however, has been sterilized by the Hobbs amendment and will be of no force or effect if adopted as amended. The Dempsey amendment will provide a substitute for section 9. It has its faults. It has its uncertainties. It is better than section 9 with the Hobbs amendment, however, and I shall vote for it and hope that it will prevail when the roll is called.

Subdivision (b) of the Dempsey amendment provides a penalty for violation of the amendment, but sets up no effective machinery for enforcement. Those guilty of violation of the amendment are to be removed "from the position or office held." I ask, by whom? This language should be clarified and specific direction should be provided making effective the contemplated removal. A statute without a penalty which is enforceable is of little value. Possibly the psychology of the Dempsey amendment will be helpful.

I hope that this penalty clause is not the joker in the amendment. One can hardly imagine the Chief Executive or the political officer in a department removing from office a lieutenant because, perchance, he is out electioneering for the chief. If this amendment is as stringent as it has been pictured, we will hear about it when the bill goes back to the Senate. If it is not so severe after all, possibly the Senate will accept it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VOORHIS of California to the amendment offered by Mr. DEMPSEY: At the end of subsection (a) of the amendment strike out the period, insert a semicolon and the following:

"(5) Employed workers on public works or work-relief projects."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were ayes 187 and noes 103.

Mr. BARRY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PARSONS and Mr. NICHOLS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. PARSONS. To offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's amendment to this section?

Mr. PARSONS. I am offering the amendment adding a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PARSONS: At the end of section 9 insert a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any newspaper, magazine, or other printed periodical, or any printing organization, to accept funds in payment for political advertisements. It shall also be unlawful for any editor of any publication or any writer to express editorially or otherwise an opinion with reference to the candidacy of any person for an elective office of the United States or to attend any meeting or conference where the candidacy of any person is to be discussed. The right to vote as one sees fit shall not be abridged by this section."

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is in violation of the Constitution of the United States and therefore is not germane.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not pass on constitutional questions. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia is not a proper point of order.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Would it be in order to give the gentleman the right to proceed for 3 hours?

The CHAIRMAN. It would if the gentleman desired to submit such a request.

Mr. PARSONS. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his good intentions to give me plenty of time, but we have been here some 11 hours and I do not desire to consume that much time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. PARSONS. I do not, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, I am rather certain that the gentlemen to my left will not support this amendment, although they have become so holy and pure in the protection of the rights of the American electorate today that if they are to be consistent they should accept this amendment.

By the language you have incorporated into this bill today you have destroyed the material value of the effort of some 3,000,000 people of the electorate, voters in this country. Why should they be tied and not permitted to engage in expressing their opinion upon political matters while the newspapers of this country are turned loose like leeches upon the people who are candidates for office to criticize in every manner and form, intimidate, and coerce as the Scripps-Howard papers have been intimidating and attempting to intimidate and coerce Congressmen on the floor of this House in the performance of their duty during the last few days?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I cannot yield.

It is also evident, Mr. Chairman, that if no one is to be allowed to participate actively in campaigns, then no candidate for office should be called upon or permitted to advertise in any newspaper in the United States with a political advertisement. Then there would be some equality of opportunity between the competitors, and at the same time the public press would not be enriched from political party contributions such as are made to the press every 2 and 4 years, respectively.

I hope the Committee will accept the amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There should be no misunderstanding but that my colleague from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] offered this amendment in a facetious spirit. Unfortunately, my Republican friends may not choose to accept it in that spirit, as it is their practice to minimize and ridicule important legislation while lending importance to frivolous and inconsequential proposals such as are contained in the bill before us.

It is indeed a cause of regret to me to observe that Democrats, including some of the leaders, are being made accessories to an ingenious piece of Republican political strategy when they give their support to this bill sponsored by the gentleman from New Mexico. Some day these Democrats will realize that they have been used by the Republicans as catspaws in an attempt to tie the hands of this administration. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I desire to address myself to my Democratic colleagues.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question before he speaks to the Democrats?

Mr. SABATH. No. I do not wish to be interrupted at this time by any Republican. I am speaking directly to my Democratic colleagues.

Fellow Democrats, you who were elected by Democrats, with the aid of Democratic organizations in your districts, and with the great prestige of President Roosevelt's popularity behind you, are you blind to the fact that you were sent here to represent your constituents and to support the administration? Will those voters consider this unholy alliance with the Republicans, in a bold attempt to strait jacket millions of those same voters, as the kind of representation you promised them?

Here you have a bill absolutely contrary to the spirit of the Bill of Rights and the fundamental liberties guaranteed under the Constitution. Transgressing upon those liberties, it is in the direction of despotism and dictatorship, an opening wedge for a form of government contrary to that founded by our forefathers.

Here you have a bill that not only prohibits Government employees from expressing political opinions, but even goes so far as to decree that when an American citizen accepts Federal aid to keep from starving, when it becomes necessary that his name appear on a relief roll, he must thereafter forever be forbidden to express his political opinions. Remember, fellow Democrats, the millions who are accepting one form or another of relief were forced to do so through no fault of their own. Eighteen millions of them saw the factory doors closed to them because of the misrule of a Republican administration. Today there are still millions without employment because finance and industry would blackmail and browbeat them into voting another Republican into power. These vested interests, of course, would like to stifle the opinions of the masses, because these masses learned from hunger and privation that their salvation does not lie with the Republican Party, that the Republican way is the way of economic slavery and starvation.

It may be pointed out that the bill restricts the intimidation of employees by powerful industrialists. But I am not so naive as to believe that these employers will not find a way to let their workers know how they want them to vote, and what an independent vote will bring by way of discharge slips as punishment. Neither am I so optimistic as to imagine for a minute that the penalties provided for violation of the bill will ever be applied, except perhaps in the case of some poor W. P. A. or P. W. A. worker, or some minor Federal employee.

Here is a bill denying groups of citizens the right to discuss or openly consider in convention outside of the sanctum of their own homes—and even that right is questioned—the merit or lack of merit of any candidate's platform, or the platform of any political party. It obviously attempts to deny those in Government service the right of participating in the selection of candidates for delegates to national conventions, in the hope that by so restricting their rights they may choke the next national Democratic convention, to defeat the nomination of a liberal and the drafting of a liberal platform. I am in agreement with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] in believing that this bill is unconstitutional. Never in our history has such an attempt been made to discriminate and legislate against groups or classes.

Is it not a pathetic situation when the Republicans, with the yearly thousands and thousands in donations from the Rockefellers, the Morgans, and the Du Ponts to count upon, even go so far as to try to deny to the Democratic Party the voluntary contributions of Government workers? The Democratic Party has always had to depend upon small donations, and the Federal worker has usually been a regular contributor to a party which he recognized as best serving the interests of the common people. The Republicans would deny the right of these people to voluntarily contribute to a candidate whose election would insure a fair deal to the poor as well as the rich. This bill is the first step to destruction of political liberty and freedom of speech and opinion.

The next step will be the secret police rapping on the door. A man denied the right to express political opinion is a slave. For Democrats to support such enslavement is a travesty on the name.

In concluding let me recall to my Democratic friends the year of 1896, when a few so-called gold Democrats betrayed the party. History records their reward. And not to be forgotten is the year 1904, when the reactionaries nominated for President a man named Parker. In 1920 and 1924 they nominated John W. Davis and James M. Cox. The result was the same in each instance. The Democratic Party is the party of the people. If we for a moment forget that and attempt to foist upon the people a reactionary or a representative of the vested interests, the people will reject us. The Democratic Party must remain the party of the people. I have served in public life for over 50 years, and in speaking to you as I have done I speak not for myself but for a party I have tried to serve well, a party to which you also belong, and a party I sincerely pray you will not betray. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Page 5, after section 9, insert a new section as section 9 (a).

"SEC. 9. (a) (1) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States.

"(2) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person."

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I presume it will not be long now until this bill will have passed the House of Representatives and when that has happened we will have limited, I believe, to the complete satisfaction of the most severe critic the activities of the citizen of the United States who happens to be employed by the Federal Government.

My amendment proposes to do a little limiting of citizens who are dissatisfied with our form of government. We have spent a day legislating to place limitations upon American citizens in their right to vote and participate in political activities. Maybe that was necessary and maybe it is good. But I want to tell you that the time is here when we of this body had better begin to give a little concern to the cankerous infection within the vitals of this Government which is being nurtured and fed by those of foreign birth who advocate European "isms" as a substitute for our form of government.

My amendment simply provides that any man or woman on the Federal pay roll who advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government shall be separated from the pay roll.

Of course, no one will vote against this amendment. I am very serious about this thing. I think we have gone far enough in our smug complacency in furnishing police protection to Communists, Fascists, and members of the German bund as they in the public square and in public places openly advocate the overthrow of this, the greatest Government in the world.

I think we have probably gone too far in our constitutional guaranties in protecting freedom of speech, and freedom of assemblage for those people who openly advocate the overthrow of this Government and propose to substitute in its place a dictatorship or some other form of government under Communist or Fascist principles. Of course, this amendment will be adopted without a dissenting vote. I know there is not a man or woman here who would dare vote against the amendment. I expect that the committee, even, will accept the amendment.

I say that the time is ripe when we better begin to think seriously about this thing which has grown up in our Government and which is among us, and which day after day proposes the overthrow of this Government. The adoption of my amendment is only a short step in that direction and not a close approach to what we should do by legislation to protect our Government.

No person who is not satisfied with our form of government should be permitted to draw compensation from that Government; and if we are to continue to protect such people while they glibly advocate the overthrowing of this Government, it is my opinion that they should have all of their time to devote to the spreading of this poison and not be hampered by having to devote some of their time to labor for the Government which they propose and hope to destroy.

I am advised that we have many people on the Federal pay roll in the Nation's Capital here in Washington who glibly admit that they are connected with either the Communist, Fascist, or German Bund parties. If this be the case, surely after the adoption of this amendment the executive heads of our various governmental agencies will have the intestinal fortitude, if in the past they have been so lacking in American patriotism that they have failed to do so heretofore, to discharge these traitors from the Federal pay roll.

My amendment also provides for the imposition of a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for not to exceed 1 year, or both, upon conviction of being associated with such party or organization. No God-fearing, patriotic American citizen can fail to support this amendment.

To my amazement at the conclusion of the vote on this amendment, 92 Republicans and 2 Democrats had voted against the amendment on a teller vote in the Committee.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. NICHOLS].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. NICHOLS) there were—ayes 94, noes 97.

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. NICHOLS and Mr. MICHENER to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 151, noes 96.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on section 9 and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state to the gentleman from New York that debate on section 9 has closed and there is no section of the bill now pending before the Committee. The last amendment was to add a new section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. All provisions of this act shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, any other sections of existing law or of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 5, line 12, strike out "or of this act."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be amended in line 11 on page 5 by striking out the word "for" and substituting therefor the word "of."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. HOOK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SACKS. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to delay the Committee very long, but I thought that I ought to make this statement. As one who sincerely believes in the principles and the objectives of this bill, I want to say that, in view of the fact that the Dempsey amendment has been adopted by the Committee of the Whole, and the amendment offered by the Judiciary Committee, which was presented after a great deal of careful and deliberate consideration, has been rejected, I believe we have exceeded our authority and have deprived many employees of the Government of their very precious and sacred rights and prerogatives. These persons are not in the same position as the classified civil-service employees, because they have not been compensated for the loss of such privileges by the benefits and protection enjoyed by the classified civil-service employees. I believe that we have gone beyond our constitutional right in so amending this bill and have deprived thousands of persons of inherent rights. Therefore, as a member of the committee and one who has worked on this bill sincerely and earnestly, I cannot vote for the bill in its present form and wish to announce that I intend to vote against it. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made today.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GREEN: On page 5, line 17, after the period, insert the following: "Provided, That this act shall not apply to primary elections."

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, some members of the Judiciary Committee believe this bill will apply to primary elections. I do not believe the Federal law will supersede the right of a State to have its own primaries; but I believe on this we can all agree: That the Federal Government should not undertake to direct, control, or police State primary elections. The purpose of this amendment is to exempt from the provisions of this bill State primary elections. The primary election is clearly a State right.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the primary elections in many States are tantamount to the general elections in the Northern States?

Mr. GREEN. That is very true. In such States as Maine, Vermont, and Alabama, for instance, the primary nomination is tantamount to election.

Mr. SABATH. And the gentleman wants to exempt certain States but does not want to exempt others.

Mr. GREEN. Practically all States have primary elections. I believe it is fair to the party sponsoring this bill, to my left, and also to my friends on the right who are in favor of this bill, that we should have our States' rights preserved and that our State primaries should be held under existing State laws and under the present Federal corrupt-practice laws.

I cannot be a party to disfranchising or beginning the first disfranchisement of the weak and the poor people of my congressional district. This bill is the first wedge in the crack to disfranchise the poor people of America. Comment is now common for property qualification for the right to vote. I hold there should be no property requirement.

If you will trace the history of dictators you will find their first ascent to power—and I wish to remind my Republican colleagues of this—was by taking over and controlling the elections in their empires.

In our country when this bill becomes law you will find the police power extended over our elections, and the poor people of our country, I mean the Federal employees in the lower brackets, will not be able to participate like the high-salaried employees. It is a discrimination, a differential, if you please, between the low-paid Federal employee and the high-paid member of the executive branch. The $26-per-month W. P. A. employee has the same sacred right of political freedom as the President. His rights must be preserved.

This is the first successful effort—and it is about to be successful—to disfranchise the poor people of this country. After all, may I say to you Republicans, sometime you may get in power, you cannot tell. I trust I may not live to see the Republican Party ever ascend to power again in this country, but yet there is such a possibility.

May I say to my friends on the Democratic side, members of the great Democratic Party, that haven of the rank and file, the party that has always protected the meek and the weak of our land, let it not be put upon us that we are the ones who started this class legislation by giving the high-paid Federal employee the right to participate, to contribute, to speak, to attend public meetings, and to run for public office, when the one who is in the $25 or $26 class of Federal employment is denied that right and, if he does participate, is committing a crime and can be taken before a Federal judge and convicted and sent to prison. Such legislation is fundamentally unsound and wrong in principle.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. CREAL. Speaking about the possibility that the Republicans might be in power, does not the gentleman know that they would repeal this law in 60 days if they were in power?

Mr. GREEN. I remember back under former Republican Presidents what they did with respect to laws that were not of their choice. I recall that the Government had collected large funds by way of income taxes and I recall very well that about $4,000,000,000 was, by law, if you please, passed by a Republican Congress, refunded to those barons of industry who had contributed to the campaign expenses of the Republican Party.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. I will ask the gentleman from Florida whether or not the fact that the Republicans are standing in a solid phalanx is an indication of the fact that they realize that?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I wish to remind the House that some time ago, when section 2 was under consideration, an amendment was adopted making that section applicable to nominations, which, of course, makes it applicable to primaries. If we understood what we were doing then, and I think we did, we will vote down this amendment.

As the gentleman from Florida has said, in many States nomination is equivalent to election and if it is wrong to use undue pressure through the use of political authority and power in an election, by the same token it is wrong to use such power in a primary where the nomination is equivalent to election. This amendment ought to be defeated.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman think the Congress has the power to do that?

Mr. HANCOCK. It is merely a limitation on the activities of the Government's own officials. It was offered and adopted as an amendment to section 2 which deals with Federal officials. I do think we have some control over the political activities of those on our pay rolls, especially in primaries for the nomination of Presidential electors or Members of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BUCK, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (S. 1871) to prevent pernicious political activities, pursuant to House Resolution 251, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on each amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands a separate vote on each amendment.

The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. IGLESIAS: On page 2, line 5, after the word "Representatives", strike out the period, insert a comma and the words "Delegates or Commissioners from Territories and insular possessions"; the same to be inserted on page 2, section 2, line 16, after the word "Representatives", insert a comma and the words "Delegates or Commissioners from Territories and insular possessions."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MOTT as a substitute for the committee amendment: On page 2, line 16, after the word "Representatives", as amended, change the colon to a period and strike out the remainder of the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARSONS) there were—ayes, 213, noes 14.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The following amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole were severally reported by the Clerk and severally agreed to:

Page 2, line 14, amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: At the beginning of the line, before the word "of", insert "or the nomination."

Page 2, line 24, after the word "possible", insert the words "in whole or in part."

Page 3, line 13, after the word "solicit", insert the words "or received."

Page 2, line 14, after the word "soliciting", insert "or receiving."

Page 3, line 21, after the word "person", insert the words "for political purposes."

Page 4, line 17, after the word "Act", strike out "shall be deemed guilty of a felony."

Page 4, line 18, after the word "conviction", insert the word "thereof."

On page 4, strike out lines 20 to 25, inclusive, and on page 5, strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nation-wide administration of Federal laws.

"(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the yeas and nays on the amendment just read. As many as favor ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] The Chair will now count the number of Members present to determine whether or not a sufficient number have arisen to order the yeas and nays. [After counting.] Sixty-five Members rose in favor of ordering the yeas and nays. The Chair counted 365 Members present, which would require 73 Members rising to order the yeas and nays. Not a sufficient number rose and the yeas and nays are refused.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CREAL. When the Chair takes the vote of those present and then counts again after they come in from the cloakrooms, is that number counted that comes in after the first number had risen?

The SPEAKER. One-fifth of the Members present in the Chamber are required to order the yeas and nays in the House. When the demand is made, the Chair counts those who rise in favor of taking the vote by the yeas and nays, and it is then the duty of the Chair to determine the total number of Members present in the Chamber and divide that count in order to determine whether or not one-fifth have seconded the demand for the yeas and nays.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 243, noes 117.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NICHOLS: Page 5, after section 9, insert a new section as section 9 (a):

"SEC. 9 (a). (1) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of government in the United States.

"(2) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HOOK and Mr. KRAMER demanded the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from California demand the yeas and nays. [After counting.] Thirty-eight Members have arisen; not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 5, in line 11, after the word "for", strike out the words "any other sections of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 5, in line 12, after the word "law", strike out the words "or of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been called to the fact that the amendment on lines 14 and 18 of section 5, page 3, was not voted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the amendment on page 3, line 14 and line 18, was rejected in Committee of the Whole. Therefore it was not reported.

The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HEALEY. I am, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HEALEY moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HEALEY) there were—ayes 153, noes 245.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I request the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 232, answered "present" 1, not voting 50, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. St. Claire, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 342. Joint resolution relating to section 322 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended; and

H. J. Res. 343. Joint resolution to amend section 335 (c) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 188) entitled "An act to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HATCH, Mr. LOGAN, Mr. BURKE, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. DANAHER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENT TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (Rept. No. 1232), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

House Resolution 262

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2009, an act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and quote briefly from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address I made last night and a short schedule of the program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. D'ALESANDRO]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, last week, while my colleague from Rhode Island, Mr. RISK, was here in Washington his home was picketed by a group of people. The reason for the picketing, according to the placards carried by people in the line, was his vote in favor of the so-called 1940 W. P. A. bill.

Because of the distress this picketing caused Mrs. Risk and her little children, my colleague was forced to return to his home. At the present time he has arranged for his family to stay with friends, having been driven from home by fear of harm. This happening should be of interest to every Member of this House, because it involves the question of whether or not a Representative in Congress or members of his family should be subjected to annoyance or intimidation as a result of any vote cast here.

That the good people of Rhode Island are with him in this fight, including W. P. A. workers, is evident from the following editorials from two of the leading newspapers in the State, the Providence Journal and the Pawtucket Times:

[From the Pawtucket Times of July 19, 1939]

BRUTAL AND INDECENT

Within the past few days the people of this community have witnessed a cowardly and un-American attack on an American official who is their neighbor and a friend of many of them.

The demonstration against Congressman CHARLES F. RISK was cowardly because those who participated in it depended on the weight of numbers to evade the ordinary courses of law. The Woonsocket incident, the hanging in effigy of Congressman RISK, was an outrage which revolted all sense of decency, was un-American in conception and execution. This orgy of rowdyism affronted decent people of all political beliefs because the methods and tactics were utterly out of keeping with the American way of dealing with public matters.

Moreover, it is worthy of note—and this fact should be kept in mind—that the demonstrators showed that they lacked even the most elemental understanding of the matters with which they were dealing. Mr. RISK did not vote against the ideals they advocate. He supported them. But they, blindly, without acquainting themselves with the facts, proceeded to assail him in a manner so disgraceful and outrageous as to bring on themselves the condemnation of all Rhode Island.

Those who disagree with Mr. RISK have a perfect right to disagree, but there is an orderly, an American way of expressing disapproval of a public official's course. The mob, the pickets, demonstrators who have paraded in front of his home, causing discomfort to his family, have ignored all his rights and his family's rights. The conduct of these radical demonstrators is condemned by this newspaper and we believe it is condemned by the community as a whole.

Men with no right to interfere with his personal affairs have invaded the privacy of his home life. They have sought to frighten his family in his absence and if there is any credit in frightening women and children they are entitled to that credit.

They have indulged in vituperation and abuse because a public man has done his duty as he saw it.

They have acted, not as American citizens making their protest on a political issue, but as mobsmen promoting deeds of near violence.

We have differed with CHARLES F. RISK in the past, have taken issue with him, and called attention to what, we believe, was a mistaken vote cast by him in the National House of Representatives. But we have done this in the orderly, constitutional manner which is the right of every American.

We do not contend that Mr. RISK as a Member of Congress should never be criticized, but we condemn—and the people of the whole congressional district condemn—the ugly, insulting, brutal methods used by these demonstrators.

They have departed from the rule of decent citizenship; they have trespassed on his rights as a citizen and a holder of high public office.

They have indulged in a cheap exhibition of lawlessness and any shred of right that is in their original argument is destroyed by their brutal methods.

The people of the First Rhode Island Congressional District do not believe in mob law. They have no sympathy with a crowd of demonstrators using the tactics of mob rule.

[From the Providence (R. I.) Journal of July 16, 1939]

INEXCUSABLE TACTICS

The picketing of Congressman RISK's home in Saylesville as a protest against his vote on the Federal Relief Act should promote public support of the proper stand he took in favor of the new W. P. A. regulations.

Those who subject Mr. RISK and his family to this annoyance and unjust discrimination fail utterly to understand that he cast no vote to decrease the appropriation for relief. That was not the issue. Congressman RISK did not seek to deprive W. P. A. workers of the amounts they have been receiving. He sided with the congressional majority which enacted the Federal law eliminating the prevailing wage schedules, establishing the 18-month rotation, and requiring a 130-hour monthly working period at security wages sufficient to provide as large a payment as before under the previous system of shorter hours and prevailing wages.

Federal W. P. A. officials, though unable to link the picketing with present W. P. A. employees in Rhode Island, indicated unmistakable opposition to such tactics. Any partisan political attempts to embarrass Mr. RISK by ill-advised conduct would most certainly arouse indignation among all good citizens of Rhode Island. As it is, Mr. RISK's constituents and fellow citizens, irrespective of party affiliation, should inform him of their distaste for the picketing and of their approval of his vote on the Relief Act.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SANDAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two editorials, one from the Providence Journal and the other from the Pawtucket Times, commenting on the occasion I just referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SANDAGER]?

There was no objection.

Mr. TINKHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement from the Economist of July 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TINKHAM]?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. ANDREWS, was called out of the city to attend the funeral of a prominent citizen of New York. If present, he would have voted for the so-called Dempsey amendment and for the passage of the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, in the June issue of the Sugar Journal there is an article entitled "An Ache in the Nation's Sweet Tooth," written by the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]. I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein this article.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER]?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, my colleague the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. BYRON, was necessarily detained from the House this afternoon. Had he been present he would have voted for the Smith resolution and against the so-called Hatch bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from the American Zionist Bureau and also from the gentleman from New York [Mr. FAY].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is entitled to recognition.

THE C. I. O. WILL DESTROY THE LIBERTY OF THE FARMER UNLESS HE AWAKENS TO HIS PERIL

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if in America there is one man upon whom more than any other rests the foundation of our Government that man is the farmer.

As a rule the farmer owns the land upon which he lives. From out of it, by hard and constant toil, he digs his livelihood. He is thrifty; he is frugal; he is industrious. Because he desires to retain his independence, he denies himself many things which others consider necessities. He lives within his income. He attends to his own business; interferes little or not at all in the problems which confront others. He has his home, his family, and his church.

As from the soil which he owns he wrests his living, he is one step farther removed in times of depression from absolute want than the city dweller. When prices are low and business bad, when markets are gone, the farmer turns to the farm which his ancestors carved from the wilderness or which he, by practicing self-denial, has acquired.

Toiling from early morning until late at night, doing without, existing upon what many a city man might consider a starvation diet, in some way he manages to keep body and soul together, while the industrial worker, the city man, out of a job and his resources swept away, is forced to seek relief or starve.

BUT DISASTER THREATENS

City men, industrial workers, dependent wholly upon a daily wage, crowded together in town or city, have for years received a higher cash compensation for their services than has the farmer. Town and city dwellers have come to regard as necessities many things which the farmer is forced to consider as luxuries and is unable to obtain.

While the prices received by the farmer for the things he grows and has to sell have for the most part been limited by the law of supply and demand, while the prices of the things he buys are in many cases artificially fixed by wage scales, union demands, and regulations, the town and city worker has been demanding and has been receiving an ever-increasing hourly compensation for the services he renders.

Industrial workers formed unions which insisted upon and obtained an ever-increasing wage and ever-shortened workweek, both of which necessarily added to the cost of the things produced, and were reflected in the price charged the farmer, who had no means of evading or of correcting the ever-widening difference between the price he received for the things he had to sell and the price he paid for the things he must purchase.

THE FARMER HAS BEEN PATIENT

Being generous, patient, and long-suffering, the farmer, subscribing in part to the theory that a high industrial wage created a market for his products, has long submitted to injustice, to discrimination, which has made it more and more difficult for him to carry on a successful enterprise. He has submitted so long that today he lacks many of the conveniences of, is unable to enjoy many of the pleasures of, is forced to live upon a much lower scale than, the majority of city workers.

AN ADDED BURDEN UPON THE FARMER

In addition to the increase in wages and the shortened hours of the mine, mill, and factory worker which has come through the demands of the legitimate unions, an additional and a far greater danger threatens not only the economic welfare but the independence of the farmer.

RACKETEERS HAVE TRANSFERRED THEIR ACTIVITIES

Racketeers who profited enormously during the prohibition era, with the repeal of that amendment have in large numbers transferred their activities to union organizations, and, like the leeches, the parasites which live upon plants, trees, and the lower animals, are exploiting not only the employee but are blackmailing the employer.

Styling themselves labor leaders, by the aid of money collected from honest toilers through efficient organization, a disregard for law and the rights of others; by intimidation and ruthless violence, in violation of every principle of justice, in defiance of every legal and moral right of Federal and State constitutional guaranty that no man shall be deprived of his property without due process of law; ignoring the self-evident truth that, among the inalienable rights endowed to all men by their Creator are those to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness—these men now demand that all employers, all those who give jobs and pay wages, shall hire only those who belong to their organization.

They demand that all employees, all men and all women, who earn their livelihood, shall join and pay tribute to an organization named by them. They demand the right to fix the terms, to determine the amount of the initiation fee, the amount of monthly dues, which shall be paid to them for the privilege of working, and they exercise the authority of collecting and spending the tribute so levied without hindrance, accounting, or supervision.

In short they claim and they assert, in many instances by force, the right in ancient days exercised only by king, czar, or emperor.

DICTATORS OVER LABOR

John L. Lewis, whose telegram on June 19, 1922, to members of his union at Herrin, Ill., was followed on June 21 by the death by beating, shooting, and hanging of 25 workers, sought through his United Mine Workers, aided by the National Labor Relations Board, to force soft-coal operators in Harlan, Ky., to agree in writing that they give employment only to those miners who first join and pay tribute to Lewis' organization.

He demanded that no miner in that county follow his daily occupation until that miner signed a membership card in Lewis' organization, paid an initiation fee, and agreed to meet such special assessments as the organization to which Lewis belongs shall make.

The statement of the proposition is an insult to every liberty-loving American. Nevertheless, by force and in direct violation, as many believe, of the National Labor Relations Act, Lewis has forced a large majority of coal operators, a majority of soft-coal miners, in this country to meet his demands.

On July 9, 1939, in Harlan County, an official of one of Lewis' organizations publicly called upon members of Lewis' organization to do two things: To vote for John Young Brown, Lewis' candidate for Governor, undoubtedly with the idea that with Brown as Governor protection of property and of individuals in Harlan County would be withdrawn by the State of Kentucky and that Lewis would have in the executive mansion a man who would do his bidding. In addition, Lewis' lieutenant told his hearers to "get" out of the Harlan mines those miners who were exercising their God-given right to work.

Three days later an attempt was made to carry out those orders; as a result two men died—not as many as at Herrin, Ill., in 1922—and several have been wounded and the battle undoubtedly will continue.

MOTOR INDUSTRY

In 1937, the C. I. O., many of its leaders Communists, using Communist methods, with armed forces invaded Michigan, took possession of the city of Flint, of the motor industry there; drove thousands of men and women from their places of employment. With the aid of the Governor of that State, who violated his oath of office, by force they held possession of that city and some of its factories for 44 long days, causing a loss to the wage earners alone of $44,000,000.

Again, 2 years later, and there were more than a thousand strikes in between, a strike is on in the motor industry in Michigan, but this time—and thank God for it—Michigan has a Governor who has declared that the law will be enforced; that men will be permitted to work and, when violence threatened during the past week, a squad of 10 or less State police told 700 pickets to cease their lawlessness, to leave the factory gates. The pickets, knowing that the law would be enforced, that men would be permitted to work, left, and this without violence.

In the motor industry the demand today is the same as it is in the coal industry—that before men may work they shall be required to acknowledge allegiance to Lewis' organization, to pay tribute to him.

PACKING INDUSTRY

Today Lewis' affiliates, his lawless organization, is demanding that in Chicago the great packing industry, the men who buy the farmers' cattle, hogs, and poultry, who process those products and redistribute them throughout the Nation, shall agree that no one shall work in that industry until he, too, has acknowledged Lewis as the ruler over labor—has paid the tribute demanded by him.

There is no doubt in the mind of any man who thinks and reasons but that these membership fees, these dues and special assessments collected by Lewis, who was voted a salary of $25,000 a year and who at times has had an expense account of $1,000 a month; who rides with a chauffeur in an expensive limousine; who lives in comparative luxury, adds to the cost of the manufactured article which the farmer must buy; lessens the cost of the produce which the farmer sells to the packer, to the automobile manufacturer.

IT MIGHT WORK BOTH WAYS

Have been wondering what those who insist that only members of their particular organization be permitted to work, for example, in the motor industry, in the packing plants, would say, should all others who do not belong to that organization and hence who cannot work in those industries, refuse to buy any of the products manufactured by the members of that particular organization.

What a yell John L. Lewis would let out if all those who do not belong to the C. I. O. or its affiliated organizations refused to purchase any of those things which members of his organization assisted in manufacturing.

THE RED MENACE IS COMING TO THE HOME OF THE FARMER

Not only does the farmer pay in added cost of what he buys, in lessened price for what he sells, for these activities of Lewis, who each year, according to the reports of his own organization, collects millions of dollars from the workers, but it is the purpose of Lewis and his coworkers to compel the farmers themselves to pay tribute to him.

Long have farmers been indifferent to the activities of these labor racketeers, but ever nearer to their homes and farms has this red menace been coming. Communists have inserted themselves into the leadership of this movement. They have dictated many of its methods and practices, and it is well that the home-loving, God-fearing American farmer should realize at last, and before it is too late, the meaning of the creed of these Communists that Lewis and his C. I. O. are using, and who are using Lewis and his C. I. O.

In a circular put out by a Communist organization in Michigan during an election, we find these quotations:

> To all who hate the smug priests of the Catholic Church, and the slimy hypocritical ministers of the Protestant churches. * * * To all who are opposed by this damnable Government, we address this message. Vote for our candidate.
> Close the churches and make these buildings into shelters for homeless men and women. Down with religion, which is opium which the ruling class feeds you to keep you satisfied with the miserable existence which you lead. There is no God.

Read the above again. Then read it to your wife and read it to your children. Then sit down and think it over. It is a part of the creed of those who are working hand in glove with John L. Lewis' organization. That organization has boldly asserted that it intends to bring the farmer within its folds. Already in various parts of the country this organization has asserted its authority.

In California it demands that poultry and farm products put on city markets shall bear a union label. It demands that dairy products, milk, butter, cream, and cheese, shall be sold by the farmer only when he can show that they have been hauled to market by a union teamster; that the cows which gave the milk have been fed on hay and grain hauled by a union teamster.

In Wisconsin, it has demanded that employees of farmers' cooperatives join its ranks and pay tribute to it; that otherwise they shall not process the farmer's milk; they shall not can nor handle the farmer's fruit and vegetables which he has for sale.

In the South it demands that berries before shipment bear a union label; be handled by union labor.

When Michigan farmers ship their eggs to New York, again this organization would levy tribute, although their product has passed State and Federal inspection.

Ever closer to the home, to the daily activities of the American farmer, this organization is coming. It is not too late, if the farmer now awakens to his peril and at the polls repudiates all those who bear the label of and owe allegiance to this organization, which would completely wreck him, financially destroy his independence, and make him subject to the orders of a racketeering so-called union-labor leader.

Unless he meets and defeats this force at the polls, the American farmer will either surrender his independence, acknowledge his serfdom, or by force do physical battle with those who are seeking to bring him under the yoke so successfully imposed upon many of the industrial workers.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. SMITH of Ohio, indefinitely, on account of illness.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 21, 1939

(Legislative day of Tuesday, July 18, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Reverend Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, Father of mankind: We beseech Thee to grant Thy blessing upon the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and all Thy servants assembled here in solemn session. Upon them and their families and all the families of the Nation pour forth Thy grace; that their homes may be havens of faithfulness and patience, wisdom and true godliness, blessings and peace, till strife and discord, intolerance, and every misunderstanding shall be done away, and our land shall be filled with the glory of God as the waters cover the sea. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

LOANS FOR SELF-LIQUIDATING PROJECTS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MALONEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2759) to provide for the construction and financing of self-liquidating projects, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

AUTHORIZATION OF WORKS ON RIVERS AND HARBORS—AMENDMENT

Mr. DOWNEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 6264) authorizing the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF IMMIGRATION PROBLEM

Mr. HOLMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 168), which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the immigration of aliens into the United States with a view to determining, among other things, (1) the extent to which aliens have been permitted to enter the United States in violation of the immigration laws, (2) whether any deficiencies exist in the immigration laws or in the administration thereof which permit entry into the United States of undesirable aliens or aliens who compete with citizens of the United States in securing employment, and (3) necessary steps to be taken in order to correct any such deficiencies and to prevent the continuation of any violation or circumvention of the immigration laws. The committee so appointed shall report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, the results of its investigation together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Senate in the Seventy-sixth and succeeding Congresses, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

NEW ENGLAND FISHING INDUSTRIES—INVESTIGATION BY TARIFF COMMISSION

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask consent to submit a resolution for appropriate reference directing the United States Tariff Commission to investigate and report, as soon as practicable, the facts with respect to the importation of fresh and frozen fish. I offer this resolution, which is a companion piece to one presented by Representative BATES in the House of Representatives, because I am advised that imports of fish fillets from Canada have multiplied more than five times during the last 5 years under the reciprocal trade program, and the last figures from the Department of Commerce show another large increase during the first 6 months of 1939 as compared with the same period of 1938.

The resolution directs a special study of this situation, involving the destruction of the New England fishing industries, and a full report as soon as possible. I am hopeful that when such figures are available to Congress there will be corrective action.

The city of Gloucester, Mass., one of our largest fishing centers, whose citizens have been following the sea for generations, is the hardest hit by these foreign imports. In fact, on Sunday, July 30, they are to have "a remonstrance day" to protest against these imports of fish.

I may say, in conclusion, that under the Tariff Act of 1930 imports of fresh and frozen fish fillets were taxed 2½ cents a pound. Under the reciprocal-trade treaty the rate was reduced to 1⅞ cents a pound. A tariff of at least 4 cents a pound would be required to equalize production costs.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 169) was referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Tariff Commission is directed, under the authority conferred by section 332 of the Tariff Act of 1930, to investigate and report to the Senate as soon as practicable the facts with respect to the importation of fresh and frozen food fish, except shellfish, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and the effect of such importations and any foreign trade agreements entered into under section 350 of such act upon the domestic fishing industry.

NEUTRALITY—ARTICLE BY DAVID LAWRENCE

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article in the Washington Star written by David Lawrence under the headline "Senate Spikes United States Guns of Trade," which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, asking pardon of the Senate for discussing a subject not now before the Senate, I advert to an editorial printed in the New York Times of July 20, entitled "Help Sorely Needed." There is implied, if not expressed, in the editorial a criticism of Congress for its delay in providing an additional district judge for the southern district of New York. I rise, not to complain against the editorial but rather to join my criticism with that contained in the editorial. There is now pending on the Senate calendar a bill, S. 2185, which, after months of careful investigation, has been reported from the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, proposing to create an additional circuit judge for the sixth circuit and an additional one for the eighth circuit, and also additional district judges for the southern district of California, the district of New Jersey, the western district of Oklahoma, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the southern district of New York, and one for the northern and southern districts of Florida. I shall at the appropriate time move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of that bill after the pending unfinished business shall have been concluded.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention was diverted. May I inquire what bill the Senator from Arizona has in mind?

Mr. ASHURST. I refer to Senate bill 2185 to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, which is No. 716 on the calendar. I will repeat what I said.

Mr. McNARY. I do not ask the Senator to do that.

Mr. ASHURST. My remarks arose because of an editorial printed in yesterday's New York Times in which criticism was made of Congress for its delay in providing an additional district judge for the southern district of New York. The criticism is just. I wish to bear my share of the blame, and as much of the blame as other Senators may feel it irksome for them to bear. I gave notice that as soon as the pending bill shall have been concluded, I shall, if I secure the floor, ask the Senate to consider the bill which has been reported from the Judiciary Committee and which proposes to create two additional circuit judgeships and six additional district judgeships.

This bill is not a "flash in the pan." It is the result of 1 year's careful investigation. The special committee sent some of its members to the various States to investigate and ascertain personally the need of such additional judges. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary has reported a bill proposing an additional circuit judge in the sixth circuit, one in the eighth circuit, and one additional district judge in each of the following States: California, New Jersey, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, New York, and Florida.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator will pardon me, may I inquire if it is proposed that the judgeship to be created in California is a district judge or a circuit judge?

Mr. ASHURST. It is a district judge.

Mr. McNARY. No new circuit is created?

Mr. ASHURST. No new circuit is created. An additional judge for the sixth circuit and an additional judge for the eighth circuit are provided, but no change in the circuits or districts is proposed in this particular bill.

Mr. McNARY. May I ask the able Senator is there any controversy over the bill? Will it lead to any debate?

Mr. KING. I may say I think it will. I shall oppose it.

Mr. ASHURST. Some Senators are opposed to the bill, and I very much respect their judgment, but I am of the opinion that the Senate should, before it adjourns, pass the bill.

TRUTH IN FABRIC

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 162) to protect producers, manufacturers, distributors, and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substitutes and mixtures in spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured wool products, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I submit two amendments to the pending bill and ask that they lie upon the table until the proper time formally to offer them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

The pending question is on the first amendment of the committee, which was stated yesterday.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, yesterday the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] was giving a résumé of the testimony with reference to the brief of the Consumers' League for Honest Wool Labeling, and particularly the testimony of Mr. Wilson; and the Senator stated, as the RECORD shows, that he asked that Mr. Wilson furnish the names of the members of that association and file them with the committee, Mr. Wilson having stated that the league was a Wyoming organization.

Under date of March 9 Mr. Wilson filed with the committee a statement of the Wyoming members, and I desire to introduce it in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN].

Unfortunately, because of my being a member of an important conference committee, I have not had an opportunity to listen to the entire debate on the pending bill; but there are some features of it about which I should like to be informed.

First of all, I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont a practical question. If the bill is enacted into law, what will be the marking on a piece of woolen cloth which is made in part from so-called virgin wool and in part from reclaimed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the product contains wool which has been made into a fibrous state after having been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured, it must have a label "Reclaimed wool."

If, however, it contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, it shall have a mark "wool product."

However, if the fabric is of material which has never been reclaimed from any spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured product, and is wool from the back of a sheep—that is, not wool which has been pulled from the pelt of a dead sheep but wool which comes from a live sheep—it must have a mark "virgin wool."

There is also a very comprehensive mark which is as follows: The mark "wool" and the term "wool" under this bill would mean the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb, or hair of the angora or cashmere goat, and may include the so-called specialty fibers, namely, the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, rabbit, and vicuna.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes; in part. Does the label have to show the percentage of virgin wool or reclaimed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it does; and if an error is made, it is an unfair practice.

Mr. WALSH. What is the penalty?

Mr. AUSTIN. There is not a penalty for a mere error; but if there is a willful misrepresentation, there may be two consequences: One is the civil action of an injunction, and the other is the criminal one of imprisonment or fine.

Mr. WALSH. That is, if there is fraud or deliberate misrepresentation of the contents of a material required to be labeled under this bill, the manufacturer would be subject to a civil injunction and a criminal process?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, not only the manufacturer but also the person who knowingly receives from the manufacturer and resells, or attempts to resell, the misbranded article.

Mr. WALSH. So that the wholesaler and the retailer who had knowledge that the brand was not correct would be subject to the same penalty as would the manufacturer?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If they knowingly dealt in a misbranded article?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Now, I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a well-known fact that wool varies to a very large and extensive degree in its fineness, in its durability, in its quality, and in the price it commands in the open market?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my understanding is that there are many different degrees of quality in wool that could be marked "virgin wool"; therefore that the consumer, on seeing a piece of goods marked "virgin wool," may not know from that mark alone whether he is getting a high quality of goods or a very low quality. The label "virgin wool" could truthfully represent a fleece that came from a live sheep, and yet it might be a fleece that was poor in textile strength; it might be a fleece that was long or it might be one that was short. It might be a fleece that had been painted; for where sheep are allowed to graze a range it is customary to identify them with paint, and the place that has been painted may have had to be cleaned to such an extent and in such a manner as to reduce the quality of the fleece. So it is possible to have within the term "virgin wool" many grades of quality and of durability of wool.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator give us some information in reference to the variation in prices of these different qualities of wool? My recollection is that it ranges from a few cents to almost a dollar, or perhaps over a dollar, per pound, according to the different grades.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I could not answer the question from memory. I think the prices appear in the RECORD.

Mr. WALSH. But the price does increase very rapidly and very extensively in proportion to the fineness and quality of the fleece. Is not that correct?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes; I believe that to be a correct statement.

Mr. WALSH. What troubles me about the bill is not so much the requirement to label or to show what proportion of reused wool and what proportion of wool that is not reused is contained in a suit of clothes or a piece of woven cloth. It is the matter to which the Senator has referred, that if this is a bill to require the label to inform the consumer, and to give him some information as to the quality, and to be a protection to the consumer as to the quality or kind of wool he is purchasing, there should be in the bill some provision requiring the label to designate the low value or the inferior quality of some of the wool, and there ought to be some information on the label as to the fineness and the better quality of reclaimed wool.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in answer to the question, let me say that inadvertently the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has used a new term not heretofore spoken of between us; that is, the term "reused wool." Reused wool differs from reprocessed or reclaimed wool or wool product, as spoken of in the pending bill. Reused wool is really second-hand wool; that is, wool which has been used by the ultimate consumer and then reduced to a fiber.

The question of the Senator from Massachusetts is whether the bill indicates quality in any way; that is, warmth, durability——

Mr. WALSH. Strength.

Mr. AUSTIN. And style, all those characteristics which go into a garment. It is my opinion that it does not in any way require the label to identify the difference between a finished product which is really poor in quality and a finished product which is really good in quality, because there may be a garment made of virgin wool that is not as good in quality as a garment made of the virgin wool and the reprocessed wool combined.

Mr. WALSH. My next question to the Senator relates to that subject. Is it not a fact that there are many woolen textiles, so-called, of which the quality and the fineness and the usefulness and the style are much better, in a cloth or garment in which there are both so-called virgin wool and so-called reprocessed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And is it not a fact that many textiles combining reprocessed wool with so-called virgin wool are often very much better in quality and in usefulness than cloths made of the inferior or cheaper so-called virgin wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is there anything in the pending bill which would compel to be indicated to a consumer the difference in merit between garments and cloths containing low-grade wool and those made of the best quality of reprocessed and virgin wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I would answer that question in this way: There is nothing in the bill which would help the consumer to know, from the use of the label "virgin wool," that he is getting a better product on the merit basis than he would have if the label bore the words "reused wool", or any other label whatever, for the simple reasen that merit does not depend solely upon the use of virgin wool in a fabric, but depends upon many other factors; and for the additional reason that there may be a high percentage of reworked wool in a garment and a low percentage of virgin wool in it, and it may still be the finest type of fabric from the merit point of view.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The short-fiber wool, or the low grade of virgin wool, is used in certain kinds of manufacture, we will say, in stockings, or to give an extra gloss to the nap of some sort of garment. When reclaimed wool is used for the same purposes, of course, it must be reclaimed from the same class of wool, so that the comparison is that a given grade of virgin wool will come in competition with a given grade of reworked wool made from the same grade of virgin wool. So if there is immature fiber in the virgin wool it does not come in competition with the better grades of reworked wool and longer fibers.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate having the Senator's statement.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I amplify my answer just a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Before the Senator does that, permit me to say that we have been discussing the variation in the fineness and quality of so-called virgin wool and even in the price. Does not the same situation apply to reprocessed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is there anything in the bill to compel anyone to show that the reprocessed wool is of a high quality, the most expensive on the market, in contrast with the inferior or low-quality reprocessed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. No. If the Senator will permit me, in discussing and answering his question, when I used the word "merit" in relation to a garment, I assumed these factors: First, strength, weight ratio; second, fiber length, to which the Senator from Massachusetts referred; and, third, the percentage of frayed and broken fibers in the piece, all of which enter into making the test whether one garment has more merit than another, so far as fabric goes.

Mr. WALSH. There would be nothing on the labels to indicate any of the factors to which the Senator has referred in arriving at the value of wool, or the durability of it, or the fineness of it?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield at that point?

Mr. WALSH. I gladly yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The Senator has brought out that the bill requires the labeling of woolens. Let me read from subdivision (b) on page 7:

> In addition to information required in this section, the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, may contain other information not violating the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission.

Mr. WALSH. I assume, from what the Senator has read, that authority is given to some official to amplify further the requirement on the tags.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. In an explanatory manner, other information may be put on the label which will not violate the statement of percentages and the different classes of fibers required elsewhere in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Who will administer that?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The whole act is to be administered by the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield further?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is one of the most deceptive things about the bill. Let me read the paragraph just prior to that read by the Senator from Wyoming:

> In the case of a wool product represented as virgin wool, if the percentages by weight of the virgin-wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying such wool product is virgin wool, or if the total fiber weight of such wool product is not 100 percent virgin wool, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the paragraph to which the Senator from Wyoming referred.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I referred to subdivision (b).

Mr. AUSTIN. Let me complete my statement on the assumption that the Senator was following the question of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The section to which I have referred shows that all one gets from the label which bears the words "virgin wool" is the knowledge that, within this tolerance of 5 percent, the wool came off the back of a living sheep, and that it was manufactured by Mr. Forstmann, or by a man similarly situated. I say that for the reason that on pages 8 and 9 will be found section 5, which puts back of the trade name "virgin wool" the obligation that the man who will take the product must keep the label, the very label, which came on the goods, and if no one can make the virgin wool product except Forstmann, or some man similarly situated, the merchant and everyone else who handles such a piece of goods must advertise Mr. Forstmann's product and may not have the benefit of creating his own good will, his own good name, by putting his label on the goods. When he cuts the fabric to be made into a suit of men's clothing or a coat for a woman, he must so cut the fabric that he will not eliminate the tag or mark of the manufacturer.

Mr. President, this is the cutest bill that ever was devised to give to a small coterie, a small group of men, the highest type of advertising, the advertising a great government creates by saying to the purchaser, "You cannot take the label of the manufacturer off these goods and put on your own label. The manufacturer who has made these goods of virgin wool is entitled, under the law, to have you protect him all the way down the line, and keep his label on the goods."

Mr. WALSH. Let me see if I follow the Senator. When the manufacturer labels a piece of cloth that is many yards in length, having gone through the loom, must he put the label in a sufficient number of places to have it appear on every suit into which that cloth is cut?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How can he do that?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not know. If the Senator will read the testimony which I heard given he will encounter objections based on the ground of impracticability of so marking the goods, when in commerce, that they may go through with the label of the manufacturer on every piece.

Mr. WALSH. Take the illustration I used, of a suit of clothes. Some suits of clothes take only a few yards and others twice or three times as many yards, and the labels must appear so frequently on the woven cloth that they will reappear in every suit of clothes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I answer by reading section 5, beginning at line 24, on page 8 of the bill:

> Any person manufacturing for introduction, or first introducing into commerce a wool product shall affix thereto the—

Notice that word "the"—

> the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification required by this act, and the same containing identical information with respect to content of the wool product, and other information required under section 4, or substitutes therefor shall be and remain affixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state or is contained in garments or other articles made in whole or in part therefrom, until sold to the consumer.

Mr. WALSH. To emphasize that will the Senator now read the last sentence again?

Mr. AUSTIN. "Shall be and remain—"

That is the tag——

Mr. WALSH. Yes; that is the tag or the label.

Mr. AUSTIN. "The stamp," the "tag," the "label, or" the "other means of identification * * * shall be and remain affixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state"——

Mr. WALSH. That is the woven cloth, for instance.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I continue: "Or is contained in garments"——

Mr. WALSH. The suit of clothes.

Mr. AUSTIN. The suit of clothes—"or other articles"—such as a scarf for the neck—"made in whole or in part therefrom until sold to the consumer."

Imagine what the manufacturer of a strip of virgin wool cloth, or reprocessed wool cloth, or reused wool cloth will have added to his cost of production by this bill.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator says there is no such provision in the bill, but is there any amendment which the Senator knows of that would provide the consumer with knowledge as to the type, fineness, or quality of the so-called virgin wool and of the so-called reclaimed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, that must be answered "No."

Mr. WALSH. I suppose it would be most difficult in a measure of this kind to define and to specify such details in a label, and it would add largely to the difficulty of administration and result in increasing the cost to the consumer?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I would answer, first, "Yes," so that it may be clear that I mean to make an affirmative answer to that question. Let me say that the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts introduced a bill which, in a very simple, and, I think, enforceable way, identifies fabrics sufficiently to take care of all the questions that have been presented in connection with the study of this bill. There is a House bill, introduced by Representative MARTIN, which, I think, is a great improvement in the respect that it does not create or try to create a monopoly for anyone. But the points made by the Senator from Massachusetts, respecting the durability or quality of the finished product, respecting its style and its fabric, would have to be taken up in an entirely new manner and a new bill written.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it seems to me that the deception which is claimed now by reason of nonlabeling reclaimed wool would be augmented and increased by a label on a garment which was simply marked "virgin wool," that was less durable, less reliable, and cheaper than a garment made of virgin wool and reclaimed wool.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have put in the RECORD statements by consumers, women, to the effect that it is only a delusion to them as consumers to find a product marked "virgin wool" and nothing more, or to find a product marked "reprocessed wool," for that matter, and nothing more.

Mr. WALSH. Personally I think I should be willing to vote for a bill which contained provisions for marks, labels, and tags that showed the cheapness of the virgin wool and the fineness and durability of the virgin wool, and that showed the cheapness of the reworked wool—I think that is a word which the Senator says is not in this bill—"reprocessed" wool perhaps is better. If such information could be given to the consumers they would have a proper picture of the quality of the fleece that has been woven into a cloth and made into garments and into other textiles. But in the absence of information as to the grade, character, quality, durability, and fineness of wool or the reclaimed wool, the deception which is claimed to exist now is augmented and increased, it seems to me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, my reply to the Senator from Massachusetts is that not only is what he has stated true, in my opinion, but there is also this affirmative effect of Senate bill 162, namely, that by setting up this supposed superior garment by putting a label of "virgin wool" on it, which is no representation of the merits of the garment, other garments bearing the label "reprocessed" or "reclaimed" wool and wool products are anathematized. They are put down in a low class. The psychological and the sales effect is to ruin the market for them. And of course the repercussion of that travels clear back to the wool grower on the farm.

Mr. WALSH. And that quality of cloth and of garment is often of a very high grade and high quality, and has much more merit than garments which are made of the cheapest grade of virgin wool.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I should like to amplify the colloquy we have had by reading from a book called Fables in Labels, written by LYLE H. BOREN, a distinguished Member of the House. I do not know whether or not the Senator has read the book. It deals with the very subject we have been discussing. After I shall have read from it I should like to ask the Senator some questions on another phase of the bill. I read now from page 22 of the book I have mentioned:

> Virgin wool is wool which has never before been fabricated. Such wool comes from two sources. One is the wool shorn from live animals. This may be of good or poor quality. The other is what is known as "pulled wool," which is taken from the animal after it has died or been slaughtered. This also can be of good or poor quality but is generally inferior to shorn wool. If the fleece is removed from the hide by chemicals, as is usually the case with pulled wools, the fiber may lose some of its elasticity, ability to take dyes and spinning qualities if the process is not carefully carried out. Nevertheless, it can truthfully and honestly be labeled "virgin wool."
> Certain wool wastes are also considered as virgin wool, although some believe these wastes should be classed as "reclaimed wool." The line as to what should and what should not be so classified has never been accurately drawn.
> Reclaimed wool is wool which has been processed before. Like virgin wool, it may be divided into two kinds, wool wastes and shoddy. Shoddy is the term applied to wool recovered from garments and rags. Wool wastes are the byproducts produced in the process of converting fibers into fabrics and garments and include such things as top waste, yarn waste, fabric waste, tailors' clippings, etc. Coming from such a variety of sources, reclaimed wool must of necessity be of many grades and varying qualities. It may not rank with the best grade of virgin wool, since usually the fibers are shorter and certain of them may perhaps have suffered. However, a good grade of reclaimed wool is preferable to a poor grade of virgin wool and, properly used in proper proportion, can be fabricated into serviceable and satisfactory fabrics which can be sold at reduced prices. The important consideration in selecting a fabric is not whether it is virgin or reclaimed wool but whether the resulting quality, irrespective of the kind of wool used, is good. The paramount question is one of satisfactory service (satisfactory performance).

I think that sums up what we have been trying to develop in the colloquy.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, let me call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to a letter which is characteristic of the sentiments of many families. I put the letter in the RECORD yesterday. The mother of five children, in circumstances not adequate to buy the highest-price garments, fears the consequences of the bill because it may deprive her of financial ability to clothe her children properly with garments made from reprocessed wool, which she can now buy at prices within her means. She fears this consequence because she has every reason to believe that the prices of the garments she now buys would be increased by the necessary supervision, bookkeeping, and time spent in marking the material from which the garments are made. I think she has reason to believe she may ultimately lose the opportunity to buy such garments at any price whatever, by reason of the type of competition which would be created by the bill, forcing out of business the manufacturers who make goods of reprocessed wool.

Mr. WALSH. Along that very line, let me read again from the same book. By the way, LYLE H. BOREN is a Member of Congress from the Fourth District of Oklahoma. Let me read further from the book:

Processing is of the utmost importance in the production of a satisfactory fabric. In fact, proper processing is of greater importance in obtaining good performance value than the fiber content in terms of virgin or reclaimed wool. To most of us the term "virgin wool" conveys the idea of good quality and good performance value.

That is important. The term conveys a false idea.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is one of the troubles.

Mr. WALSH. That is correct. Reading further:

When we go into a store to buy a child's suit, the label on a particular one may read "virgin wool." We would probably assume that the garment would prove satisfactory. Probably it would be virgin wool, for, as a rule, such labels are accurate. The trouble with them is that they do not tell enough. If we buy the suit, in 2 weeks' time it might begin to fall apart. If held up to the light, we might be able to see through the loosely woven fabric. When pulled the yarns might slip and separate. From such experiences comes the often-heard remark, "I just can't understand. It was labeled 'virgin wool.'" And that is right. It was labeled "virgin wool" and it was virgin wool, but it did not have satisfactory performance value.

That supports what we have been contending.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes. I think we have all seen the condition of fabric to which the Senator has referred.

Mr. WALSH. I should now like to read another paragraph or two from the same book:

The terms "virgin" or "reclaimed," as applied to products containing these materials, are meaningless because both terms cover such a wide range of values and qualities and because in point of actual market value materials covered by the two terms overlap.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. After conferring further with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] yesterday in an effort to obtain an arrangement for limitation of debate, I ask unanimous consent that after the conclusion of the address of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], during the further consideration of the bill no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 15 minutes on the bill, and no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 10 minutes on any amendment thereto.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I wish to continue reading from the book from which I have been reading, because it is very informative. The title of the book is apropos the subject under discussion, namely, Fables in Labels.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I could not add any authority to that author. I appreciate very much the reading by the Senator from Massachusetts, because I think it is an excellent statement.

Mr. WALSH. Again reading:

This proposed "virgin wool" term is an apt illustration of a label which becomes a fable.

A strong sentence! It is a label which becomes a fable.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is a bon mot.

Mr. WALSH. Yes. Reading further:

The term "virgin" really refers to a fiber's history, not its quality. Not only is a fiber's history no necessary index of its value characteristics, but, since the fiber is wool, there is no test of either a chemical or mechanical nature which will substantiate any claim to its relative newness.

Even if you could tell virgin or new wool from wool which had been used, there are other valid reasons why emphasis on that point is misleading. As was pointed out earlier, there are so many types and grades of wool that it means nothing to say it is "virgin." The term suggests quality, when as a matter of fact some of the wools to which the term might apply are of distinctly inferior quality, and some, even though of better grade, are totally unsuited for certain purposes.

Another strong sentence.

In other words, the term infers a virtue which the wool may not actually possess and which may not be present in the fabric, even though the raw material is excellent.

What is most important is that the consumer does not buy wool, but buys wool fabrics, or garments made from those fabrics. Authorities agree that quality in a fabric depends upon the manufacturing processes to a much greater degree than upon the raw materials used. No good fabric can be made of poor stock, but the real difference between a quality product and a mediocre one lies in the way it is fabricated rather than in the material of which it is made. Any label which calls undue attention to the raw material depreciates the importance of workmanship and deceives the purchaser by inferring a quality in manufacturing which may not exist.

That is the end of the quotation from a public official who apparently is very well informed on the subject under discussion.

I wish to close by making an inquiry as to a different aspect of this question. Letters and communications have come to me from various sources pointing out that it is impossible, from the examination of a piece of cloth, whether made in a foreign factory or made in this country, to determine what percentage of the material is so-called virgin wool and what percentage is so-called reprocessed wool. Are there any authorities who claim that any chemical or accurate analysis can be made to determine that question?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I do not recall any scientist who professes to be able to identify in a finished fabric the relative quantities of virgin wool as defined in the bill and of reprocessed wool. They are both pure wool. The Bureau of Standards has definitely and affirmatively stated that no such method has ever been discovered. Of course, the answer is made that the manufacturer knows and that resort can be had to the manufacturer to ascertain the fact.

Mr. WALSH. What about the importers?

Mr. AUSTIN. That is one of the difficulties. Can we afford to be traveling around the world examining every piece of goods manufactured and imported? The question answers itself.

Mr. WALSH. As a matter of fact, do not some of the best so-called woolen cloths imported into this country, which come from England, contain reprocessed wool?

Mr. AUSTIN. I should say from the British Isles.

Mr. WALSH. From the British Isles.

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. How is the law to be administered?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not think it could be administered. I do not believe it could be administered as to foreign goods or domestic goods, partly for the reason to which the Senator from Massachusetts refers.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he is familiar with a couple of provisions of the bill in reference to what was said about the label carrying the name of the manufacturer down the line?

Mr. WALSH. Will the Senator read those provisions?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes. I read from section 4, paragraph (C), page 7:

The name of the manufacturer of the wool product and/or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product.

The thought I have in mind there is to prevent anyone getting the goods after they leave the manufacturer putting on a substitute label.

At the bottom of page 8, section 5 refers to the attaching of labels; and at the bottom of page 8 and the top of page 9 it is provided:

Or other means of identification required by this act.

Which applies also to substitutes which may be used.

There is another provision in the bill, the one which I endeavored to call to the attention of the Senator from Vermont, who misunderstood me and thought I was reading another section. I refer to the paragraph on page 7, beginning in line 19. Earlier the section refers to the label itself and then it says in paragraph (b):

In addition to information required in this section, the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, may contain other information not violating the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission.

What I had in mind in that respect was that there would be nothing under the provisions of this bill, of course, except that it would be a matter for the Federal Trade Commission, which would prevent anybody from saying on the particular label, if that was the fact, that his product contained the finest grade of reworked wool.

The other section referred to is the section which provides that if the product is represented as virgin wool the amount of virgin-wool content shall be "shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying such wool product is virgin wool." That, as a matter of fact, was put in because some people advertise a product as being made of virgin wool and put on the label a picture of a lamb and the words "virgin wool." That provision is put in the bill so as to require, when that kind of representation is made, a statement on the label showing what percentage of virgin wool is in the garment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to take this occasion to commend the Senator in his efforts to protect and to increase the production of wool in this country. I think we would accomplish more along that line if we would take steps to prevent such rapid increase in the importations of woolen goods into this country as we have had in recent months than by the passage of the pending bill. I do not know whether the Senator has in mind the table I introduced into the RECORD some days ago showing the rapid and extensive increase in the importation of wool and wool products into this country since the recent trade agreement with Great Britain.

The trouble with the Senator's bill is that it claims to protect the consumers by affording them an opportunity to demand virgin wool textile products rather than mixed reprocessed and virgin-wool products.

The discussion we have had here this morning seems to me to destroy the value of that line of reasoning, or at least the conclusions reached, because it seems to me that the result of this bill will be to deceive more extensively the consumer by not giving him the proper information as to the exact quality of the fabric which he purchases.

The Senate will recall that the passage which I read from the book in question clearly points out that the processing is even more important than the raw material, and that the raw material has a wide and varied value, depending upon a good many factors.

I wish to close now by saying that I have no quarrel with the Senator about his objective to try to increase the use of domestic wool, but it seems to me it should be done by giving the consumer clearer and more definite information as to the grades of virgin wool and as to the grades of the reprocessed wool, and I do not think this bill does it. In my opinion, this bill will result in lessening virgin-wool consumption. I thank the Senator and now yield the floor.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, before the Senator yields the floor, I regret very much that the Senator has been unable to be present here for the last 3 or 4 days.

Mr. WALSH. That was due to my being in conference on the social-security bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes. Many questions that arose in the minds of various Senators have been answered in great detail. I am merely now going to call attention to one—namely, what the Senator said about the importation of woolen goods from abroad.

I should be glad at any time to join the Senator in endeavoring to secure the enactment of legislation——

Mr. WALSH. That would benefit both our woolen and garment industries and wool producers.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; and those who work in the mills by limiting in a proper manner importations; but, so far as we can do so under this bill, we have provided a procedure by which there must be a disclosure of wool content in the case of importations. We have tied it in with the tariff, and jurisdiction of the matter is placed with the Secretary of the Treasury. We have letters from the Secretary of the Treasury as to how it will be handled.

Mr. WALSH. Can the Senator give me any information as to the variation in the price of different grades of wool? It varies from a few cents up to almost a dollar, does it not?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I would not put it in that way.

Mr. WALSH. I mean imported wool and domestic wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes. I put the figures in the RECORD yesterday.

Mr. WALSH. In a general way, what is the spread?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. In a general way, the lowest grade of wool—which, by the way, is not used in the manufacture of cloth but is used in felt and materials of that kind—at this time is probably as low as 20 cents, and from there the price goes to 85 cents. Reclaimed wool runs at this time from a similar low price up to 36 or 40 cents.

Mr. WALSH. May I ask the Senator if there is any provision in the bill which would permit markings to be used to indicate to any purchaser of wool when it is fabricated the relative quality and kind of wool contained in the fabric?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. There are trade terms, of course. Wool is divided by trade terms into perhaps 15 or 20 classifications. That is true also of reworked wool.

Mr. WALSH. Why could we not put in this bill those 15 or 20 terms, so that when one bought a piece of cloth he would have before him the trade term for reprocessed wool and the trade term for the grade of virgin wool? That would help the consumer. It would permit the consumer to determine the relative merit of woolen goods.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That would be impracticable. Here is a further proposition. The point I want to get across, and attempted to get across but which seems to have escaped some of the Senators, is that the different grades of virgin wool and reworked wool in the comparable scales are used in the same kind of manufacture, but a low grade of virgin wool is not used where a high-grade reclaimed wool is used. So the important thing, after all, is not that there are used some reclaimed wools at a higher price than some grades of virgin wool because they do not compete with each other in manufacture.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator agree with some of us that a garment made largely of reprocessed wool may be better than a garment made wholly of virgin wool so far as durability is concerned?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Yes; but let me add that the same kind of garment is not made, on the one hand, from high-grade reclaimed wool and, on the other hand, from low-grade virgin wool. If that were possible, it would have been done long ago, and there could have been produced cheaper garments made, say, of cheap virgin wool and good virgin wool, but cheap virgin wool is not competitive with good virgin wool.

Mr. WALSH. Is the Senator seeking to have more cloth or textile fabrics made of virgin wool than of reprocessed wool? Is that one of the objectives?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No. What we are seeking to do is to make provision so that the consumer may know what he is buying.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I should like to ask the Senator a question. The Senator stated a moment ago that the purpose of the bill, or one of the purposes of the bill, was to let the consumer know what he buys. I assume that there is not one person in a million in these United States who hears the term "virgin wool" without understanding that it is wool made from the fleece of a sheep. What I want to know is whether, under the terms of the bill, I could label a fabric "virgin wool" even though it were made from the hair of a rabbit?

I understand that under the terms of the bill I could label a fabric or an article "virgin wool" even though it were made from the hair of a rabbit. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Such a provision is in the bill; but we have that part of the bill marked for an amendment, and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is going to offer an amendment to have the word "rabbit" stricken out.

Mr. WHITE. As the bill stands, however, what I have said is true, is it not?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Oh, yes; because a small amount of rabbit fur is sometimes woven in with wool so as to give it a gloss, or something of the kind.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have always heard that in order to make a rabbit pie it was necessary first to catch the rabbit. [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That is true.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield.

Mr. DAVIS. If I correctly recall, the Senator has introduced a bill to protect manufacturers and consumers from the unrevealed presence of substituted mixtures in garments.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS. What is the difference between the Senator's bill and the bill now under discussion?

Mr. WALSH. My bill is the better bill. It could be administered with less difficulty and be more informative to the consumer.

Mr. DAVIS. I think so.

Mr. WALSH. My bill attempts to carry out what is assumed to be the objective of this bill, but with the purpose and objective of removing the inconsistencies and the inequities which appear to be in the pending bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair). Does the Senator yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WALSH. Just a minute.

Mr. DAVIS. Would not the Senator's bill be less burdensome on agriculturists and manufacturers and merchants, and be far better in every way than the pending bill?

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion, decidedly so.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to ask the Senator, he being a noted constitutional lawyer——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Does he yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understood that the Senator from Massachusetts had yielded the floor.

Mr. WALSH. But the Senator from Pennsylvania rose and said he would like to ask me a question; and I rose and took the floor so that I could answer the question.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Then the Senator from Massachusetts took the floor again, having relinquished the floor?

Mr. WALSH. No; the Senator from Pennsylvania is still asking questions.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I now desire to ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts a constitutional question about a matter that seems to me rather strange. Does the Senator think the provision of the bill I am about to read would be constitutional? I quote from the bill on page 4, line 2:

> Or who shall receive from or through commerce, and having so received shall resell or deliver for pay, or offer to resell or so deliver to any other person.

Mr. WALSH. That question was discussed yesterday during the debate, and I think the distinguished constitutional lawyer from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] expressed some doubt as to the constitutionality of that provision of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have on the table two amendments which I shall call up at the proper time; but before calling up the amendments I desire to make a very brief statement.

In the body at the other end of the Capitol this bill was given rather extensive hearings. One of the Representatives from my State is a member of the committee which conducted the hearings, he being a member of the subcommittee. After the hearings had been concluded, the subcommittee made a report. The subcommittee was divided, and the main committee likewise was divided. In the main Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the other body I think some 10 members joined in a minority report upon this bill.

I offer for the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the text of the minority report submitted by my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN] and his nine colleagues on the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report (No. 907, pt. 2) is as follows:

> The undersigned members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives believe that H. R. 944 should not be recommended to the House, holding that it is unnecessary and undesirable regulatory legislation which cannot possibly achieve its avowed objectives. The folly of the label provisions of this bill are evident. A label on your stocks carrying the percentage of each different fiber that goes into it, on your tie, your underwear, your hat; garments such as a suit would require a minimum of seven labels. All of these labels would start out with the manufacturer and would have to be replaced in turn by every subsequent handler of the product and the percentages would vary according to the weight of the various materials that were combined into a finished product. The sponsors of the measure would saddle this great burden on the industries to give the ultimate purchaser a label which would be meaningless and misleading. The label does not tell how long the garment will last. It does not tell the abrasion strength, the color fastness, the shrinkage, the tensile strength of the fiber, the length or quality of the fiber, the insulation value of the fabric against heat or cold, the workmanship in the garment, the strength in the weave of the cloth, or any of the many things which would be helpful to a purchaser. Instead, it arbitrarily divides wool fiber into two classes and places a label of apparent superiority on seedy wool, burry wool, dead wool, vat wool, shank wool, tags, etc., which range in price from 3 to 15 cents a pound, which utterly refutes their labeled claim of superiority. At the same time the bill compels the labeling of slubbing, laps, rovings, thread waste, and card fly wool as reworked (they are all new wool in the process of manufacture) though they are today selling on the market at 10 times the price per pound as the virgin wool previously listed.
> The sponsors of this bill maintain that it is designed to cure the manifest evils of misrepresentation which exist in the sale of articles of apparel. These evils are being curbed and gradually cured by the Federal Trade Commission which is issuing cease and desist orders in all cases of misrepresentation brought to its attention. The sponsors of this bill, however, insist that there are other misrepresentation practices with which the Federal Trade Commission is not able to deal. It is obvious that if such further misrepresentation does exist, the Federal Trade Commission is fully able to deal with it, since it is specifically given such power. But it is further obvious from a study of the record of the hearings that the sole type of misrepresentation which has been shown to exist is the type with which the Commission is already dealing, namely, the substitution of cotton and rayon fiber for wool or silk without proper disclosure of the fact. The essence of this bill lies in the fact that it attempts to make a distinction between wool fiber which has never been previously processed and fiber which has been subjected to certain manufacturing operations or, in some cases, to a certain amount of service. There can be no question of misrepresentation here, since there is not, and cannot be, a representation of the extent to which any particular fiber has been subjected to various manufacturing processes. Insofar as any such representation is in part made or implied, the Federal Trade Commission is adequately empowered to compel truthful representation.
> The question, then, is in no sense one of fraud or misrepresentation but one of possible benefit to the consumer. The alleged benefit to the consumer lies in the attempt to confine the use of the term "wool" to wool fiber which has never before reached the fabric stage, hitherto referred to as "virgin wool." The promulgation of such a distinction in wool products—as distinguished from the fibers from which they are made—immediately gives an undeserved quality status to products made of "wool" (if that term is to be understood to mean "virgin wool") and a connotation of definite inferiority to products made in part of "reprocessed" or "reused" wool. The testimony indicates that the highest-priced products are usually made of new wool but likewise indicates quite clearly that many poor products are made of new wool and many superior products are made of reprocessed or reused wool. Were it possible to apply the superior-sounding term only to superior products, there might be something to be said for the distinction, but the bill proposes the application of the term "wool" or virgin wool not only to quality fabrics and other quality products but also to very inferior fabrics which happen to be made of new wool, no matter how inferior or unsuitable that wool may be or how carelessly or improperly it may be processed.

It is obvious from the testimony presented that propaganda which the proponents of the bill admit they have disseminated has already influenced consumers to such an extent that (if this bill is enacted into law) we can expect that those consumers will be victimized by poorly constructed and carelessly processed materials made from new wool of an inferior grade which, however, could technically qualify as entitled to use a label supposedly indicating quality, certainly the Government should not be a party to establishing a quality distinction between wool fibers unless the distinction is of such a nature that those products enjoying the quality designation are in reality quality products. In this connection it is a matter of prime importance to appreciate that not only is there no absolute relation between the newness of a wool fiber and its quality but the bill does not propose to apply the distinction to such fibers but to fabrics manufactured therefrom. Even if all new fibers were always superior to all reprocessed or reused fibers, the same relationship would not of necessity hold as to fabrics made from both types. Both proponents and opponents have testified that the processes of manufacture are of greater import in the determination of fabric quality than is the selection of the raw material. The raw material is naturally of substantial import, but to imply that it is the sole element in determining quality as is done by this bill is deception of the very type the Federal Trade Commission is seeking diligently to prevent.

Thus the bill not only does not prevent the only type of misrepresentation which various witnesses have alleged to exist but the bill actually provides Government sanction of a more subtle and misleading type of misrepresentation by giving a quality designation to products which do not of necessity merit such a quality rating.

This conclusion seems inescapable from an unbiased reading of the record. Nevertheless, even if it could be shown that there were valid arguments for making a distinction between new wool, reprocessed wool, and reused wool, there are compelling arguments against the passage of this bill.

Foremost among these is the fact that there is no physical or chemical test by which the newness of fibers can be ascertained after they have been processed and intermingled in a fabric. No expert could analyze within reasonable limits the wool fiber content of finished wool textile fabrics. If there is no discernible physical or chemical difference between a new and a remanufactured fiber in a fabric, there can be no possible advantage to the consumer in stating the percentage of either which may be present.

The second administrative objection to the bill lies in the impossibility of enforcement except by the establishment of a policing and enforcement agency of burdensome proportions. Since analysis of products would not indicate compliance or lack of it, there could be no enforcement except through a comprehensive supervision of records. There are some 400 wool textile mills and perhaps 400 additional establishments classified as cotton mills, hosiery, underwear, upholstery manufacturers, etc., who use wool fiber. This, however, is only a beginning since the product of these mills goes to thousands of manufacturers who make the articles into which these wool products go. These again are distributed through hundreds of thousands of separate retail establishments. To check and follow the multitudinous products of these hundreds of mills through these outlets would be an undertaking of the first magnitude requiring a field force which would certainly aggregate several thousands. Not even the exaggerated benefits claimed by the most ardent supporters of this bill would justify the creation of such a body of inspectors and investigators. This bill would in fact encourage the "bootlegging" of inferior fibers.

Another administrative difficulty lies in the fact that we would have no control over imported cloth and could not check the accuracy of the representations made by the manufacturers of imported cloth. The records of foreign manufacturers are not available to our agents, and it is obvious that foreign manufacturers, secure in the knowledge that their misrepresentations could not be detected, would claim that all their products were entitled to be labeled as composed exclusively of new wool. This would result in unfair and destructive competition for our own manufacturers if enforcement here were attempted on a scale which constituted a threat to a nonconforming domestic manufacturer or would force our own manufacturers to misrepresent in order to meet the importer on his own ground if enforcement proved to be the farce which we believe it would soon become. It is most unfair to place American manufacturers in a position where they must either cheat or see their own markets won by foreign manufacturers who are not obliged to observe the same standards.

The wool growers apparently desire this legislation because of their sincere belief that it would raise the price of wool and will thus add to their income. We are convinced this hope would not be realized if this bill were enacted but that the public would be required to pay more for their clothing, or rather compelled to buy less clothing because the quantity of wool bought depends on the consumer's ability to buy. If a man now buys a $20 suit because that is what he can afford to pay, you cannot legislate him into buying $30 suits.

This bill would be injurious to the cotton producer because 100,000,000 pounds of lint cotton is used annually in the manufacturing of mixed fabrics. This bill would lose that market to the cotton farmer.

We cannot conscientiously recommend the disruption of large and important industries, the arbitrary destruction of employers, the consequent unemployment of labor, and the harmful misleading of consumers on the doubtful chance that the price of wool might fractionally increase thereby.

Therefore, we believe that H. R. 944 should not pass.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, recently I have received numerous communications relative to this bill. Notwithstanding the fact that my State produces wool, I think the RECORD should show the objections to the bill as submitted by representatives of some of the leading mills of the country.

I first submit a letter from the Talbot Mills, of North Billerica, Mass., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be included in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

TALBOT MILLS,
North Billerica, Mass., June 27, 1939.

(S. 162 and H. R. 944.)

Hon. Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to respectfully record with you my objections to the legislation proposed by the above bills. Briefly, my objections are:

1. The attempt to distinguish between virgin wool and reclaimed or reworked wool will give an advantage to much unserviceable virgin-wool fiber, and will put at a disadvantage much worthy and serviceable reclaimed or reworked wool fiber.

2. Information as to the virgin or reclaimed content cannot be of value to the consumer, will mislead the consumer, and will cause the consumer to pay higher prices for fabrics or garments which may be even less serviceable.

3. The provisions of the bills cannot be enforced except at enormous expense to the Government, and it is extremely doubtful if they can be enforced at all.

I am heartily in favor of a law which will compel the labeling of fabrics and garments as to their content of wool, cotton, silk, and rayon. Such a law would be of value to the consumer and could be easily enforced.

Respectfully yours,

THOMAS T. CLARK, Treasurer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Second, I submit a letter from the Noyes-Gebhard Co., of Taunton, Mass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be included in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

NOYES-GEBHARD CO.,
Taunton, Mass., June 28, 1939.

Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As members of the National Association of Wool Manufacturers, we have been requested to make known to you our objection to the wool labeling measures, S. 162 and H. R. 944. We are glad to do this. While we are in favor of supplying the public with the fullest information concerning products which it buys, we do believe that any labeling law so far suggested will result in a certain degree of deception to the public. Because the law will be obeyed by a majority of manufacturers and be violated by a small crooked fringe of the industry, we feel quite certain that the law will work a hardship to honest manufacturers.

With all due respect to the various experts who have testified at hearings, we do not know and do not believe that there is any very definite way of determining the wool, reworked wool, and wool waste content of various fabrics. This belief on our part is somewhat supported by the increased tolerance which is allowed for reworked wool, etc., as compared with the tolerance allowed for cotton and rayon content, which is very definitely determinable. In other words, what is the use trying to protect the American public in a matter which is not susceptible to very accurate determination?

Also, we doubt if there is any very worthy purpose to be served by a labeling law which distinguishes between wool, wool waste, and reworked wool for the reason that a great many grades of reworked wool and wool waste are superior to some grades of virgin wool. There are whole classes of vat wool and tanners wool (virgin wools) that would satisfy a labeling act but which are infinitely inferior to many grades of select reworked wool and waste that are comparable in quality and price to virgin wool. Again, a labeling device distinguishing between the indistinguishable virgin wool, reworked wool, and wool waste would have a very definite tendency to increase the cost of clothing to the American public which we think would be a very great disservice by the Congress of the United States.

An admixture of various wool fibers would be about as indistinguishable one fiber from another as a pint of brewed tea mixed with a pint of water. That might be slightly exaggerated, but it is so much a parallel that you can readily see that fraud could not be easily detected, and in our industry, as in other lines, there is a crooked fringe that will do anything to make money.

It seems to us that the labeling bills are promoted primarily by the wool growers of the United States to increase the use and hence the value to them of virgin wool. Of late years they have been operating through consumers leagues, which are sincere in their efforts to promote labeling. The labeling proposals have been supported by at least one prominent manufacturing concern in the East, which has been keeping its mills afloat with Government money and which hopes to do a better job if the Government will further help them to kill competition by Government fiat. Government loans to industry have already retarded recovery and have rewarded the inefficient as against the efficient. The sooner most of this monkey business is cut out and the American people go back to work the sooner we will have some measure of prosperity.

It would seem to us that if the Congress wanted to do something constructive in behalf of the buying public, it might pass a labeling law calling for the approximate percentages of wool, silk, cotton, and rayon, and other fibers, if any. This would definitely protect the public and would be enforcible.

Very truly yours,

NOYES-GEBHARD CO.
L. N. GEBHARD.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The third communication is a letter from W. J. Dickey & Sons, of Oella, Baltimore County, Md. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

OELLA, BALTIMORE COUNTY, MD., June 28, 1939.

Hon. Senator ELMER D. THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In behalf of our own business and in behalf of more than 400 employees whose livelihood depends largely upon the manufacture of fabrics containing reworked wool, we desire to register our opposition to the so-called truth-in-fabric bill, S. 162.

In the first place, there is no practical method, either by chemical analysis or by microscopic test, of ascertaining whether or not a given fabric contains reworked wool. Consequently to enforce the law would require an army of Government employees to police the mills of this country, while the absence of such an army would put a premium on fraud. Furthermore, it would be impossible to enforce the law against foreign manufacturers, who would thus be given an unfair advantage by being free to label their fabrics any way they chose.

Second, inasmuch as some reworked wools are superior to some virgin wools, labeling would confuse the customer and frequently prejudice him against a superior fabric.

Third, there is, of course, a wide range in the quality of fabrics made in this country, purposely, to suit a wide range of pocketbooks. The consumer's only interest, however, is that he should receive full value for his dollar, and this protection competition automatically provides him.

Very truly yours,

W. J. DICKEY & SONS, INC.,
By WM. A. DICKEY, Jr., President.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The next letter is from the Colonial Woolen Mills Co., of Cleveland, Ohio. I ask that the letter be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

THE COLONIAL WOOLEN MILLS CO.,
Cleveland, Ohio, June 26, 1939.

Hon. Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR THOMAS: With reference to the wool-labeling bill measures, S. 162 and H. R. 944, which to date has not become a law, we wish to express our serious opposition of the passage of this bill for several good reasons.

We are manufacturers of bed blankets, automobile motor robes, men's overcoating and topcoating fabrics; also have made ladies' wear fabrics in the medium-price field. The reason for our strong opposition to this bill is that in most of our fabrics we use in the neighborhood of from 40 to 80 percent of all-wool reworked stocks, which enables us to put out this fabric so they can be made into garments, and the blankets and robes can be sold to the middle-class people at a price to fit their pocketbooks. If we were to manufacture an all-virgin-wool blanket, motor robe, or civilian fabrics from 100 percent virgin wool, it would be impossible for the medium class trade to pay the price. Nevertheless, we can give them practically the same wear a virgin-wool product will give them and at the same time make it possible for them to purchase same when they need them.

If a complete survey were made before passing on this bill of how many overcoats, top coats in both men's and women's wear garments, you would find that the percentage of virgin-wool fabrics would be less than 5 percent of the entire total. This 5 percent is being purchased by people of means, and if we were forced to make nothing but virgin-wool fabrics we would be forced to shut down our plant.

A fabric made of 50 percent of virgin wool and 50 percent of reworked wool in some instances makes a better fabric—will wear longer and retain its shape better than a virgin-wool fabric that is made of a fair quality of virgin wool. There are some virgin wools coming from various sections of the country that are poorer in quality than reworked wools. For your information we sight the following cases:

Short 6-months California wools, which are virgin wools, would not make as good a fabric as a white worsted thread waste garnett, as the white worsted thread waste is made from long-staple wool and the fiber, after being reworked, is from three to four times as long in staple as some of the virgin wools grown throughout the United States. The wearing qualities of a fabric made from this reworked wool would outlast any fabric that would be made from a short-staple virgin wool, and naturally be a better value.

This deception alone, if these fabrics were labeled according to the suggested bill, would be deceptive to the public and would invite chiseling. Furthermore, it would be impossible for any human being to be able to define a fabric and state whether there is any percentage of reworked wool in a fabric that is made of virgin wool and a good quality of reworked wool.

We think it would be very unfair to approve this bill, as there would be much chance for deception on the part of unbusinesslike and unethical manufacturers. Furthermore, after a fabric is made it is sold to clothing manufacturers and jobbers of materials, who are apt to sell to the small manufacturer coat lengths that they in turn will guarantee all-virgin wool, even though in the original sale the manufacturer of the cloth may have sold it to them labeled with a certain percentage of reworked wool. It would be impossible to trace all these sales, which naturally would invite full deception.

We sincerely believe that if this bill is adopted we would be forced to buy large quantities of foreign wools, as this country does not grow enough virgin wool to manufacture a major production of fabrics manufactured in this country.

It is very essential that reworked wool be used in order to consume the byproducts, and we should do everything possible to keep these byproducts from being shipped abroad and sold at ridiculously low prices for the benefit of foreign countries, when they can be put to good use for the benefit of ourselves.

When conditions are normal in this country we find that our inventories on virgin wool are very low, which means that they are being consumed practically at the rate they are grown. Statistics has proof of this, as practically no domestic wools are shipped abroad.

We earnestly request that you oppose this bill for the good of every United States citizen.

Sincerely yours,

THE COLONIAL WOOLEN MILLS CO.,
CARL J. HAHN, President.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The next letter I offer is from M. T. Stevens & Sons Co., of North Andover, Mass.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

M. T. STEVENS & SONS CO.,
North Andover, Mass., June 26, 1939.

Senator ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: The concern which the writer represents, operating 9 mills in the New England States and giving employment at the present time to approximately 4,300 men and women, is definitely opposed to the wool-labeling bills S. 162 and H. R. 944. These bills attempt to define virgin wool. Because there is no method of determining virgin wool from reworked wool it would be impossible to decide whether any mill was not living up to the regulations.

We use a large amount of new wool, and in certain fabrics in order to meet a reasonable price, we blend reworked wool with the new wool. Many fabrics are improved in strength and wearing qualities by this mixture of wool fibers.

We are not opposed to the wool labeling of fabrics and believe that the customer is entitled to know the percentage of other fibers; such as, cotton, rayon, and silk, which might be mixed with wool. At the same time, we believe that the customer will be deceived into thinking he is buying a better garment if we are required to mark the percentage of virgin wool and other wool fibers.

We would definitely like to be recorded as vigorously opposed to the wool-labeling bill S. 162 because it attempts to describe the difference between virgin wool and reworked wool, and there is no method known of determining this distinction.

Yours very truly,

M. T. STEVENS & SONS CO.,
ABBOTT STEVENS, Treasurer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The last letter I offer for the RECORD is one from the Appleton Woolen Mills, of Appleton, Wis. I ask also that this letter be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

APPLETON WOOLEN MILLS,
Appleton, Wis., June 27, 1939.

In re S. 62, truth-in-fabrics bill.
Hon. ELMER THOMAS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We have noticed from various sources that this labeling regulations subject is again up in Congress. When the bill comes up for action we would appreciate your giving weight to the following items:

(1) No fair manufacturer objects to a practical truth-in-fabric bill if such can be worked out.

(2) The impracticability lies in the fact that research laboratories are unable to distinguish virgin from reworked wool.

(3) This statement is acknowledged by all reliable laboratories, including the Bureau of Standards.

(4) Because identification is impossible, such a law invites rather than stops unfair labeling of fabrics by those manufacturers who take advantage of this situation.

(5) Therefore the honest manufacturer is punished through being compelled to compete against an unfair fabric.

(6) Also there are two sources of wool:

(a) As clipped from the sheep;

(b) As pulled from the pelt of slaughtered animals.

(7) Proposed bill unfairly excludes pulled wool from being labeled virgin wool.

(8) Fair-practice rules must be workable or they are a decided detriment rather than a help.

(9) Although the high-quality wool wastes make a better fabric than low-quality virgin wool, public opinion feels that anything marked "virgin wool" is of superior quality.

(10) Manifestly American manufacturers would be subject to unfair foreign competition. A foreign manufacturer with impunity could avail himself of the virgin-wool label falsely, implying superior quality to wool fabrics, irrespective of the fiber content. This because there is no method of checking the truth of the statement as to fiber content by examination or test of the fabric, and the Commission has no access to the records of foreign manufacturers.

Yours very truly,

APPLETON WOOLEN MILLS,
A. H. WICKESBERG, Treasurer.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I think everyone sympathizes with the effort to enact legislation which will afford the consumer an opportunity to know what he is buying. It is true that if we go to buy a piece of jewelry we must take the recommendation of the jeweler. If we go to buy a suit of clothes we must take the recommendation or the word of the clothing salesman. This bill, as I understand, is an effort to afford information to the consumer, the person who desires to buy a garment, as to what the garment is made of. So the bill is labeled "truth in fabric." The report submitted by the committee on the bill is headed "truth in fabric."

Mr. President, that being true, it seems to me that the Congress should try, if possible, to enact a law which would give the customer accurate information about the matter to which the bill pertains, and that is woolen products. I call the attention of the Senate to section 2 of the bill, which relates to definitions.

Subsection (b) of section 2 attempts to define wool. As defined, wool is "the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat and may include the so-called specialty fibers, namely, the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, rabbit, and vicuna."

In subsection (c) of section 2, the term "virgin wool" is defined as "wool which has never been reclaimed from any spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured product"; hence, goat hair, camel hair, alpaca hair, llama hair, rabbit hair, and vicuna hair, as defined in subsection (b), if same had not been reclaimed and had not been woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured, would be defined as "virgin wool."

Subsection (e) of section 2 attempts to define wool products, and such wool products are defined as "any product or portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, but does not include carpets, rugs, and mats."

Mr. President, if these subsections remain in the bill, the Congress will have declared by a solemn enactment, first, that the hair of an Angora or Cashmere goat is wool—not virgin wool, but wool. Second, we shall have declared by virtue of a solemn statute that camel hair is wool, that alpaca hair is wool, that llama hair is wool, that rabbit hair is wool, and likewise that vicuna hair is wool.

Mr. President, I am not willing to cast my vote in favor of a section of law which declares that these articles—the hair of the goat, camel's hair, rabbit hair—are wool, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment striking from this subsection all the portions of such subsection which seek to define the hair of the goat, the camel, and the rabbit as wool.

Subsection (e) is as follows:

> The term "wool product" means any product or portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, but does not include carpets, rugs, and mats.

Mr. President, if this section stands, it means that any portion of a garment being wool, the whole garment becomes a wool product. It means that if someone even represents a portion of a garment to be wool, that garment is, under the law, a wool product. It means that advertising a garment to be wool, under this proposed law, makes of such garment a wool product.

Mr. President, I do not believe that is the intent of the Senate in enacting this piece of legislation. Subsection (c) defines virgin wool as follows:

> The term "virgin wool" means wool which has never been reclaimed from any spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured product.

If these three sections should be enacted into law it would be possible for anyone to take an old pair of worn-out overalls and put on those overalls at least one patch of rabbit fur, and thereafter he could legally advertise that garment as a virgin-wool garment. [Laughter] That cannot be denied, because the sections are clear. Under subsection (e) of section 2 any garment which contains any wool is a wool garment; and rabbit hair, being classified under this bill as wool—and obviously the rabbit hair still on the skin could not have been processed—such rabbit hair could not have been spun into yarn or woven into cloth. I am sure the proponents of the bill did not mean to have this bill so loosely drawn that such an interpretation could possibly be made.

Mr. President, I call up an amendment I have lying on the table, and offer it as a substitute for the first amendment of the committee. It is an amendment to subsection (b) of section 2. The amendment of the committee is to strike out the word "shall" and to insert the word "may." I offer a substitute amendment to strike out the language containing both the words "shall' and "may," and I think it is in order at this place.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated, but the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment will not be in order as in the nature of a substitute for the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Technically, the committee would have the right to perfect the section by having the amendment adopted striking out the word "shall" and inserting the word "may." Then I would have an opportunity to offer an amendment to strike out the portion of the section, as amended. The Chair is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the word "lamb", it is proposed to insert a period and to strike out the remainder of the subsection, as follows, "or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat and shall include the so-called specialty fibers, namely, the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, rabbit, and vicuna."

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Does the Chair rule that the amendment is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot rule until a point of order is made. The Chair has stated that he does not believe it is in order as a substitute.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I make the point of order, not for the purpose of delaying, but merely for the purpose of getting a decision of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The Chair is correct, and I shall adhere to the decision of the Chair. At a later time I will offer my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment of the committee.

The first amendment of the Committee on Interstate Commerce was, under the heading "Definitions", on page 2, line 3, after the word "and", to strike out "shall" and insert "may," so as to read:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Wool Products Labeling Act of 1939."

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 2. As used in this act—

(a) The term "person" means an individual, partnership, corporation, association, or any other form of business enterprise, plural or singular, as the case demands.

(b) The term "wool" means the fiber from the fleece of the sheep or lamb or hair of the Angora or Cashmere goat and may include the so-called specialty fibers, namely, the hair of the camel, alpaca, llama, rabbit, and vicuña.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, unanimous consent has not been given to pass upon committee amendments first, I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that order has not been entered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Would it not be in order now for me to offer my amendment to subdivision (b) as amended?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would be in order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I offer the amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will again be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 2, after the word "lamb", it is proposed to insert a period and to strike out the remainder of the subsection.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I hope the amendment will not be agreed to, because the inclusion of these different words under the designation "wool" is in order to bring them within the term "wool product," which occurs later, and thereby require that they may be labeled. Of course, some of these fibers, such as the wool of alpaca, the wool of the camel, and especially the wool of the vicuña, are fine grades of wool, although they are generally called "hair." The hair of the camel is frequently made into overcoats and garments of that kind, and the garments are then sold as wool garments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Is it not the intention of the Senator to move to strike out the word "rabbit," and with that amendment will not the language cover the whole wool trade as it should be covered?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. That is my thought. We will ask to have the word "rabbit" stricken out, because as a result of the hearings we have been able to determine that rabbit hair, or fur, is used almost exclusively in hats, and it is not a fiber which is woven, spun, or otherwise made into cloth, as a rule.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Wyoming stated that the purpose of the inclusion of these various words in the amendment of the committee was in order to have them applied in a definition later in relation to the labeling. Will the goods be labeled to include camel's hair and the other things?

Mr. SCHWARTZ. No. I think I made my statement a little too broad. The purpose is to bring them within the term "wool product" as it appears in subparagraph (e), on page 2, line 14. The paragraph provides that a wool product is "any product or portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool." By including the fibers set out, it will result in their being classified as wool products.

Mr. FRAZIER. From the standpoint of the wool grower, I cannot see the advantage of having those products included.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the committee was, on page 2, in line 8, after the word "product", to strike out the comma and "but does not include wool wastes as defined herein"; in line 12, after the word "manufactured", to strike out the comma and "and includes wool wastes as defined herein", so as to read:

(c) The term "virgin wool" means wool which has never been reclaimed from any spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured product.

(d) The term "reclaimed wool" means wool which has been made into a fibrous state after having been spun, woven, knitted, felted, or otherwise manufactured.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, in line 16, after the word "wool", to insert a comma and "but does not include carpets, rugs, and mats", so as to read:

(e) The term "wool product" means any product or portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, but does not include carpets, rugs, and mats.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, since subdivision (e) has been amended by the adoption of the committee amendment, I now call up my second amendment, and offer it as a substitute for subdivision (e).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 14, it is proposed to strike out all of paragraph (e), lines 14 to 17, inclusive, as follows:

(e) The term "wool product" means any product or portion of a product which contains, purports to contain, or in any way is represented as containing wool, but does not include carpets, rugs, and mats.

And to insert the following:

(e) The term "wool product" means any product made from the fiber of the fleece of the sheep or lamb and containing the percentage of wool as provided in subsection (A) of paragraph (2) of section (4) of this act.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I should like to have an opportunity to read the amendment, as it was stated very rapidly. I may be able to accept it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. While the Senator is reading the amendment, I desire to make a statement as to what it provides.

Subsection (e) as printed in the bill, and as amended by the committee amendment, provides that any garment containing any part of wool is to be regarded as a wool product. It makes no difference how small a portion of wool the garment may contain, the fact that it contains some wool, any quantity of wool, makes the garment a wool product. But that is not all. Under the provision as it now stands before the Senate any product which purports to contain wool, or in any way is represented as containing wool, is a wool product.

I am not willing to go on record as declaring by law that an article which may be advertised as a wool product is a wool product, or that one which contains a small portion of wool is thereby made a wool product.

On page 5 of the bill, subdivision (A) of subparagraph (2) attempts to define the percentage of wool which entitles a product to become a wool product. Subdivision (A) reads in part, as follows:

The percentage of the total fiber weight of the wool product, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight.

That provision requires that a wool product must contain 95 percent of wool in order to entitle it to be a wool product, and if it does not contain that much, and is labeled as a wool product, it is a misbranded product.

I attempt in my amendment to apply the definition contained in lines 14, 15, and 16, on page 5, and the definition of a wool product in subsection (e) of section 2. If my amendment should be agreed to, it would simply mean that in order for a product to be labeled a wool product it must contain 95 percent of some kind of wool.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, the principal effect of the amendment would be to require that any product represented as a wool product would have to contain some wool.

We provide that a wool product shall be "any product or portion of a product which contains, purports to contain" wool, and so forth. Of course, if a product is represented as a wool product and has no wool in it at all, we want it to come within the provisions of the bill so that it will have to be labeled as to what is in it. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 17, to strike out down to and including line 22, as follows:

(f) The term "wool wastes" means brush waste, burr waste, card waste, fly waste, woolen lap waste, oily waste, spinners' waste, yarn waste, woolen ring and roving wastes, so-called card strips, droppings, flocks, paint wool, tanners' wool, sweepings, and wool extract.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, in line 19, after the word "country", to strike out "if said wool product is not thereafter sold, or offered for sale, in the United States or any Territory thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 22, to strike out:

SEC. 4. For the purpose of this act a wool product shall be misbranded if not stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified in accordance with the following provisions of this section, and such rules and regulations hereunder and pursuant hereto as the Commission may prescribe, or if falsely or deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise falsely or deceptively identified, advertised, or represented.

(a) Each stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification shall be on or affixed to the wool product and shall show—

And to insert in lieu thereof:

SEC. 4. (a) A wool product shall be misbranded—

(1) If it is falsely or deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified.

(2) If a stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, is not on or affixed to the wool product and does not show—

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, there are a number of minor amendments on page 3 of the bill which I thought were to be acted upon. I desire to offer a new subsection to section 2, if that be in order.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, may I suggest that the more orderly procedure would be to go through with the committee amendments first and then consider any amendments that may be offered from the floor? May I suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that he ask for unanimous consent to proceed with the committee amendments first?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have the floor and I have not yielded for that purpose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the Senator had yielded.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I have only one more amendment, and after that I shall offer none.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does not the Senator desire to have his amendment stated?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Yes; but I wish first to make a very short statement. Section 2 contains a number of definitions of wool products. The first subdivision defines wool. The second subdivision defines virgin wool. Another subdivision defines wool products. The bill at no place defines virgin-wool products, and I desire at this time to offer a new subsection to section 2 attempting to define virgin-wool products.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, after line 17, it is proposed to insert the following new subsection:

The term "virgin-wool product" means any product which contains the percentage of virgin-wool fiber as required for wool products as defined in paragraph (A) of subsection (2) of section 4 of this act.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, just a word of explanation. On page 5, section 4, paragraph (2), in clause (A) the bill seeks to define the percentage necessary to entitle a product to be a wool product. I apply the same percentage to a virgin-wool product; and if the amendment should be adopted, it would simply mean that in order for a product to be labeled "virgin-wool product" it must have 95 percent of virgin wool in the product, the same as required of a wool product under section 4 of the bill.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Downey	King	Russell
Andrews	Ellender	La Follette	Schwartz
Ashurst	Frazier	Lee	Schwellenbach
Austin	George	Lodge	Sheppard
Bailey	Gerry	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Gibson	Lucas	Stewart
Barbour	Gillette	Lundeen	Taft
Barkley	Glass	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Bone	Green	McKellar	Thomas, Utah
Borah	Guffey	McNary	Tobey
Bridges	Gurney	Maloney	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Mead	Truman
Burke	Harrison	Miller	Tydings
Byrd	Hatch	Minton	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Hayden	Murray	Van Nuys
Capper	Herring	Norris	Wagner
Chavez	Hill	O'Mahoney	Walsh
Clark, Idaho	Holman	Overton	Wheeler
Clark, Mo.	Holt	Pepper	White
Connally	Hughes	Pittman	Wiley
Danaher	Johnson, Calif.	Radcliffe
Davis	Johnson, Colo.	Reed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] for the following reasons:

It adds to the bill some more of the old fallacy relating to virgin wool as a trade-mark or trade label. Let me read it:

Add a new subsection to section 2:

"The term 'virgin wool product' means any product which contains the percentage of virgin-wool fiber as required for wool products as defined in paragraph (a) of subsection (2) of section 4 of this act."

That percentage is 95 percent. Therefore there is a new control, an additional control, over the product handled by the manufacturer, the merchant, and the consumer, namely, the label, "virgin-wool product." I think the bill was bad enough as it was before with the label "virgin wool." However, with the proposed amendment hitched on to it I think the monopoly of the manufacturers of virgin-wool products would be consolidated and strengthened.

I ask the Senator from Oklahoma if he will not please consider the wisdom of withdrawing his amendment?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, this bill is a most important piece of legislation. The bill was introduced early in the present session. The very able and active subcommittee held hearings. As a result of those hearings some 30 amendments were made to the bill as introduced. That is obviously evidence of the fact that the original bill had not been well considered. If 30 amendments resulted from the few brief hearings that were held, it is obvious to me that further consideration of the measure would bring forth some additional amendments.

I could not agree to vote for a legislative enactment that rabbit's hair is wool, and possibly virgin wool, and that camel's hair and goat's hair are wool, and possibly virgin wool. The Senate, by a vote earlier in the day, has declared that such products should not be labeled as wool at all, and that wool should be limited to fiber made from the fleece of a sheep or lamb. My understanding of wool is that it is something grown on the back of a sheep or lamb.

Mr. President, the committee brought forth a bill which did not clearly define a wool product; and at no place in the bill is it attempted to define a virgin-wool product. The purpose of the bill is to afford the consumer some knowledge of the article he is buying. If the consumer wants to buy an overcoat or a suit, he should know or have an opportunity to know the contents of the garment. Nowhere in the bill are the contents even sought to be defined.

It occurs to me that much progress has been made on this piece of legislation. I am of the opinion that much more progress could be made, and that the bill could be perfected by further consideration at the hands of the committee. So, at the request of a member of the subcommittee, I shall be only too glad to ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment; and I suggest to the minority member of the subcommittee the advisability of affording the Senate an opportunity to have the bill recommitted to the committee for further consideration, the committee to report back to the Senate within a week, or even less time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have not the right to speak in my own time. If I speak at this time, it will have to be in the time of the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I shall be glad to have my time used for that purpose as long as the Chair will permit.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from Oklahoma that the education on this bill is not sufficient. I asked the author of the bill [Mr. SCHWARTZ], when he first asked the Senate to proceed to consider the bill, whether or not he was contemplating substituting the provisions of the House bill for those of the Senate bill. I regret that he said "No." My impression is that the House has advanced a step farther than has the Senate in the study of this subject. I think if we could only have an opportunity to put the two measures together, with the measure introduced by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the suggestions which have crept out in the discussion, we might be able to frame a better bill.

Mr. President, I think every Member of the Senate will agree that we should proceed to the enactment of some such legislation, in the principle of which we all agree. The difficulty is that some of us think we have before us a bill which goes too far, a bill which is excessively regimenting in its character and exceptionally special in its privileges, and which benefits the wrong parties. As we see it, the bill is not well conceived to benefit the producer of wool. So I hope it may be possible to recommit the bill to the committee for further consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] has withdrawn his amendment to section 2. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment to section 4, beginning in line 23, on page 4.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may we have the amendment stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 22, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 4. For the purpose of this act a wool product shall be misbranded if not stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified in accordance with the following provisions of this section, and such rules and regulations hereunder and pursuant hereto as the Commission may prescribe, or if falsely or deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise falsely or deceptively identified, advertised, or represented.

(a) Each stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification shall be on or affixed to the wool product and shall show—

And insert:

SEC. 4. (a) A wool product shall be misbranded—

(1) If it is falsely or deceptively stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified.

(2) If a stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, is not on or affixed to the wool product and does not show—

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. When the absence of a quorum was suggested, there was pending an amendment offered by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. Has that amendment been withdrawn?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma withdrew his amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And the Senate is now proceeding to consider committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is now proceeding to consider committee amendments.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of committee amendments before any other amendments may be offered from the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wyoming? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The question recurs on the amendment of the committee last stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 5, to strike out:

(3) In the case of yarn, the name of the manufacturer thereof, and in the case of other wool products, the name of the manufacturer of the woven, knitted, or felted product.

(b) Where the term "wool," "woolen," or "worsted," or any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name suggesting or implying the presence of wool is used in connection with a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, the percentages by weight of the separate wool contents thereof shall be shown in words and figures equally conspicuous: Provided, That nothing herein shall limit other provisions of this section.

(c) No trade name, term, descriptive name, or other representation, suggesting or implying that a wool product is made of virgin wool shall be used in connection with any wool product unless the percentage by weight of the virgin wool content thereof is set forth in words and figures equally conspicuous, or unless the total fiber weight of such wool product is 100 percent virgin wool, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 7, to insert:

(C) The name of the manufacturer of the wool product and/or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product.

(3) In the case of a wool product containing a fiber other than wool, if the percentages by weight of the wool contents thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying the presence of wool, used in connection with such wool product.

(4) In the case of a wool product represented as virgin wool, if the percentages by weight of the virgin-wool content thereof are not shown in words and figures equally conspicuous with any trade name, pictorial representation, term, or descriptive name, suggesting or implying such wool product is virgin wool, or if the total fiber weight of such wool product is not 100 percent virgin wool, exclusive of ornamentation not exceeding 5 percent of said total fiber weight.

(b) In addition to information required in this section, the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, may contain other information not violating the provisions of this act or the rules and regulations of the Commission.

(c) If any person subject to section 3 with respect to a wool product finds or has reasonable cause to believe its stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, or substitute therefor under section 5, does not contain the information required by this act, he may replace same with a substitute containing the information so required.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] desires to offer a substitute for the first three lines which the committee amendment proposes to insert. Would it be in order now for him to do so?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be in order if it is an amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 7, it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 3, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert:

(C) Either the name of the manufacturer of the wool product, or the name of one or more persons subject to section 3 with respect to such wool product, or the name of said manufacturers, and the names of one or more of such other persons.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this is more or less of a clarifying amendment and does not change, in my opinion, the objective of the committee amendment. I understand the amendment is satisfactory to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment again be stated.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before that shall be done, as I have to leave the Chamber for a committee meeting, I wish to make merely a brief statement regarding the pending bill.

The statement has been made within the past few minutes on the floor that the education of Congress on legislation of this character is incomplete. That statement may be made perhaps with as much propriety 10 years or 20 years from now as it can be made today. Some 20 years ago, when I was a Member of the House of Representatives, I was chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to consider truth-in-fabrics legislation, misbranding legislation, and various kinds of similar legislation designed to bring about labeling of merchandise so that the purchaser would know what it contained. There were introduced pure-silk bills, pure-leather bills, pure-wool bills, pure-cotton bills, and various other bills dealing with single subjects and dealing with the question of misbranding generally. I held hearings for many weeks and obtained a great deal of information on the subject of misbranding and on the relative merits of reworked products of various kinds.

I recall that there was testimony showing that a shoe, for instance, made of all leather was not so good as a shoe made mainly of leather, but with the heel and toe made of fabric that would hold up the shoe. The testimony showed, I think, that a heel and toe made of leather would not be so satisfactory because it would not hold up the toe and it would not hold up the heel. The question of whether certain types of virgin wool are inferior to reworked wool, called shoddy, was gone into at some length, but there was no agreement, there is not now agreement, and probably there never will be full agreement, as to whether certain types of reworked wool may be superior in wearing quality to certain types of wool taken from a certain portion of the sheep, which may be called virgin wool, and as to whether, if we require the labeling of any garment so as to show the proportion of reworked wool and of virgin wool, it would create a prejudice against the article in the minds of the consumer. Probably it would. If I went downtown to buy a suit of clothes and it was labeled "reworked wool," I would probably be prejudiced against it in favor of another suit made entirely of virgin wool, although the virgin wool might be taken from a portion of the sheep which would make it inferior in quality to the reworked wool, depending entirely upon the quality of the reworked wool, its fiber, and many other factors. So the time will never come, I fear, when there will be universal agreement on what kind of legislation is wise and on the relative merits of certain inferior qualities of virgin wool and certain superior qualities of reworked wool. So that the process of investigation and argument probably will go on forever until we have a test of some kind by the enactment of a law on the subject.

I rose merely to say that I intend to support the pending bill, in order that there may be enacted by the Congress a statute which will afford a test in determining how far we can and should go in notifying the public what it is buying and what constitutes the fiber that goes into a garment.

I remember years ago I introduced, and undertook to secure the passage of, a bill punishing all manner of misbranding. It was my theory that we cannot require the labeling of all articles in commerce such as a piano, or many other things—women's garments, for instance. It might even disfigure them to put a label on them stating what they are made of. But I think we have got to make a start; we have got to test this idea at some time; and I am going to vote for this bill because, if enacted, I believe that it will afford a test which will assist in determining the fallacy or wisdom of the passage of such legislation on its merits with respect to wool. I wanted to make this statement now because I have to leave the Chamber.

Mr. AUSTIN and Mr. CHAVEZ addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont, who first rose.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I know of the extensive period of study the Senator from Kentucky has given on this subject. I was aware of the fact that, as an honorable and distinguished Member of the House of Representatives, the bill to which he has referred and of which he was the author was reported favorably by the House Commerce Committee in 1916, and I have already called attention to the fact that Congress has been intermittently studying the subject ever since. I wish to know whether the Senator can tell us, out of his abundant knowledge and experience, how much, if any, the market for cotton would be impaired if one of the effects of the operation of this bill should be to reduce the production of goods made of mixtures of cotton and wool?

Mr. BARKLEY. That is a speculative question, of course, and I will have to give a speculative answer; I cannot be definite about it. The reaction against the sale of goods of mixed fibers comes about because of psychological reasons. Anybody would prefer, theoretically and on the surface, to have a suit of clothes or any other garment made of wool to one made of cotton. Wool is supposed to be superior. There is a certain wearing quality, a certain appearance, a certain resiliency about wool that is not so apparent in the case of cotton. Of course, if there is a large proportion of cotton as compared to wool used in providing the mixture, it would undoubtedly detract from the salability of the mixed garment; and, of course, the ability to buy, purchasing power, enters into the equation as well as the matter of pride which goes along with the purchase of garments, reflected in our appearance when we wear them. How far the operation of this prejudice against mixed garments would interfere with the market for cotton I do not know. Prejudice is, perhaps, the chief element, for, although I might know that a garment made altogether of cotton might last me longer and wear longer than one made of wool, the thought of having a suit of clothes made of cotton or even of a large proportion of cotton, is something against which we naturally and, I suppose, by inheritance and also because of pride and prejudice, to some extent, revolt. Due to those circumstances, the sale of cotton, to some extent, would probably be affected.

Mr. AUSTIN. May I ask the Senator if he can state whether it is correct that a hundred million pounds of cotton go into mixtures with wool annually?

Mr. BARKLEY. It has been a long time since I gathered the figures, but I would not in any way dispute the figures given by the Senator. A very large quantity of cotton goes into the manufacture of garments that are made of mixed wool and cotton.

I now yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired on the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will take 10 minutes on the amendment and yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, I want to make a brief observation. As I understand, the purpose of the bill is not to prohibit the manufacture of any fabric rebuilt or remade or whatever it may be desired to call any fabric made from nonvirgin wool. The only object is to make the manufacturers and sellers tell the truth about what is in a fabric. That is not at all contrary to what we have done in the past. If any housewife in Washington goes to a grocery store and asks for a bottle of grape jelly, the law now provides that on the label on the jar it shall be stated how much grape there is in the particular jelly and also whether it contains any other ingredients. Any housewife, when she goes to a grocery store and buys a bottle of ketchup, knows just exactly how much tomatoes the bottle of ketchup contains.

There is nothing out of the ordinary in the provisions of this bill. It does not even prohibit or inhibit the manufacture of shoddy cloth or made-up cloth; but we want those who make it to tell the truth about it.

Yesterday afternoon I heard a Senator say that the bill was only for the benefit of the wool grower. If we protect the grape producer or any other producer, there is no reason whatever why the wool growers in Arizona and other States should not be protected in the same way. We do it every day in the week. When a housewife goes to a grocery store she knows whether a bottle labeled "grape jelly" contains grapes or contains some other kind of material.

Mr. BARKLEY. There are, and have been for a long time, two theories about legislation of this character. One is the theory that we should prevent the actual misbranding of articles without requiring them to be branded, so that if they are branded, they shall be properly and truthfully branded. The other theory is that we should require branding, and stipulate that in the brand there shall be stated just what goes into the manufacture of the product. There has been a debate between those two theories, I know, for 25 years, ever since I came to Congress.

There is another thing that I think we have to keep in mind in order to be fair, and that is that there is not sufficient wool produced in this country to provide all the clothing the people need. In order to provide the necessary amount of clothing there must be some mixture, and some reworked wool must be used in the product. The testimony before the subcommittee in the House, of which I happened to be chairman years ago, showed that the annual production of wool was not sufficient, if all other materials were excluded, to provide the clothing for the American people.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Does the Senator think that in order to create a market for the other materials which are absolutely necessary, it would be necessary to deceive the people about what they are buying?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; I do not think so, and that is why I am going to vote for this bill. Much may be said in favor of positively notifying the purchaser what is in a garment he is contemplating purchasing; but I think we also should admit, in fairness, that when we go into a store to buy a garment, if the word "shoddy" is written on it, the chances are that prospective purchasers will hesitate to buy it. They may even be willing to buy an inferior garment, if they think it is all virgin wool, rather than to buy one that is made up partly of virgin wool and partly of reworked wool.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Would not a housewife be prejudiced if she saw on the label that what purported to be jelly contained gelatin instead of grape juice?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say to my friend from New Mexico that that is a different type of product. Anyone who goes to buy catsup wants to know and does know that it is made up very largely of tomatoes. Gelatin, of course, is not a vegetable product. It is an animal product. It is not taken from any vegetable that I know anything about, except in a very indirect way, after it has produced fat and hoof and other things on an animal of some sort.

Mr. CHAVEZ. But is not gelatin a substitute for a vegetable product?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Just as shoddy is a substitute for virgin wool.

Mr. BARKLEY. Undoubtedly it is a substitute, but I think most American housewives know the difference between gelatin and jelly, or jam, or preserves, or any similar product.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Should they not know whether they are getting real wool or something else?

Mr. BARKLEY. I think so. I think the preponderance of the argument is in favor of notifying the public what they are buying; but for a while there undoubtedly will be some unfavorable reactions toward certain commodities, especially wearing apparel, which may adversely affect the market for them until the public is even further educated than at present. Nevertheless, I am going to vote for the bill, because I think there is more to be said for it than can be said against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Affixing of stamp, tag, label, or other identification", on page 8, line 24, after the word "person", to strike out "introducing, or"; in line 25, after the word "introduction", to insert "or first introducing"; on page 9, line 2, after the word "same", to insert "containing identical information with respect to content of the wool product, and other information required under section 4"; after line 7, to strike out:

> Such substitutes shall contain the identical information required by this act to be on the original stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification, and may contain other information not violating the terms of this act or rules and regulations of the Commission.

And in line 15, after the word "product", to strike out "as required by this act, except in accordance with the provisions of this section" and insert "with intent to violate the provisions of this act", so as to make the section read:

> SEC. 5. Any person manufacturing for introduction, or first introducing into commerce a wool product shall affix thereto the stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification required by this act, and the same containing identical information with respect to content of the wool product, and other information required under section 4, or substitutes therefor shall be and remain affixed to such wool product, whether it remains in its original state or is contained in garments or other articles made in whole or in part therefrom, until sold to the consumer.
> Any person who shall cause or participate in the removal or mutilation of any stamp, tag, label, or other means of identification affixed to a wool product with intent to violate the provisions of this act, is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, through an error in preparing the copy for the printer, the words "containing identical information with respect to content of the wool product, and other information required under section 4" were placed in lines 2, 3, and 4. Those words should have been inserted after the word "therefore" in line 4.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the transposition will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Condemnation and Injunction Proceedings," on page 11, line 15, after the word "Any", to strike out "misbranded"; in line 19, after the word "if", to insert "the Commission has reasonable cause to believe", and in line 22, after the word "commerce", to insert "in violation of the provisions of this act, and if after notice from the Commission the provisions of this act with respect to said products are not shown to be complied with", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. (a) Any wool products shall be liable to be proceeded against in the district court of the United States for the district in which found, and to be seized for confiscation by process of libel for condemnation, if the Commission has reasonable cause to believe such wool products are being manufactured or held for shipment, or shipped, or held for sale or exchange after shipment, in commerce in violation of the provisions of this act, and if after notice from the Commission the provisions of this act with respect to said products are not shown to be complied with. Proceedings in such libel cases shall conform as nearly as may be to suits in rem in admiralty, and may be brought by the Commission.

If such wool products are condemned by the court, they shall be disposed of, in the discretion of the court, by destruction, by sale; by delivery to the owner or claimant thereof upon payment of legal costs and charges and upon execution of good and sufficient bond to the effect that such wool products will not be disposed of until properly stamped, tagged, labeled, or otherwise identified under the provisions of this act; or by such charitable disposition as the court may deem proper. If such wool products are disposed of by sale, the proceeds, less legal costs and charges, shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

(b) Whenever the Commission has reason to believe that—

(1) Any person is violating, or is about to violate, sections 3, 5, 8, or 9 of this act, and that

(2) It would be to the public interest to enjoin such violation until complaint is issued by the Commission under the Federal Trade Commission Act and such complaint dismissed by the Commission or set aside by the court on review, or until order to cease and desist made thereon by the Commission has become final within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Commission may bring suit in the district court of the United States or in the United States court of any Territory, for the district or Territory in which such person resides or transacts business, to enjoin such violation, and upon proper showing a temporary injunction or restraining order shall be granted without bond.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Guaranty," on page 14, after line 11, to strike out:

SEC. 9. No person shall be guilty of misbranding under this act if he establishes an acceptable guaranty, signed by the manufacturer, wholesaler, jobber, or other person residing in the United States, from whom a wool product was received, that said wool product, designated in the guaranty, is not misbranded under the provisions of this act, and also if he shows the exercise of due diligence and good faith with respect to said wool product and said guaranty.

Said guaranty, to be acceptable, shall contain the name and address of the manufacturer, wholesaler, jobber, or other person residing in the United States, from whom the said wool product was received; and the said manufacturer, wholesaler, jobber, or other person shall be amenable to prosecution and penalty which would attach in due course to any person violating the provisions of this act.

Any person who willfully furnishes a false guaranty under this section with reason to believe the wool products to which the false guaranty refers may be introduced, sold, transported, or distributed in commerce is guilty of an unfair method of competition and an unfair and deceptive act or practice in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 9. (a) No person shall be guilty under section 3 if he establishes a guaranty received in good faith, signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured and/or from whom it was received, that said wool product is not misbranded under the provisions of this act.

Said guaranty shall be either (1) a separate guaranty specifically designating the wool product guaranteed, in which case it may be on the invoice or other paper relating to said wool product; or (2) a continuing guaranty filed with the Commission applicable to all wool products handled by a guarantor in such form as the Commission by rules and regulations may prescribe.

(b) Any person who furnishes a false guaranty, except a person relying upon a guaranty to the same effect received in good faith, signed by and containing the name and address of the person residing in the United States by whom the wool product guaranteed was manufactured and/or from whom it was received, with reason to believe the wool product falsely guaranteed may be introduced, sold, transported, or distributed in commerce, is guilty of an unfair method of competition, and an unfair and deceptive act or practice, in commerce within the meaning of the Federal Trade Commission Act.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 15, line 14, after the word "manufactured", I move to insert "for introduction into commerce", and in line 15, after the word "received", I move to add "in commerce."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. The same words should be inserted on page 16. In line 5, page 16, after the word "manufactured", I move to insert "for introduction into commerce", and in line 6, after the word "received", I move to insert "in commerce."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Criminal Penalty", on page 16, line 13, after the word "who", to insert "willfully"; in line 14, after the numeral "9", to insert "(b)"; and after line 18, to strike out:

Whenever the Commission has reason to believe any person is liable to penalty under this section, it shall certify all pertinent facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to have appropriate proceedings brought for the enforcement of the provisions of this act.

And insert:

Whenever the Commission has reason to believe any person is guilty of a misdemeanor under this section, it shall certify all pertinent facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of this section against such person.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. Any person who willfully violates sections 3, 5, 8, or 9 (b) of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000, or be imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That nothing herein shall limit other provisions of this act.

Whenever the Commission has reason to believe any person is guilty of a misdemeanor under this section, it shall certify all pertinent facts to the Attorney General, whose duty it shall be to cause appropriate proceedings to be brought for the enforcement of the provisions of this section against such person.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That concludes the committee amendments.

The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read three times, the question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRAZIER (when Mr. NYE's name was called). My colleague [Mr. NYE] is absent. If he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS (when Mr. SLATTERY's name was called). My colleague the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SLATTERY] is unavoidably detained from the Senate on important business. If he were present he would vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. The Senator from Minnesota would vote "yea" if present and permitted to vote, and the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY. On this bill I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NYE], and vote "yea."

Mr. BRIDGES. I have a pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MINTON. I announce that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are unavoidably detained from the Senate. I am advised that if present and voting, they would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] are absent because of illness in their families.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE], the Senators from Virginia [Mr. BYRD and Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT] are absent on important public business.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] are detained in committee meetings.

Mr. WAGNER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired on this vote with the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]. I inquire if the Senator from West Virginia has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from West Virginia has not voted.

Mr. WAGNER. I am told that if he were present he would vote in the affirmative. Therefore I withdraw my vote.

Mr. McKELLAR (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. TOWNSEND] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the Senator from Delaware has not voted.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have a pair with the Senator from Delaware, which I transfer to the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], and allow my vote to stand. I am advised that, if present and voting, the Senator from New Jersey would vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma (after having voted in the negative). I change my vote from "nay" to "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—48

Adams	Connally	La Follette	Pepper

So the bill (S. 162) was passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 2805) to authorize the attendance of the United States Naval Academy Band at the New York World's Fair on the day designated as Maryland Day at such fair.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 188) to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CELLER, Mr. CHANDLER, Mr. HOBBS, Mr. MICHENER, and Mr. GWYNNE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4646) to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to each of the following bills of the House:

H. R. 4647. An act to increase the amount of Federal aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States; and

H. R. 5137. An act to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2170) to improve the efficiency of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a very brief statement for the information of the Senate, inasmuch as I will have to leave the Chamber in a few moments to attend a committee meeting.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] desires to have a bill on the calendar taken up, and will move in a moment that the Senate proceed to its consideration. I do not think consideration of that bill will take long. The senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] desires to have a bill providing for some additional judges considered, following the disposition of the bill in which the Senator from Texas is interested, and it is entirely agreeable that that shall be done, with the understanding that if the consideration of that bill has not been concluded by the time the Committee on Banking and Currency reports the so-called lending bill, it may be set aside temporarily for consideration of the lending bill, because, that being a major piece of legislation, it is desired that it shall be considered as soon as it is possible to get it out of the committee. Whether the committee can report this week I am not certain, but I think it will report either tomorrow or early next week.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may make a statement?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the able Senator from Kentucky is entirely correct. After the measure which the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] desires to have considered shall have been disposed of I shall try to secure recognition to have Senate bill 2185 made the unfinished business. That is a bill providing for the appointment of several additional judges.

Mr. President, I am in honor bound to say that I promised the Senator from Utah that I would not ask for the consideration of the bill today or tomorrow; that I would not ask for its consideration until Monday. Am I correct about that?

Mr. KING. The Senator is correct, as he usually is.

Mr. ASHURST. But on Monday I should like, with the Senate's kind indulgence, to commence consideration of that bill, with the understanding that it will be laid aside for the lending and spending bill at any time any Senator demands that it may be laid aside.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I should like to see whether action can be had on the judicial bill at a session tomorrow, which is Saturday, in order that we may take no chances on delaying the final adjournment of Congress. I was wondering whether it would not be possible to proceed tomorrow to consider this judicial bill. Could we not have a session tomorrow to dispose of that?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not have the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. I will yield in a moment. Let me say that there is no disposition on my part to crowd any Senator, even if I had the power to do so, but it seems to me that if the able Senator from Utah would be so gracious as to allow a session to be held tomorrow in order that we may consider and finish the bill having to do with the appointment of judges, it could be acted upon in, perhaps, less than 3 hours.

Mr. KING. I may say to the Senator that the disposition of the bill, in my opinion, will not take very much time. It is a bill which ought not to pass, but undoubtedly it will be passed. I think perhaps in an hour, or 2 hours at the most, it will be disposed of next Monday.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it occurred to me that perhaps I should make a statement in connection with some business which may come before the Senate; in fact, I have made the request of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] that as soon as his bill is made the unfinished business he yield to me in order that I may ask to have laid before the Senate certain amendments which were adopted by the House of Representatives on yesterday to Senate bill 1871. I intend to move to concur in those House amendments. In view of certain maneuvers which I have seen on the floor in the last few minutes, I am inclined to think that that motion might evoke at least some discussion. So I wish to say that I plan to make the motion just as soon as I possibly can do so.

Mr. ASHURST. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that it is my purpose to ask him to assume the management of Senate bill 2185, providing for the appointment of new judges, because he was chairman of the subcommittee which considered the measure, and for the further reason that I was not able to give a great deal of attention to the bill. So I anticipate the Senator will have a pretty full day Monday.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, can we not take up the bill for consideration this afternoon and discuss it but not have a vote on it? It is now 20 minutes to 3 o'clock, and we should not quit at this time of the day and go over until tomorrow. The Senator from Arizona can bring up the bill to which he referred, and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has a matter to bring up. It may be that some part of the discussion on the judicial bill may be disposed of this afternoon.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let me say in answer to the Senator's statement that my attitude will be controlled entirely by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. If he should object to the consideration of the bill this week, I am honor bound to respect his wishes. I hope the Senator from Utah will allow us to proceed this afternoon with the discussion of the bill. Time is getting short. The Senator from Utah is an able public servant. Frequently he and I do not agree, but I hope he will be gracious enough in these expiring hours of the Congress to permit discussion of the bill this afternoon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is no more gracious and considerate Senator on the floor than is the Senator from Utah——

Mr. ASHURST. I think that is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. We sometimes disagree on legislative matters, but the Senator from Utah is always gracious and kind and considerate, and I would almost be willing to nominate him candidate No. 1 as being the most generous Member of this body.

Mr. ASHURST. After all those expressions of esteem, will not the Senator from Utah allow us to proceed with a consideration of the bill this afternoon?

Mr. KING. Waiving the question of graciousness and coming to the question at issue, I will say that I have no objection to the consideration of the bill this afternoon, with the understanding, because I have been assured that it will not come up until next week, that a vote will not be taken upon it until tomorrow or Monday.

Mr. ASHURST. Very good.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield the floor.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona tell us the legislative status of the bill to create an administrator for the United States courts?

Mr. ASHURST. That bill, as the Senator knows, passed the Senate and was sent to the House of Representatives. The House struck out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and inserted different language. The chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary moved to concur in the House amendment, but, after a more careful investigation, he was convinced that such a motion should not have been agreed to, whereupon the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKE] moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, to disagree to the amendment of the House, request a conference with the House thereon, and that conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed. The motions were agreed to, and conferees have been appointed. I am glad to say that the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER] is one of the conferees on that bill.

Mr. DANAHER. I thank the Senator from Arizona, but I asked the question because I feel that that bill has a very definite bearing on the matter of whether we should create additional Federal judges.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be. I yield the floor.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST GRADUATES OF CERTAIN SCHOOLS

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 574, Senate bill 1610.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of the bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1610) to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools and those acquiring their legal education in law offices in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Is the motion debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is debatable.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I desire to debate the motion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. No; I will not yield now.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President——

Mr. McNARY. I rise to a point of order. I object to any further proceedings until there is order in the Senate and the various Senators occupy their seats.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The Chair will recognize Senators as they address the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has the floor.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will yield for a moment in a moment. The Senator from Massachusetts desires to introduce a measure. I yield to him for that purpose, if there is no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator yield before that is done?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think in the interest of orderly procedure the Senate ought to dispose of the motion of the Senator from Texas to take up the bill before any unanimous-consent request is made for the introduction of bills or for the insertion of matters into the RECORD, or other matters. I believe that action should be taken before the Senator yields.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for order.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas. Without objection——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, one moment. Reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator if he will yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield first to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I was advised that the motion was debatable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I gave notice that I desired to debate the motion. A little while ago in the consideration of the truth-in-fabric bill the statement was made——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not want to take the Senator from Oklahoma from the floor, but who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has the floor.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator from Texas relinquished the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas did not indicate any desire to retain the floor after the Chair stated the motion, and the Senator from Oklahoma is now recognized by the Chair.

TRUTH IN FABRIC—MOTION TO RECONSIDER

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I realize it is a rule of the Senate that a Senator must debate the question at issue, but the rule likewise provides that the Senator himself is the judge of the issue. In this particular I presume I may assume to be the judge of the issue I desire to discuss.

Mr. President, a little while ago the statement was made in connection with the debate on the truth-in-fabric bill that the passage of that bill would destroy a large demand for cotton. That argument has not been made heretofore. My State is a cotton-producing State. My State also produces wool. I do not know to what extent the enactment of this bill and its operation will destroy the demand for cotton; neither do I know how much it will destroy the demand for wool; and in order that I may for my satisfaction obtain some information about this matter I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the so-called truth-in-fabric bill was passed.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair first make an inquiry. Does the Senator from Oklahoma make the motion to reconsider, or serve notice that he will make the motion?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I enter the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion will be entered.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I cannot ask for disposition of the motion until I obtain some information, and as yet I have had no chance to obtain it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The RECORD will show that the Senator from Oklahoma is entering the motion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The parliamentary inquiry which I desire to address to the Chair is whether or not it will be possible, immediately after the motion is made, to move to lay the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not at this time, because another motion is pending before the Senate.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand. I mean, at the time the motion is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The entry of the motion is privileged. As soon as the motion now before the Senate is disposed of——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Should notice now be given of an intention to move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not necessary.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That motion may be made when the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma is actually made?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It may be made at any time, under the rules.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico wishes to make a parliamentary inquiry, which he will state.

Mr. HATCH. Was the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] agreed to; and is his bill now the pending business?

Mr. TYDINGS. It has not been agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill has not been taken up by the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Senate bill 1871 was passed by the House of Representatives yesterday with certain amendments. I am advised that a message from the House in that connection is now on the desk. Is it in order that that message be laid before the Senate for consideration at this time?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is if the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] will yield for that purpose. Does the Senator from Texas yield?

ADDITIONAL CLERK HIRE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask for a vote on my motion.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from New Mexico that if the Senate is ready to vote on the motion of the Senator from Texas, it should do so before taking up the other matter.

Mr. HATCH. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I simply did not understand why there was so much commotion and desire to obtain the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] has made a motion to take up a certain bill. That motion is pending. It is subject to debate. Does any Senator desire to debate that motion?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the present state of the parliamentary situation, is the consideration of a conference report in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

Mr. TYDINGS. I submit the conference report on House bill 6205 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6205) to provide for additional clerk hire in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 3.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. Section 1 of the Legislative Pay Act of 1929 (U. S. C., title 2, sec. 60 (a)), is amended by adding two new paragraphs under the caption 'Clerical Assistance to Senators,' as follows:

" 'Ninety-six additional clerks at $1,800 each, one for each Senator, in lieu of the assistant clerks now authorized by S. Res. 144, agreed to August 15, 1935, which resolution is hereby repealed as of January 1, 1940.

" 'Each Senator shall have one additional clerk at $1,500 per annum, and in addition thereto each Senator from any State which has a population of 3,000,000 or more inhabitants shall be entitled, in addition to the one clerical assistant provided for in this paragraph, to one additional clerk at the rate of $1,500 per annum.' "

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figure "5" insert "4"; and the Senate agree to the same.

M. E. TYDINGS,
ALVA B. ADAMS,
JOHN H. OVERTON,
HARRY S. TRUMAN,
FREDERICK HALE,
STYLES BRIDGES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

LINDSAY C. WARREN,

Managers on the part of the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the conference report——

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make an inquiry of the Senator from Maryland with respect to the conference report.

As I understand, the bill originated in the House. The bill increased by one the number of clerks of Members of the House.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate adopted an amendment to the bill which made permanent the employment of one clerk now temporarily allotted to each Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. And added another permanent clerk at the rate of $1,500 per year.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; commencing in January 1940.

Mr. BARKLEY. Commencing next January.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. In addition to that, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate adopted an amendment providing for a research assistant, or clerk, or whatever he may be called, for the minority leader, and one for the majority leader.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, that provision was stricken out on the demand of the House conferees. What was the reason?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator from Kentucky that the word "demand" is rather strong.

Mr. BARKLEY. I will say on the insistence of the House conferees. I wish merely to state that it seems a little unusual for the House to take it upon itself to say that those amendments, amounting to $10,000 a year——

Mr. TYDINGS. And relating purely to Senate business.

Mr. BARKLEY. Relating purely to Senate business, and in the interest of efficiency, should not be agreed to. I am satisfied that the Senator from Oregon will corroborate my statement that it would be in the interest of efficiency on both sides of this Chamber if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] and I each had someone not connected with our offices whose only duty it would be to look after legislation, gather material, and put on our desks every day a brief, memorandum, or syllabus with respect to all the bills on the calendar, which would enable us to understand the legislative situation more intimately and thereby enable both of us the better to perform our duties. The Senate probably would be surprised to know that neither of us has any clerical assistance in addition to that allowed every other Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. My work has multiplied four times; and there are many occasions when I need information, when I cannot go to the Library or to one of the Departments to obtain it, due solely to physical lack of time. Because of that fact, I am wondering why the House conferees insisted that the Senate could not retain a little amendment of that kind for the assistance of the Senator from Oregon and myself in undertaking to perform efficiently our duties in the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator allow me to answer his question?

Mr. BARKLEY. In a moment. In that connection, I will say that for years the majority leader of the House has had an assistant. He came to me and told me personally that ever since the days when Representative Tilson, of Connecticut, was majority leader of the House, clerical assistance had been provided for the majority leader, and I think also for the minority leader. I recall that when I was in the House the minority leader was Hon. James R. Mann, of Illinois; and he was the most efficient legislator I have ever seen in any body. Every morning he had on his desk a résumé of every bill likely to come up, and every bill on the calendar. All the other Members were amazed that he should be able to obtain that information. We learned how he obtained it. He had a corps of assistants who did nothing except furnish him with such information. The majority leader of the House now has an assistant whose only duty is to brief and look after proposed legislation, and to put on his desk every day an outline of the bills which are likely to come up, so that he will know what is in them. I must say that I cannot quite understand why the House was not willing to accord to the Senate the same privilege.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator's observations are quite reasonable and sound. I will say to the Senator that the conferees who represented the Senate in this matter took the point of view he has expressed, first of all, that according to custom the Senate has a right to provide for its own employees without interference from the House, and that the House has a right to provide for its own employees without interference from the Senate. That has been the universal rule.

However, in the closing days of Congress there was a human factor involved with which the committee had to deal as a practical matter.

The bill originated in the House. It had to do only with the personnel employed by the House; and the House took the position that the Senate ought not to add such amendments to a bill having to do purely with a House matter. However, the Senate had already acted on the bill; and, of course, that complaint had to be dealt with in the light of realities.

Those who opposed the measure in the House did not particularly oppose any of the Senate amendments, but did object to the use of a bill having to do purely with a House matter, and dealing with the personnel of the House alone, as a vehicle to provide assistance in the transaction of Senate business. So when the conferees met we had that obstacle to overcome. The House would not have objected to any of the Senate proposals if the bill had been purely a Senate bill; but it did object to the Senate adding something to a House bill which dealt entirely with House personnel.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment, if the Senator will permit me to finish my statement.

Mr. BURKE. Perhaps the Senator's statement will cover the matter I have in mind.

Mr. TYDINGS. There was some opposition in the House to the whole proposal, both to the increase in House personnel and to the increase in Senate personnel. The conference committee on the part of the Senate naturally wanted to save everything it could for the Senate. It was suggested to us that while the House had no right to object to any action taken by the Senate, if we should make the Senate amendments a separate matter the House would not object. We would then be in the position of providing only extra clerical assistance for the Senate, and the House would provide extra clerical assistance for the House. It was suggested that extraneous things such as assistants to the majority and minority leaders should be excluded from the bill, and that if we did not do so, as a practical matter we might run into opposition in the House which might defeat the entire proposal.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Just one more sentence.

In view of the fact that Senators have been pressing me for 3 months to obtain the passage of some measure which would give them some additional clerical assistance, I had to be governed by the practical equations which existed in the conference; and I told the House conferees that, while it was outrageous that they should in this indirect manner attempt to dictate to the Senate, I would accede to their request only because I could not accomplish anything without acceding to it; and that when the measure came over it would be the understanding that the House conferees would go along to provide the majority and minority leaders each with an assistant, to which they are entitled.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill provides one additional clerk for each Senator, in addition to making permanent the employment of one clerk whose status is now temporary.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Also, in the offices of Senators from States whose population is 3,000,000 or more, provision is made for still another clerk.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have not been able to find from an examination of the report the basis for determining whether or not a State has a population of 3,000,000 or more. Is the determination to be based upon the last census?

Mr. TYDINGS. The 1930 census. There will be a new census next year, and the 1940 census then will govern. The measure would become permanent law.

This matter did not originate with the present speaker. It originated with a group of Senators who represent large States, and who claim that with uniform office forces they cannot cope with the volume of mail coming into their offices. I remember that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] said that because of his activity in the Townsend old-age pension plan program he was the recipient of thousands upon thousands of letters which he could not even acknowledge with a postal card, due to his small office force. I recall that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] likewise gave figures as to the volume of his correspondence and asked that some relief be given to him. I recall, likewise, that the late Senator Copeland, of New York, for a number of years paid a part of his office force out of his own pocket in order to take care of his correspondence.

So when this matter was brought before the Committee on Appropriations the bill introduced, I think, by the Senator from Pennsylvania, was modified and the modified bill was in line with that described by the Senator from Kentucky. It became, therefore, my duty, as chairman of the subcommittee on the legislative appropriation bill, to do the best I could with it in conference. I rescued about 90 percent of it from complete slaughter, and, in view of all the circumstances, while I hated to let the majority and minority leaders down, we were on the battlefield, and, as a "better 'ole" was not to be found any place, that is the one we got into. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to make a statement in connection with the conference report and this proposed legislation. Every Member of the House and every Member of the Senate has had his allowance for clerk hire increased except the Vice President. He was left off by his own consent. [Laughter.]

PROHIBITION OF PERNICIOUS ACTIVITIES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the motion of the Senator from Texas should be adopted, making the school bill the unfinished business, would it then be in order at any time when any Senator could gain the floor to move to displace that measure and take up the House amendments to Senate bill 1871?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is a privileged matter. It can be taken up now or after the vote on the motion of the Senator from Texas, either one. Being a privileged matter, if no Senator objects, the Chair will lay before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to Senate bill 1871.

The amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 1871, an act to prevent pernicious political activities, were, on page 2, line 2, after "Representatives", to insert "Delegates or Commissioners from the Territories and insular possessions"; on page 2, line 10, after "election", to insert "or the nomination"; on page 2, line 13, after "Representatives", to insert "Delegates or Commissioners from the Territories and insular possessions"; on page 2, line 13, to strike out all after "Representatives" down to and including "choose" in line 16; on page 2, lines 19 and 20, after "possible", to insert "in whole or in part"; on page 3, line 9, after "solicit", to insert "or receive"; on page 3, line 10, after "soliciting", to insert "or receiving"; on page 3, line 16, after "person", to insert "for political purposes"; on page 4, lines 11 and 12, to strike out "shall be deemed guilty of a felony"; on page 4, line 12, after "conviction", to insert "thereof"; on pages 4 and 5, to strike out all of section 9 and insert:

SEC. 9. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the result thereof. No officer or employee in the executive branch of the Federal Government, or any agency or department thereof, shall take any active part in political management or in political campaigns. All such persons shall retain the right to vote as they may choose and to express their opinions on all political subjects. For the purposes of this section the term "officer" or "employee" shall not be construed to include (1) the President and Vice President of the United States; (2) persons whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the office of the President; (3) heads and assistant heads of executive departments; (4) officers who are appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who determine policies to be pursued by the United States in its relations with foreign powers or in the Nationwide administration of Federal laws.

(b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

On page 5, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 9A. (1) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation, or any part thereof, is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by any act of Congress, to have membership in any political party or organization which advocates the overthrow of our constitutional form of Government in the United States.

(2) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by any act of Congress for such position or office shall be used to pay the compensation of such person.

On page 5, line 5, to strike out "any other sections"; and on page 5, line 6, to strike out "or of this act."

Mr. HATCH. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, wait a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MINTON. There is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President——

Mr. MINTON. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, in view of the objection of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], perhaps I should explain briefly just what the House amendments are.

On April 13 this year the Senate passed, without a dissenting vote, on the regular call of the calendar, Senate bill 1871, introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], and myself. On the day that vote was taken many Senators were on the floor, and they knew and understood what that bill concerned.

The next day the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], who had been absent on the day the bill was passed, entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. Later I was informed of the motion and of the action of the Senate and made some remarks upon the floor of the Senate. Still later the Senator from Pennsylvania, upon my assurance that I was perfectly willing to go before the House committee and ask that policy-making officials be exempted from the prohibition of the bill, withdrew his motion to reconsider. Following that I met with the subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee. I myself drew an amendment to section 9 of the bill which did exactly what I told the Senator from Pennsylvania I would do. It specifically exempted all policy-making officials of the United States from the prohibition of section 9.

The subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee unanimously, Mr. President, adopted that proposed amendment. The chairman of that subcommittee was Mr. HEALEY, of Massachusetts, and one of the leading members was the Representative from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS]. With other members of the subcommittee, they so reported to the full Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives. That report of the subcommittee, Mr. President, for some reason unknown to me, for the full committee met in executive session, was rejected by the full committee, and in lieu of the recommendation of their subcommittee the full committee eliminated from section 9 every vital part of that section. There can be no dispute about that. They completely, as I have said before, and now repeat, emasculated section 9, and they reported the bill to the House in that form.

On last night the House of Representatives, by decisive votes—not one, but several—rejected the philosophy of the House Committee on the Judiciary and accepted, Mr. President, the philosophy of the Senate of the United States as contained in section 9, and wrote almost identically, so far as meaning is concerned, the provisions which the Senate had accepted without a dissenting vote. That being the only matter of importance on which the House acted, the House of Representatives having accepted the bill which the Senate passed, today I have moved, Mr. President, not in order to carry out my will but to carry out the will of the Senate of the United States, to concur in the House amendments, which restate and do that which the Senate said was the right and proper thing to do.

I am advised, Mr. President, this day that there is now a move on foot in the Senate of the United States to assemble Senators and to pledge them to vote to send this bill to conference. For what? To carry out the will of the Senate? No, Mr. President; not to carry out the will of the Senate, but to kill and destroy section 9 of the Senate bill. Is there a Senator on the floor of the United States Senate who wants to take issue with that statement? If so, let him take issue, for the well-known fact is that practically every member of the House Committee on the Judiciary—and I cast no reflection on the honorable Members of the House of Representatives, who were exercising their rights, as they had to exercise them and which I have never denied or sought to deny—practically every member of the House Committee on the Judiciary, including members of the subcommittee, voted against the particular amendment which their subcommittee themselves had recommended.

Am I to be asked to go into conference on a matter about which there is no difference with a committee who have already voted against it and some of whom voted against the final passage of the bill?

Mr. President, let us not be misled by anything that may be said on the floor of the Senate today; let nobody be deceived by the issue that is confronted if it is sought to send this bill back to conference, for there is nothing to confer about. A vote to send it back to conference means simply this: It is a vote to send the bill to the graveyard.

We might just as well draw the issue plainly and make it certain right here. Let there be no hiding behind good intentions. Let there be no pious declarations of being for the noble objectives of the bill, but we are going to send it to conference, where we know it will die.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Without any intention of being pious about the matter, my colleague knows that on the 13th of April, when the bill was passed, I was not on the floor of the Senate. I am not afraid to take the responsibility of voting as I please today, and not being bound by action the Senate took at a time when I was not here.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico if there is any substantial difference between the bill as it passed the Senate of the United States without opposition, without a dissenting voice in this body, and the bill with the amendments as it passed the House of Representatives on yesterday, overruling the House Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, Mr. President; I must answer in the affirmative the question of the most distinguished and able Senator from Missouri. In answering the question in the affirmative I want to point out just what the differences are.

After the bill had passed the Senate a great many unwarranted, unfair, unjust, and unreasonable criticisms were made. It was said that the Senate bill would prevent a Member of Congress from making a speech in his own behalf—a most ridiculous construction. It was said that no Jackson Day dinners could be held, and a great many things of that sort. So, as I told the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] I was willing to do, I met with the House committee and agreed on language which would remove any doubt as to what the bill meant, and would make it perfectly clear and certain.

For instance, in order that the legislative branch of government might not be inflicted with this ban, the new section which the House adopted applies only to the executive branch of government. In that respect, if the criticisms were anywhere just or well founded, the bill as it passed the House is not so strong as when it passed the Senate. To make it more clear and certain it was provided, inasmuch as the bill now relates specifically to the executive branch of the Government, that the President and the Vice President should not be affected by its terms, and that members of the President's Cabinet should not be affected; and there is a very sound reason for that. As I have often said, when policy-making officials of the Government such as the President and members of the Cabinet inaugurate and carry on great policies of government, they must necessarily frequently go before the country and the people and explain their poliices, and often it is true that they must defend them when they are assailed. It is but right and proper that they should have the full privilege of doing so, and the bill now so provides.

It is also provided that persons paid from the appropriation for the Executive Office, the staff of that office, are not affected by the bill, which should be the case.

Finally, in order to make certain that I had kept faith with the Senator from Pennsylvania and carried out the word that I pledged to him about policy-making officials, I inserted another provision which is, in substance, that the prohibition shall not extend to any official of the United States appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and—mark the conjunction "and"—who determines policies to be pursued by the Government in the Nation-wide administration of laws or in the relations of this country with foreign countries; a provision designed to make it certain that no policy-making official is included within the prohibitions of the bill.

What more I could do I do not know, Mr. President. We have met the will of the Senate of the United States, as the legislation was enacted here. If anything, the House has made it better legislation, in that specific persons are excepted. The Senate of the United States today may concur in the action of the House if it wants legislation of that kind, if it was sincere and honest and meant what it said when it passed the bill. The action of the House may be concurred in, and the bill may go to the Executive for his approval or veto. Or, if the Senate shall say, "We did not mean what we said," then let the bill go to conference, and permit it to die. But, Mr. President, I much prefer that if Senators do not believe in this philosophy they stand on the floor of the Senate of the United States and say forthrightly, "I do not believe in it; it is wrong, it is bad, it is vicious legislation; it ought to be killed, and I am voting to kill it." If it is to die, let it die an honorable death.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Let me ask the Senator from New Mexico if it is not an absolute fact that so far as the entire spirit and structure of the two bills are concerned the bill as it passed the Senate and the bill as it passed the House last night are in entire conformity?

Mr. HATCH. There is no difference at all.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. As opposed to the effort which has been made in both bodies—not very strongly in this body, but very strongly by a committee in the body at the other end of the Capitol—to emasculate the whole measure. In other words, the bill as it passed the Senate and the bill as it passed the House are bills with teeth in them to prevent the use of Federal patronage for political purposes in this country.

Now let me ask the Senator from New Mexico a further question, if I may. Does not the Senator believe that to send the bill to conference over a quibble concerning something which does not exist, without any real difference between the will of the two Houses as expressed in the legislation, is to kill the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Oh, certainly. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. MINTON obtained the floor.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. My purpose in rising a little while ago to ask a question of my colleague was not with the idea of disagreeing with his philosophy. It was with the idea of keeping the record straight, and stating that I, for one, was not on the floor of the Senate at the time the bill was acted on, and that I, for one, am not afraid to state my position on the floor of the Senate. If I had been here at that particular time, I would have voted against the bill. There is no question whatever about that position of mine. The other position is that if the Senate has acted on the bill, this Senator is willing to abide by whatever the Senate did.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], with a great deal of heat and very little light, has taken up the bill known as Senate bill 1871 and the amendments of the House to it. He has made a number of gratuitous accusations that have no foundation at all in fact.

I suppose I have no better friend in the United States Senate than the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. I would not question his sincerity. I would not question his integrity. I would not accuse the Senator of wanting to do anything against me in any matter that came before the United States Senate. I would not accuse the Senator from New Mexico of wanting to take advantage of his colleagues. I would not be guilty of accusing the Senator from New Mexico of the things he accused his colleagues of a while ago.

Mr. President, I have just looked over for the first time this bill as it came from the House. I venture to say there are not six Senators on the floor of the United States Senate who have seen the bill as amended in the House. It came before the Senate of the United States in due course upon the calendar—everybody knows what that means—and it received not a moment's consideration on the floor of the United States Senate. It went through, as we all know bills sometimes do go through, unnoticed and unheeded. Nobody said a word about it. The bill was not debated. It was not considered at all by the Senate.

It went over to the House; and they had a very heated session on the bill, according to the newspapers. I do not know about that personally; I was not there; but from what I read in the newspapers they put teeth in the bill in the House. I understood that the Senator from New Mexico had all of its teeth in over here, and that he was well satisfied with the bill; but I understand from the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Missouri that the teeth were put in over in the House.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, so far as the teeth in the bill are concerned, they were in the bill when it passed the Senate, and they were taken out by the House committee but were put back by a majority of 100 in the House of Representatives last night. What we are trying to do is to pass a bill with teeth in it, as teeth were in the bill when it passed the Senate and when it passed the House, not running any further risk of a committee taking them out.

Mr. MINTON. I had not had a chance to examine the teeth of the bill when the Senator from Missouri made his statement, but he did say that the House put teeth in the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Put them back. [Laughter.]

Mr. MINTON. Whether it put them back or put them in originally makes no difference, so far as I am concerned, because I had not had a chance to tell whether they put them in originally or put them back.

I have just had a chance to look at the bill and the amendments which are attached to it. I myself do not know whether or not this is the same bill the Senate sent over to the House. It was a little difficult here, while trying to listen to the heated discussion of the Senator from New Mexico, to read the bill and understand what happened to it in the House. As I have said, the news came to me only through the newspapers, but the newspapers have reported to us that the House made important changes in the bill—that they put additional provisions into it. None of us had ever had a chance to check on that statement, none of us had even had a chance to look at either bill; and the Senator from New Mexico rises here in his place and takes a bill which never received a moment's consideration on the floor of the Senate, but was sent to the House of Representatives, where they held a heated session yesterday, and were reported to have put teeth into the bill, and he asks us to take it without even looking at it.

I was just objecting to the attempt of the Senator from New Mexico to compel me to take this bill without, at least, looking at its teeth. I will say to the Senator from New Mexico that I have looked at the bill briefly, and very sketchily, and, so far as I can make out, as in a good many other cases, the reports in the newspapers are very much exaggerted. I do not find much change in the bill as it was amended by the House from the form in which it passed the Senate. It comes back to the Senate with its teeth back in it. I think if it were an original proposition some of us would like to be heard again on the bill, but this baby has grown up now, it has lots of teeth in it, it is a full-grown, lusty chap, and its father has defended it valiantly.

As I have said, from a hasty examination of the bill, I wish to say to the Senator from New Mexico that I do not see much difference between the bill which comes back from the House and the one that went to the House. All the denunciation of the Senator from New Mexico of me because I wanted to take a look at the bill, and of some of my friends who wanted time to consider it, is beside the point. I wanted the bill to go to conference in order that we might consider whether or not the bill had been materially changed in the House, as the newspapers had reported it had been.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator consider that the Senate would have a greater opportunity to consider this matter as a result of a conference report being brought in, which, when it came in, would have to be voted up or down without amendment or without change, than on the motion of the Senator from New Mexico to concur in the House amendments, which motion is open to debate, and is itself subject to amendment? In other words, if we railroad this bill to conference, any conference report that comes in must be voted up or down without change; there will be no opportunity for the Senate to consider amendments which have been put in the conference report or put into the bill in the House. On the motion of the Senator from New Mexico to concur in the House amendments, the Senate has the fullest opportunity it will ever have at any parliamentary stage of the proceedings to consider the entire subject, to consider the House amendments, and either to vote to concur, to reject, or to concur with amendments.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I think that if the bill went to conference, the conference committee would probably have five Senators on it, and that would mean more Senators considering it than have ever previously considered it. So I believe the Senate would have a little time and a little chance, certainly a little more than it has heretofore had, to consider it. At least it would have a chance to look at it and see whether or not it was the Senate bill or the House bill, or whether it was the Senate bill very materially changed by the House. At least we would have that chance. But, of course, the only purpose I had in my desire that it go to conference was that there might be a chance for the first time for at least five Members of the United States Senate to determine whether or not it was the kind of a bill we sent over to the House a short time ago.

I say to the Senator from Missouri, therefore, that it would have gotten a little more consideration from Senators than it had received up to that time, because, as I have stated, at least five of them would have had an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. President, after examining the bill and the amendments I see no material change from the measure we sent to the House. As I have stated, if this matter were starting anew, some of us might like to have a good deal to say about it, but in the present condition of the record I think the bill is in as good shape as it comes back to us as when it went to the House—perhaps in better shape. That I observed from a hasty examination of the bill, under the denunication of the Senator from New Mexico, because I wanted to take a look at it.

Mr. President, there is only one change which seems to be material, and far be it from me to raise that question. I think it was debated in the House yesterday. It is a constitutional question, and I shall not detain the Senate a second in attempting to discuss it, but I merely call attention to the fact that they have added to the word "election" the words "or nomination," which simply gives the Congress of the United States something to say about the method under which candidates shall be nominated, and the Supreme Court of the United States has stated that we have not anything to do with nominations. So far as I am concerned, therefore, the Senator from New Mexico may be at ease. I have no dagger up my sleeve for his beloved bill. I have no intention to knife my friend in the back. I want him to have his bill; his heart is set upon it, and I am for him. I do not think the House did anything to him and I do not think it did anything to the Senate. So far as I am concerned, the Senator may have his bill, and God bless him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Mexico that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST GRADUATES OF CERTAIN SCHOOLS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1610, to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1610) to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools, and those acquiring their legal education in law offices, in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in appointing, or fixing requirements with respect to the appointment of, persons to any position in the Government service, if the qualifications required of applicants for such position include legal training or legal experience, no officer or employee of any executive department, independent establishment, or agency (including Government-owned Government-controlled corporations) of the United States shall discriminate against any applicant, or deny to any applicant the privilege of taking any competitive examination held for the purpose of determining the qualifications of applicants for such position, because such applicant (1) has not been graduated from a particular law school; (2) has not been graduated from a law school which is of a particular class or which has been approved or accredited by any association, organization, or group; or (3) has not had college training in addition to law-school training, or who acquired his legal education in a law office.

SEC. 2. No sums appropriated or allocated for the payment of salaries and expense accounts of officers and employees of the executive departments, independent establishments, and agencies of the United States shall be available to pay the salary or expense account of any such officer or employee who violates the first section of this act.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, my views on this measure were set forth fully in the Senate recently, and as far as I am concerned I am ready for a vote. I think the measure is clearly understood. It is my information that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] desires to enlarge upon his views of a few days ago.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, in the first place, let me state again that I am in sympathy with what I understand to be the occasion for the introduction of this bill. If any department in the United States Government has limited the selection of its legal advisers to the graduates of one, two, or three law schools, the head of that department is open to just condemnation for the unfair use of the discretion placed in him. However, such an abuse of discretion does not justify the Congress in passing a bill such as S. 1610.

The bill is entitled

A bill to prevent discrimination * * *.

It is, however, really a bill to require discrimination. The bill in effect prevents any department from setting up qualifications for its personnel on the basis of education and training. This is bad in principle. The bill provides that in appointing persons to positions which call for legal training or legal experience, the applicant may not be required to have been graduated from a particular law school. This provision is all right and would meet the evil which is sought to be corrected. But the bill goes further and provides that the applicant may not be required to have been graduated from a law school of a certain kind. This is not all right. There are good law schools and bad law schools, law schools which give a student proper training, and law schools which do not properly train a student.

The wording in the bill is undoubtedly aimed at the list of law schools approved by the American Bar Association. There are now 102 law schools so approved by it, a decided majority of the law schools in the United States. These law schools are not only examined by competent examiners before they are approved, they are from time to time examined afterward to see that they keep up the standards.

These standards are not arbitrary. They are quite definite. They require that a regular student must have a minimum of general education, defined as 2 years of college work, though a limited number of special students may also be admitted. The school must have at least one full-time teacher for each 100 students or fraction thereof, and at least three such teachers. There are minimum requirements for the library. The course for the degree must be not less than 3 years for full-time students and not less than 4 years for part-time students; that is, those students who have outside employment and so can attend classes only in the late afternoon or evening. Provision is made for students, who because of lack of funds, must work their way through law schools.

These standards are set both in the interest of the students themselves, so that they may be adequately prepared for the exacting profession they have chosen, and also in the interest of the general public so that those who go to a lawyer admitted to the bar may do so in confidence that he has had adequate preparation. It is as wrong to let a man hold himself out as a lawyer who has not had adequate training, as it is for a man to hold himself out as a doctor who has not had adequate training. In the one case, he may wreck a man's life by giving wrong advice which may result in the loss of his liberty or fortune. In the other, he may wreck a man's life by giving wrong advice as to how to treat some physical ailment. The approval of certain schools is, therefore, a help to prospective students and to the public. It gives public notice that these schools have the necessary educational facilities and apply the necessary standards in amount and quality of work to give their students adequate legal training.

Objection has been made to the requirement that 2 years of general college education shall be a prerequisite, but it has been found that at least this amount of general education is necessary to enable a student to profit by a strictly technical legal education. There are now 41 States, including Maryland, which has just acted, which either now or in the near future require for admission to the bar these 2 years of college education in addition to the legal education. These 41 States include the most populous States, where the need for trained lawyers has been most felt and appreciated. Here in the District of Columbia, both the District Bar Association and the Federal Bar Association have gone on record in favor of this step, and in the District both the court of appeals and the district court have gone on record as in favor of this step at a future fixed time.

These standards of the American Bar Association were adopted in 1921 and were later approved by a convention of State and local bar associations. They have had the fullest discussion of their merits and have been given wide publicity. The movement for higher standards in legal education has been going forward fast during the last 10 years and has behind it the support of the leaders of the bench and bar. These standards have been set as a result of long experience, because it has been found that very few men can do the work of a lawyer nowadays without this long-directed application to legal study. Of course, in former days law students did not have such opportunity for study, nor were the requirements of the profession so exacting. Of course, too, no rules of the sort are applicable to a genius, who may surmount every obstacle and without special training surpass the best-prepared student.

It has also been found that examinations alone do not take the place of prolonged study. A man may cram for an examination and make a good showing, and not long afterward sink back to the state of legal unpreparedness he was in before his cramming. At any rate, 41 States have concluded that examinations are not alone sufficient and that previous preparation of a required amount and kind is necessary.

The pending bill, however, prohibits the requirement of any such adequate preparation as has been fixed either by the American Bar Association, or by the Association of American Law Schools, or by these 41 States. Why should departments of the Federal Government, who need the best-trained lawyers in the defense of the rights of the Nation and its citizens, have lower standards than the great majority of the States of the Union? We might justify a bill which fixed minimum requirements. It is hard to justify a bill which provides maximum requirements and penalizes public officials who require more than this low maximum.

It must be remembered that this bill does not apply to the District of Columbia alone. It applies to all executive departments of the Federal Government, and to all its independent establishments, and even to Government-owned and Government-controlled corporations, wherever they may be. Yet if a State has a high standard for admission to the bar, and a Government department there fixes the same standard for admission to its legal department, under the provisions of the bill the officer or any employee of that department helping it to establish that standard would forfeit his salary and expense account.

Even if some position required the highest degree of legal training, the Department cannot require that he has graduated from a law school of any particular class, or a law school approved by the supreme court of the State in which the Department is situated. It cannot even require that he shall have had any college training or shall have been to a law school at all. This is certainly a bill fixing too low requirements for the Federal service. What we need is high requirements, not low requirements.

The bad effects of the bill go still further. Let us suppose that, of two applicants who passed equally good examinations, one has been to college and the other has not, one has been to a law school and the other has not; if a Federal official should select the man who had had a college education and a law-school training in addition to the training his rival had, the Federal official would probably be accused of breaking the law and discriminating against the less well prepared applicant. But we all know that on the average and in the long run the student with the longer and better preparation would probably render better service.

Think, too, how difficult it would be to enforce such a law. The Department head might say that in making the appointment he had done it for other reasons than those enumerated in the bill, and there might well be other reasons which affected his selection. Yet this could well be the basis of an accusation that he had broken the law. Sometimes an official who had intentionally evaded the law would go unpunished. Sometimes an official who had not been conscious of evading the law would be punished by the loss of his salary and expense account. The only way in which a Federal official selecting legal help could avoid the chance of being accused of violating the law would be for him to select as his legal assistants the lowest grade of law students—those who had never been to college or attended a law school. Then, and then only, would he be safe.

One of the reasons why it is difficult for Federal laws to be enforced is that the salaries paid by the Government are low in comparison with the payment for similar services by those who have broken the law. It is difficult enough at present for the Federal Government to obtain the best law students. Why should we pass a bill which would make it still more difficult? The Federal Government is now at a disadvantage in its fight against lawbreakers. Why should we make it still harder for the Federal Government? It is wrong to think of the Government as an instrumentality contending against citizens to deprive them of their rights. The Government is the organized citizenry fighting against an individual lawbreaking citizen to maintain the rights of all citizens. Government officials need the best legal help they can obtain. We should not have a lower standard than that set for admission to the bar in the great majority of the States of the Union. The bill would set a lower standard.

Democracy needs to be efficient. The bill would promote inefficiency. Inefficiency in the administration of the law means that the masses of the citizens are not protected in their legal rights. In our American democracy we promise them that they will be so protected. The bill would weaken and break down that protection.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I feel that I need but to read the regulation of one Department on this subject to convince the Senate that the bill ought to pass. This is the regulation:

> In order to be eligible for appointment as an attorney the applicant must be a graduate of a school accredited by the Association of American Law Schools or approved by the American Bar Association, and he must be a member of the bar.

Of course, there is no quarrel with the last qualification; but with reference to the other requirement, let me say that applicants may have qualified themselves through home study or other forms of study outside the schools mentioned, not having the funds to attend a college. They may have passed a bar examination and may have shown, through actual practice, that they are competent and successful lawyers; and yet under this rule they would be barred from an appointment by this Department.

The bill does not establish a lower standard than that of a majority of the States. A majority of the States require for admission to a bar examination prelegal college education or training or the equivalent thereof. Who will say that study at home by certain types of earnest, capable, ambitious, and determined men and women would not be the equivalent, or in some instances more than the equivalent, of college education or college training? This bill carries out the principles I have announced.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ANDREWS. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator, if the present regulations had been in effect all during the history of the United States, whether or not Patrick Henry, Abraham Lincoln, or John Marshall could have qualified to hold a position under the United States?

Mr. SHEPPARD. They could never have qualified under regulations such as I have quoted, and they were among the best lawyers in the history of the country.

Mr. President, I ask for a vote.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 9, after the word "office", it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a semicolon and the following: "or (4) is a member of any particular racial or religious group or organization."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator who is sponsoring the bill, if his bill is passed with the amendments which have been submitted, just what the minimum requirements would be in the District of Columbia. Can he tell us in a word?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Requirements for admission to the bar of the District of Columbia do not call as yet for any prelegal college training.

Mr. BRIDGES. Must he be a member of the bar of the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is not a requirement for legal places in the Government service.

Mr. BRIDGES. Assume, for the moment, that there is an opening in the Department of Agriculture for an attorney, and that there is a nonpolitical appointment of an applicant from Indiana. Provided the applicant is a member of the bar of Indiana, is that all that would be necessary?

Mr. SHEPPARD. If he has the necessary ability as a lawyer, all that would be necessary, I take it, would be the fact that he had passed a bar examination.

Mr. BRIDGES. In his home State?

Mr. SHEPPARD. In any State.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not true that in Indiana, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, or any other State under the terms of the bill, a lawyer could be appointed who had less training than is required for a member of the bar in the State?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Please restate the question.

Mr. GREEN. The bill so states.

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. GREEN. The bill sets up certain maximum requirements, and those maximum requirements are not as high as the minimum requirements for admission to the bar in 41 States of the Union.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I differ with the Senator. In only 14 States is a prelegal college training required, without qualification. Most of the other States require formal prelegal college training or its equivalent.

Mr. GREEN. The requirements of the bill are lower than those of the States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill provides that the candidate shall not be discriminated against because he has not had a particular form of training.

Mr. GREEN. Instead of providing minimum requirements, the bill provides maximum requirements.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It provides that the appointing power shall be satisfied as to the ability of the applicant to perform the work, and that the applicant shall not be discriminated against because he is not a graduate of a particular law school or particular group of law schools or has not had a formal prelegal education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 1610) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in accordance with a statement I made a couple of hours ago, I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2185, to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges. If my motion shall prevail I do not expect to discuss the bill this afternoon. I do not expect action on the bill today or tomorrow, but shall ask the Senate to consider the bill next Monday. So far as I have the right to do so, I agree that the bill may be laid aside at any time to consider the lending-spending bill, or the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] to reconsider the vote by which the truth-in-fabric bill was passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KING. With the understanding implied in the statement of the Senator, I have no objection. Is it understood that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of the bill, and that it may be laid aside until next Monday?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I am compelled to leave the Chamber by reason of a committee meeting.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN]. I do not expect to discuss the bill this afternoon, or to refer to it. I merely wish to have it made the unfinished business.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator consent to my putting in the RECORD, for the benefit of study over the week end, certain tables and statistics which I have prepared, which will be helpful in considering the bill when it comes up?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think that is a valuable consideration; and, if my motion is agreed to, I hope the Senator from Vermont will do as he suggests.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. KING. I shall be very happy if the Senator from Vermont will also have placed in the RECORD—and if he does not, I shall be happy to offer it for the RECORD—a very illuminating article written by Judge Otis, of Kansas City.

Mr. AUSTIN. I shall be glad to place it in the RECORD, because it fits in with the logic of my tables.

Mr. KING. Judge Otis has made a study of the question of judicial needs; and I shall be very happy to have his table put in the RECORD, because it will prove very helpful to Senators who desire the facts with regard to the necessity or lack of necessity of any increase in the number of judges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arizona to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2185.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges, which had been reported from the Commitee on the Judiciary with amendments.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, before we proceed to another matter, emulating the good example, I think it is, of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], I ask to have printed at this point in my remarks a letter from the Attorney General of the United States setting forth the need for the additional judges who are provided for in this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT AND CIRCUIT JUDGES

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1939.

HON. HENRY F. ASHURST,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: This refers to the bill (S. 2185) to provide for the appointment of additional district and circuit judges.

I trust that the bill will become law at this session of the Congress, as the additional judicial positions proposed by the bill as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, are greatly needed in order to assist in bringing the dockets of the Federal courts to a current condition.

Detailed data in support of each of the provisions contained in the bill are found in the printed hearings relating to this legislation. I desire, however, to call attention to some of the more salient and outstanding considerations indicating the necessity for each of the proposed additional judicial positions.

SIXTH CIRCUIT

The bill proposes to authorize the appointment of an additional circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit.

This course was recommended by the judicial conference in September 1938. Its report contains the following observation on this subject:

"The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit has a large accumulation of cases and it is apparent that in order to secure the prompt disposition of its work an additional judge will be needed even after the existing vacancy is filled."

EIGHTH CIRCUIT

The bill proposes to authorize the appointment of one additional circuit judge for the eighth circuit. This is a very modest proposal, as the judicial conference in September 1938 urged the creation of two additional judicial positions for the eighth circuit. The report of the conference contains the following statement regarding this matter:

"The Circuit Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit has been able to keep abreast of its work only through the aid of retired judges. It now appears that dependence cannot be placed upon their continued ability to render this service and provision should be made for two additional circuit judges there."

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

The bill proposes to authorize the appointment of an additional district judge for the southern district of California. This action was recommended by the judicial conference in September 1938. It is observed in the report of the conference that further judicial assistance is needed in that district in view of the heavy dockets. Studies made in this Department indicate that the dockets in this district are considerably behind, and that new business is coming in at such a rate that no inroad is made into the arrears.

DISTRICT OF NEW JERSEY

The judicial conference of 1938 recommended that provisions be made for an additional district judge for the district of New Jersey. The volume of new business has been considerably increasing in this district, as is strikingly indicated by the fact that while during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, the number of civil actions filed was 768 and the number of criminal proceedings instituted was 336, during the following year the numbers rose to 900 and 439, respectively.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF OKLAHOMA

The Judicial Conference of 1938 recommended that provision be made for the appointment of an additional district judge for the western district of Oklahoma. This district has a very heavy load of cases as compared with the average case load per judge throughout the country and the new business has been growing from year to year.

EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

The Judicial Conference of 1938 recommended the creation of an additional judicial position in the eastern district of Pennsylvania. This district, which is composed of 10 counties and includes the city of Philadelphia, has a very large volume of business. The trial dockets are considerably in arrears, and the new business has been increasing from year to year. During the year ending June 30, 1938, the number of new cases filed was 33⅓ percent larger than the number for the preceding year.

SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

The judicial conference of 1938 recommended the creation of an additional judicial position in the southern district of New York. The following observations on this point are contained in its report:

"In the southern district of New York there has been reliance upon the assistance furnished through the assignment of judges from other circuits, but inquiry shows that it is impracticable to obtain this relief to the extent needed."

There are 11 judges in this district. The appointment of a twelfth judge was authorized by section 4, paragraph (d), of the act of May 31, 1938, which also contained a provision that the first vacancy occurring in any of the other 11 positions should not be filled. Recently one of the district judges—Judge Patterson—was elevated to the circuit court of appeals, and legislation is needed to permit this vacancy to be filled.

There is a marked increase in the number of new cases instituted and the dockets are considerably in arrears, so that some relief is indispensable.

FLORIDA

The bill proposes to authorize the appointment of an additional judge who shall be a district judge for the northern and southern districts of Florida. The volume of business in the southern district has been on the increase, and additional help is needed to maintain it in a current condition.

Sincerely,

FRANK MURPHY,
Attorney General.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, it will be in regular order in the RECORD if I may insert at this point, before some other business shall intervene, some matters in connection with Senate bill 2185. In the first place, let me say that there is pending also House bill 5906, which apparently is related in a certain measure to the Senate bill. I should like first to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, House bill 5906 was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the provision of subsection (d) of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the appointment of additional judges for certain United States district courts, circuit courts of appeals, and certain courts of the United States for the District of Columbia," approved May 31, 1938 (52 Stat. 585; U. S. C., title 28, sec. 4j–1), which reads: "Provided, That the first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the southern district of New York by the retirement, disqualification, resignation, or death of judges in office on the date of enactment of this act shall not be filled," be, and it is hereby, repealed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Second, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article by Judge Merrill E. Otis entitled "The Business of United States District Courts," principally to show what a striking decline in the judicial business throughout the United States has occurred since 1933 and now exists.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the University of Kansas City Law Review for June 1939]

THE BUSINESS OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURTS

(By Merrill E. Otis)[1]

The purpose of this study is to discover whether the business of the United States district courts is affected by extratribunal forces, legal or economic; whether it bears any relation to population, to congestion of population, to aggregation of wealth; whether it is possible to devise a measuring stick by which the judicial manpower required in any given district may be determined. The study is based on statistics appearing in the Attorney General's reports during a 10-year period (1929–38).[2] The facts set out in the reports were furnished the Attorneys General by the clerks of the several district courts.

The business of the district courts is criminal and civil. The civil business may be divided into two great classes: (1) That to which the United States is a party, either plaintiff or defendant; and (2) that between private litigants. There is indeed a third class of business (cases in bankruptcy), but cases in that class come to the judges only on petitions to review orders of referees in bankruptcy. The orders reviewed are relatively few, require little time, are not separately enumerated in the reports of the Attorney General, and, except for a single reference, are disregarded in this study.

We begin the study by setting out in tables the numbers of cases filed in all of the district courts of the United States in each class of cases in each of the 10 years considered. We have—

EFFECT OF TWENTY-FIRST AMENDMENT

From this chart appear three striking facts: 1. The criminal business of the courts in the second half of the 10-year period was conspicuously less than the criminal business in the first half of that period. The average number of cases per year in the first half of the period was 86,447, in the second half, 35,023. The drop was precipitous. 2. The civil business to which the United States was a party in the second half of the period was much less than in the first half. The average number of cases per year in the first half of the period was 26,892, in the second half, 11,190. Again the drop was precipitous. 3. The line on the chart representing civil business involving only private litigants runs almost level through the 10-year period. The average during the first half of the period was 24,266, during the second half, 24,155. The line rises or falls only slightly from year to year.

The explanation of the decided drop after 1933 in the criminal and United States civil business is simple. It was the direct result of the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution and the repeal of the National Prohibition Act. Of the 82,675 criminal cases commenced in 1933, 57,553 were brought under that act. Of the 25,797 civil cases to which the United States was a party commenced in 1933, 11,478 were brought under that act.

LESSENING BUSINESS IN UNITED STATES COURTS

While the total number of cases of all kinds commenced in the United States courts during the first half of the period was 708,041, and during the second half 351,830, a decrease of 50 percent, considering numbers only, a conclusion that the business of the Federal trial courts had decreased by one-half since 1933 would be quite erroneous. The time required of the judge for the disposition of the average case between private litigants is at least 10 times as great as the time required for the disposition of the average criminal case or civil case to which the United States is a party.[3] Reducing criminal cases and civil cases to which the United States is a party, in both the first and second halves of the 10-year period, to terms of cases between private litigants, we have commenced in the first half of the period 178,002 cases, commenced in the second half 143,876 cases. The business of the courts in the second half roughly may be said to be 81 percent of the business in the first half.

The real work of the average district judge is caused by private litigation. While it appears from chart I that changes in statute law may affect public litigation greatly, the line representing private litigation does not rise or fall greatly from any cause. It does rise somewhat, gradually, from 1929 to 1932, continues on almost an exact level to 1934, gradually falling then, save for a rise in 1 year, to the end of the 10-year period. Undoubtedly the gradual rise referred to is attributable to the economic depression. It is reasonable to assume that men's growing financial needs on the one hand and their growing inability to pay money on the other affect their resort to litigation. But the effect upon litigation, while noticeable, is slight.

POPULATION AND LITIGATION

The relation between the population of a district and the private litigation likely to be commenced in that district is demonstrable. For the purpose of that demonstration the 84 districts are arranged here in 9 groups. In group 1 are the 10 districts having, by the census of 1930, the smallest population. In group 2 the 10 districts next larger in population. There are 4 districts only in group 9. The population and the average number of cases between private litigants filed in each group of districts in each year of the 10-year period is set out. We have—

TABLE IV

Group 1—3,469,541	534.7
Group 2—6,153,893	857.3
Group 3—8,531,214	863.3
Group 4—10,265,005	1,713.8
Group 5—11,849,316	2,116
Group 6—13,373,887	1,740.1
Group 7—18,362,210	2,601.9
Group 8—32,108,178	4,466.1
Group 9—12,657,155	4,316.7

It will be observed that, with one exception, each of these nine groups has a greater or lesser number of cases than another group, as its population is greater or lesser. The exception is group 5, which has more than its proportionate share of cases. But that variance is due to a single district, the southern district of Florida, which had an average of 710.1 cases per year in the 10-year period, more than seven times the number of cases in any other district of like population. Here again the explanation is simple. The period was one of unprecedented business speculation in that district. Unprecedented litigation resulted. This exceptional instance does not affect the truth of the principle that litigation, generally speaking, varies with population. To a lesser extent it is influenced also by congestion of population and the increase or decrease of business activity.

The relation between the population of a district and the number of court cases between private litigants is apparent and the reason for it obvious. Cases are controversies. Controversies will increase in number as the number of those who might have controversies increases. But the mere number of persons living in a given district is not the only factor which determines the number of cases. Controversies increase as contacts increase. Contacts increase as congestion of population increases. Therefore we should expect to find that the number of cases in a district depends not only on its population but also on its city population. The western district of Missouri, for example, with 538,208 of its people in cities of more than 30,000 inhabitants, has 2.5 times the population of the district of North Dakota, with no city of 30,000, but it has, on an average, 4.8 times the number of private civil cases. The eastern district of Missouri, with 821,960 of its people in a single city, has 2.7 times the population of the district of South Dakota with no city of more than 30,000, but it has an average of 6.7 the number of private civil cases. Generally speaking, the factor of congestion of population has a relation to the volume of litigation in almost every district. So also does aggregate wealth, income, and business activity. The southern district of New York, for example, has a volume of private litigation far in excess of what the factors of population or congestion of population alone would suggest.

THE EASTERN AND WESTERN DISTRICTS OF MISSOURI

It is not to be supposed, of course, that there are not still other factors than those mentioned which affect the volume of litigation in a Federal court. Some of these other factors are difficult of discernment, but certainly exist and produce effects. Consider, for example, the two districts in Missouri, the eastern and western districts. Here are two districts in the same State. The population of the eastern district is greater than the population of the western district (eastern district, 1,861,043; western district, 1,768,324). There is a greater congestion of population in the eastern district than in the western district. In the eastern district 821,960 of its inhabitants live in cities of more than 30,000. In the western district 538,208 of its inhabitants live in cities of more than 30,000. The wealth and income of the eastern district undoubtedly exceed those of the western district. Each of the three factors affecting the volume of litigation which have been discussed here should tend to produce a greater volume of litigation in the eastern district of Missouri than in the western district. The fact is, however, that the litigation in the western district exceeds, year after year, the litigation in the eastern district.

Perhaps the greater litigation which year after year comes into the United States court in the western district of Missouri, in comparison with the eastern district, is due to a difference in the character of the population of the two districts. There is a western, vigorous, breezy, perhaps contentious, spirit in the western district of Missouri and its people, which tends somewhat to foster controversies. The eastern district is inhabited by a more settled, a steadier class of citizenry, including an unusually large proportion of German ancestry, a peace-loving, conservative people.

A MEASURING STICK SUGGESTED

What an aid it would be to the Attorney General, who is called on periodically to recommend for or against an increase of judges, to the Federal Judicial Conference and the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and House, which must make like recommendations, to the Senate and House, which must make decisions on these recommendations, if they could make their recommendations and decisions scientifically. Undoubtedly they desire to act as intelligently as possible, in the light that is given them. They would spurn any effort of any politician to secure the creation of some new judgeship for the mere sake of patronage, although his efforts be buttressed by some specious showing or even by an honest showing of a need obviously transient.[4] Packing a district court with unneeded judges is not only an economic waste; it is degrading and humiliating to every serving judge in the district affected. Responsible statesmen will welcome a measuring stick, if one can be devised, by the application of which to the work to be done in any district it can be determined whether a new judge is needed.

Given a pile of wood growing steadily and at a uniform rate, and knowing, fairly accurately, how much wood one man can saw in a given period, it is not difficult to determine whether two or three men are needed to do the work or whether one is sufficient If that were the problem a measuring stick easily could be devised—the annual wood-sawing capacity of an average man. Is there any way to create a measuring stick for our very similar, if somewhat higher-ranking, problem? There is a way. The measuring stick devised will not be sufficiently accurate to measure thirty-seconds of an inch; it will be sufficiently accurate to measure miles. What has been done by a judge can be done again. And if some single judge, by reason of special capacity, can do more than the average judge, so that his record, considered alone, is not a measure of great value, the average work of several judges will be a useful and valuable measure.

Let us take then the 10 districts having the largest volume of business in the 10-year period portrayed on our charts, let us consider the work terminated in those districts in the peak year of 1933, let us then determine from what was done in those districts in that year what is within average judicial capacity. The 10 districts are: (1) The southern district of New York, (2) the eastern district of New York, (3) the northern district of Illinois, (4) the southern district of Florida, (5) the district of New Jersey, (6) the northern district of Ohio, (7) the eastern district of [3] The statement is based on the personal observation and experience of the writer as a United States district judge during 14 years and the opinions of other judges given by them to the writer. Nine of 10 criminal cases are disposed of by pleas of guilty or dismissal. Usually several criminal cases can be tried in one court day. Nine or 10 civil cases to which the United States is a party are not contested cases.

[4] Regretfully it must be said that instances of such efforts have been numerous. Even the Conference of Senior Circuit Judges occasionally has been misled to suggest additional judgeships where there was no need. The conference and Congress would do well to consult the district judges on the ground and the organized bar, not for recommendations but for facts. They might hope to get accurate information from such sources.

Michigan, (8) the southern district of California, (9) the northern district of Texas, and (10) the eastern district of Pennsylvania. Forty judges in 1933 terminated in these districts 19,686 criminal cases, 11,089 civil cases to which the United States was a party, 8,893 cases between private litigants. The average work terminated by each of the 40 judges in the 10 districts in 1933 was 492 criminal cases, 227 civil cases to which the United States was a party, 221 civil cases between private litigants.

As a check upon this conclusion the compiler of this study, who himself is and has been for 14 years a United States district judge, of average capacity and industry only, has examined the work of his own district, the western district of Missouri, for the year 1933. It so happens that this district is the eleventh from the top in volume of business. It had two judges in 1933. One of them terminated slightly more than one-half of the cases terminated in that district in 1933. The total number terminated by both judges was: Criminal, 1,148; civil, United States, 496; civil, private, 482. One judge could and easily did dispose of at least 574 criminal cases, 248 United States civil cases, and 241 private civil cases. That is a little more than the average number of cases in each class disposed of by each of the 40 judges in the 10 districts with the greatest volume of business.

Let us now arbitrarily reduce the averages for the 10 heaviest districts as follows: Criminal, from 492 to 400; civil (United States a party), from 227 to 200; civil (private), from 221 to 200. That arbitrary reduction certainly will take care of every possible contingency, such as the temporary incapacity of judges and sporadic increases in work in certain districts.

So here is the measuring stick: 400–200–200.

The reasons justifying this measuring stick have been stated. If a measuring stick more nearly accurate can be devised, it ought to be devised, and its justification set out. To refuse any measuring stick is to confess an unworthy purpose. Certainly those in authority will wish reason and intelligence as guides, rather than that their action shall be influenced by selfish desires for patronage, moving along ancient log-rolling ways.[5]

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Hon. Charles Weiser, clerk of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York, my purpose being to refer particularly to the original proposals in the pending bill which would have effected an increase of three judges in southern New York, whereas by the bill as now reported to the Senate with amendments the increase is limited to one. The data contained in the letter of the clerk of that court are informative. There is a table connected which I ask also to have printed with the letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE OF THE CLERK,
New York City, June 21, 1939.

Hon. WARREN R. AUSTIN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR AUSTIN: The receipt is acknowledged of your telegram and letter requesting information as to the number of local and visiting judges in this district during the years of 1928 to date.

There is enclosed a table which gives the data called for. It shows the number of judges of this district for each of the years in question, together with the changes due to resignations, deaths, and transfer, also the number of visiting judges in each of those years and the total number of sessions held by the visiting judges. The visiting judges were here for periods usually of from 2 to 4 weeks. The average number of court sessions held per annum by a regularly appointed judge in this district, outside of the time necessarily spent in chambers, approximates 240, so that the sessions held by visiting judges were equivalent of from one and one-half to two full-time judges.

The authorized number of southern district judges was as follows:

1928: Six judges.

1929: Nine judges. Of these three were appointed in May of that year under the act approved February 26, 1929. One of the original six judges, Judge Winslow, resigned in March. The act under which he was originally appointed provided that no successor shall be appointed.

1930: Eight judges. Of these, Judge Thacher resigned in April, and his successor, Judge Patterson, was appointed in May.

1931, 1932, 1933, 1934, 1935: Eight judges. One of these, Judge Coleman, died in March 1934 and his successor, Judge Hulbert, was appointed in June 1934.

1936: Eleven judges. Of these, three were appointed under the act approved June 15, 1936.

1937: Eleven judges.

1938: Twelve judges. Of these, one was appointed under the act approved May 31, 1938.

1939: Twelve judges, of which there is one vacancy due to the transfer of Judge Patterson to the Circuit Court of Appeals in March last. This vacancy has not yet been filled.

It may be of interest to note that Circuit Judge Mack, who was regularly assigned to this district, has been absent because of illness, and is not expected to return to regular duty. Also, that Judge Woolsey was absent for about 3½ months in 1934 because of heart trouble; he has not fully recovered and sits only in equity causes, as he is not yet able to undertake the full regular assignments. Judge Caffey has been sitting in the antitrust suit against the Aluminum Corporation of America et al., for 1 full year past, and expects that the case will consume another year. He has been unable to take any other assignment during this period.

Respectfully,

CHARLES WEISER, Clerk.

United States District Court, Southern District of New York

[5] The number of criminal, civil (United States) and civil (private) cases per judge filed in each of the districts in the United States in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938 (to which the measuring stick, 400–200–200, might be applied), was as follows: Alabama (northern district), 308–137–58; Alabama (middle district), 199–38–44; Alabama (southern district), 271–61–29; Arizona, 727–62–90; Arkansas (eastern district), 408–148–235; Arkansas (western district), 173–79–90; California (northern district), 181–96–105; California (southern district), 108–41–71; Colorado, 176–136–86; Connecticut, 77–148–33; Delaware, 88–34–77; Florida (northern district), 165–43–39; Florida (southern district), 213–67–155; Georgia (western district), 496–339–80; Georgia (middle district), 562–70–61; Georgia (southern district), 372–59–58; Idaho, 98–72–40; Illinois (northern district), 148–110–165; Illinois (eastern district), 85–34–36; Illinois (southern district), 124–35–58; Indiana (northern district), 128–81–151; Indiana (southern district), 125–93–137; Iowa (northern district), 82–54–38; Iowa (southern district), 56–42–68; Kansas, 228–84–160; Kentucky (eastern district), 879(?)–89(?)–124(?); Kentucky (western district), 620(?)–247(?)–136(?); Louisiana (eastern district), 261–114–230; Louisiana (western district), 299–94–65; Maine, 241–52–52; Maryland, 131–75–125; Massachusetts, 90–85–91; Michigan (eastern district), 144–40–231; Michigan (western district), 105–128–73; Minnesota, 90–40–100; Mississippi (northern district), 270–56–60; Mississippi (southern district), 552–874–196; Missouri (eastern district), 200–93–113; Missouri (western district), 218–30–128; Montana, 106–78–42; Nebraska, 95–42–86; Nevada, 195–17–28; New Hampshire, 66–13–39; New Jersey, 110–97–127; New Mexico, 283–53–61; New York (northern district), 138–83–42; New York (eastern district), 56–37–97; New York (southern district), 99–70–199; New York (western district), 178–68–85; North Carolina (eastern district), 369–72–71; North Carolina (middle district, 494–87–55; North Carolina (western district), 407–78–78; North Dakota, 150–97–96; Ohio (northern district), 166–51–159; Ohio (southern district), 150–49–56; Oklahoma (northern district), 260–100–114; Oklahoma (eastern district), 413–42–72; Oklahoma (western district), 260–109–170; Oregon, 128–40–71; Pennsylvania (eastern district), 76–60–170; Pennsylvania (middle district), 96–48–61; Pennsylvania (western district), 110–61–114; Rhode Island, 81–68–37; South Carolina (eastern district), 569(?)–76(?)–157(?); South Carolina (western district), 204(?)–48(?)–74(?); Tennessee (eastern district, 480–96–97; Tennessee (middle district), 282–62–50; Tennessee (western district), 146–51–54; Texas (northern district), 165–42–127; Texas (eastern district), 415–89–264; Texas (southern district), 1640–253–329; Texas (western district), 647–32–69; Utah, 125–84–37; Vermont, 145–41–118; Virginia (eastern district), 232–66–65; Virginia (western district), 193–30–20; Washington (eastern district), 227–54–32; Washington (western district), 205–84–70; West Virginia (northern district), 108–70–48; West Virginia (southern district), 329–39–43; Wisconsin (eastern district), 95–67–127; Wisconsin (western district), 63–66–50; Wyoming, 82–13–37.

the judicial business in the southern district of New York has had a marked decline, which corresponds generally to the decline in judicial business throughout all the districts in the United States. This supports the provision of the pending bill with respect to one judge instead of three judges for the southern district of New York. Let me say, for the information of the Senate, that the bill originally carried a repealer of the clause in the act of 1937, adding one judge to the southern district of New York, which made that judgeship nonfillable. This particular clause would accomplish the same purpose as House bill 5906 which I first put in the RECORD, and, of course, if the Senate should pass the bill as it is amended, then, the Senate should not pass House bill 5906.

That is all I care to put into the RECORD.

There being no objection, the tables referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. AUSTIN. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The bill to which the Senator last referred, House bill 5906, is not before the Senate, and has not been reported by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I do not recall that the Senate Committee on the Judiciary has reported that bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. I am now informed that House bill 5906 passed the House of Representatives on July 17, and is not yet before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. It has not been considered by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, of which the Senator from Vermont is a very able and respected member?

Mr. AUSTIN. It has not.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will pardon me, so that it may go in the RECORD—I ask the Senator from Vermont to correct me if I am wrong—the Judiciary Committee, I will say, after a year or more of careful investigation came to the conclusion definitely that the only additional judges at this time needed were one circuit judge for the sixth circuit, one circuit judge for the eighth circuit, and one district judge each for the southern district of California, the district of New Jersey, the western district of Oklahoma, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the southern district of New York, and for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

I do not mean to say that the entire judiciary committee supported all these, but so far as I recall, no member of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary urged any additional judgeship other than those proposed to be created by this bill. If I remember correctly, the repealer, that is, the amendment on page 2 to which the Senator referred, was adopted unanimously by the committee, so that, in no circumstance, so far as this bill is concerned, will there be no more than one additional judge for the State of New York.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if he means exactly what he said? The repealer contained in section 3 was not adopted, was it? The Judiciary Committee unanimously agreed to strike out section 3.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; it adopted the amendment to the bill.

Mr. AUSTIN. To strike out the repealer.

Mr. ASHURST. That is correct; the committee adopted the amendment which would strike out the repealer.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. We are in agreement on that.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States, submitting nominations, were communicated to the Senate, by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 2805) to authorize the attendance of the United States Naval Academy Band at the New York World's Fair on the day designated as Maryland Day at such fair, and it was signed by the Vice President.

POSTPONEMENT OF NEUTRALITY LEGISLATION AND BUSINESS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I wish to read into the RECORD two headlines from an evening paper, merely "to keep the record straight," as they say down the street. The first headline says:

Senate killed boom, says President.

And the explanatory opening sentence is:

President Roosevelt today asserted that the Senate's action in failing to act on neutrality had killed off a fine little business boom.

On the back page, the headline says:

Stocks spurt one to three dollars in fast trading.

And the first explanatory sentence says:

The stock market resumed its advance in a sharp run-up of 1 to more than 3 points today, after absorbing profit-taking through the two preceding sessions.

So I am not clear what "boom" it is that the Senate is about to deflate unless it is the third-term boom.

TRAFFIC SAFETY

Mr. TRUMAN. Mr. President, I merely wish to make a few remarks on traffic safety. I am interested in that subject not only because of its great importance, but because the Senate has, by unanimous consent, passed a bill which vitally affects safety on the highways.

Mr. President, on numerous occasions the Congress has shown keen interest in the problem of giving our country safer and more efficient highway transportation. There is now before Congress a comprehensive report prepared by Thomas H. MacDonald, Commissioner of Public Roads, outlining a plan for adjusting our highway system to modern needs. Numerous legislative proposals have been enacted which have as an objective the encouragement of highway safety. The Senate has twice passed a measure which I introduced, and which would fix standards to be met by operators of motor vehicles moving in interstate commerce. I cite these things as evidence of the broad scope of the traffic-safety problem, and the importance of doing all we can to improve existing conditions.

Fortunately, many national organizations have taken the leadership in sound programs of action. The automotive industry, which has always been concerned with the users of its products, has devoted time, energy, and money to bettering traffic conditions. The results of this coordinated program have been fine. For the past 19 months there has been a consistent reduction in the number of traffic deaths and injuries. The death rate in terms of vehicle mileage has been steadily cut. In fact, when it is considered that the motor age really covers a period of less than 30 years, that the greater mileage of streets and roads was designed for horse-drawn vehicles, and that approximately 30,000,000 vehicles of various types are daily in the hands of 45,000,000 persons of varying temperaments and qualifications, highway transportation today is a marvel of efficiency, if not of safety.

Nevertheless the broad attack on the accident problem must be continued and given new momentum wherever possible. No phase of this attack is more important than that which has to do with training traffic safety personnel and educating drivers and pedestrians. It is fortunate that thousands of men and women are prepared and are being prepared to make a career of specialized traffic safety activities.

Within the past few years more than 4,000 persons have been given specialized training in new traffic-safety methods in addition to the regular training programs of police, school, motor-vehicle, and highway departments. At Yale University and at Northwestern University outstanding training courses are given to traffic engineers and police officers on a year-round basis. Approximately 2,000 teachers have been trained by interested organizations in cooperation with colleges, universities, and schools. They will fill the need for experienced instructors.

In the schools of the country approximately 16,000,000 school children are receiving some form of traffic education. This phase of traffic-safety education is started through posters in kindergarten, and rounded out with high-school studies in actual training in sound driving and pedestrian practices. Additional thousands of students are receiving behind-the-wheel training—actual experience in driving—through the cooperation of automobile manufacturers and dealers, who are making cars available for this purpose.

I was interested in a statement made a few days ago by Commissioner MacDonald. He said, in part:

Modernization of the country's road system, with particular emphasis on elimination of congestion, will undoubtedly minimize traffic hazards. Such a program has been recommended to Congress on the basis of findings from the highway planning surveys now under way in 46 States. It recognizes that motor-vehicle traffic on main highways in 1960 will be virtually double that of today. It is also designed to preserve the principle of free highways.

Obviously, as the highway program is pushed forward there must be related activities to assure the efficient and safe movement of vehicles. It is fortunate that many national organizations, some of which have been identified with highway transport since its beginning, are furnishing leadership in mobilizing public sentiment favorable to better roads and better traffic conditions. The automobile industry is playing a vital role in this movement. The objective of these groups is the general adoption of a standard highway safety program embodying principles which have already proven effective. This standard program is approved and supported by 46 national organizations.

The National Institue for Traffic Safety Training is closely identified with the seven-point program for highway safety. It supplements what police, motor-vehicle, school, and highway departments are doing in training personnel—persons who will make careers of specialized service in the traffic safety field. The institute is making an important contribution to the traffic-safety movement and deserves universal support.

It is the National Institute for Traffic Safety Training to which I want specifically to refer. The institute is an outgrowth of the demand of traffic-safety workers for an opportunity to keep abreast with the administration in modern techniques. It is sponsored by 11 national organizations, as follows: American Automobile Association, American Association of Motor Vehicle Administrators, American Association of State Highway Officials, American Public Works Association, Automotive Safety Foundation, Highway Education Board, Institute of Traffic Engineers, International Association of Chiefs of Police, National Safety Council, Northwestern University Traffic Institute, Yale University Bureau for Street Traffic Research.

The administrative committee for the Institute, which will be held at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, August 14–26, includes outstanding leaders in the traffic safety movement. It includes such distinguished persons as Dr. Alexander G. Ruthven, honorary chairman; Miller McClintock, director of the Yale University Bureau, chairman; Norman Damon, director of the Automotive Safety Foundation; Lt. F. M. Kreml, director of the Northwestern University Traffic Institute; Burton W. Marsh, director of safety and traffic engineering, American Automobile Association; and Sidney Williams, director of public-safety division, National Safety Council.

The institute will offer special courses in accident investigation by police, advanced methods of adult-driver training, administration of drivers' license examinations, traffic engineering, traffic-accident reports and records, vehicle fleet safety, traffic-safety education in elementary schools, traffic-safety education in secondary schools, and safety organizations and public education.

I feel confident that Members of Congress and State, county, and municipal officials everywhere are keenly interested in and are heartily supporting organized programs for traffic-safety training. My purpose in citing this program is because I am wholeheartedly in accord with the objectives, and I believe it is the responsibility of Congress to further every sound movement for promoting traffic safety, to the end that our people may enjoy full benefits from highway transportation.

REGULATION OF SALE OF CERTAIN SECURITIES, AND THE REGULATION OF TRUST INDENTURES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS in the Chair) laid before the Senate the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2065) to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the act entitled "An act to provide full and fair disclosure of the character of securities sold in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and to prevent frauds in the sale thereof, and for other purposes," approved May 27, 1933, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"NECESSITY FOR REGULATION

"SEC. 302. (a) Upon the basis of facts disclosed by the reports of the Securities and Exchange Commission made to the Congress pursuant to section 211 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and otherwise disclosed and ascertained, it is hereby declared that the national public interest and the interest of investors in notes, bonds, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, and certitficates of interest or participation therein, which are offered to the public, are adversely affected—

"(1) When the obligor fails to provide a trustee to protect and enforce the rights and to represent the interests of such investors, notwithstanding the fact that (A) individual action by such investors for the purpose of protecting and enforcing their rights is rendered impracticable by reason of the disproportionate expense of taking such action, and (B) concerted action by such investors in their common interest through representatives of their own selection is impeded by reason of the wide dispersion of such investors through many States, and by reason of the fact that information as to the names and addresses of such investors generally is not available to such investors;

"(2) When the trustee does not have adequate rights and powers, or adequate duties and responsibilities, in connection with matters relating to the protection and enforcement of the rights of such investors; when, notwithstanding the obstacles to concerted action by such investors, and the general and reasonable assumption by such investors that the trustee is under an affirmative duty to take action for the protection and enforcement of their rights, trust indentures (A) generally provide that the trustee shall be under no duty to take any such action, even in the event of default, unless it receives notice of default, demand for action, and indemnity, from the holders of substantial percentages of the securities outstanding thereunder, and (B) generally relieve the trustee from liability even for its own negligent action or failure to act;

"(3) When the trustee does not have resources commensurate with its responsibilities, or has any relationship to or connection with the obligor or any underwriter of any securities of the obligor, or holds, beneficially or otherwise, any interest in the obligor or any such underwriter, which relationship, connection, or interest involves a material conflict with the interests of such investors;

"(4) When the obligor is not obligated to furnish to the trustee under the indenture and to such investors adequate current information as to its financial condition, and as to the performance of its obligations with respect to the securities outstanding under such indenture; or when the communication of such information to such investors is impeded by the fact that information as to the names and addresses of such investors generally is not available to the trustee and to such investors;

"(5) When the indenture contains provisions which are misleading or deceptive, or when full and fair disclosure is not made to prospective investors of the effect of important indenture provisions; or

"(6) When, by reason of the fact that trust indentures are commonly prepared by the obligor or underwriter in advance of the public offering of the securities to be issued thereunder, such investors are unable to participate in the preparation thereof, and, by reason of their lack of understanding of the situation, such investors would in any event be unable to procure the correction of the defects enumerated in this subsection.

"(b) Practices of the character above enumerated have existed to such an extent that, unless regulated, the public offering of notes, bonds, debentures, evidences of indebtedness, and certificates of interest or participation therein, by the use of means and instruments of transportation and communication in interstate commerce and of the mails, is injurious to the capital markets, to investors, and to the general public; and it is hereby declared to be the policy of this title, in accordance with which policy all the provisions of this title shall be interpreted, to meet the problems and eliminate the practices, enumerated in this section, connected with such public offerings.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 303. When used in this title, unless the context otherwise requires—

"(1) Any term defined in section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as heretofore amended, and not otherwise defined in this section, shall have the meaning assigned to such term in such section 2.

"(2) The term 'sale' or 'sell' shall include all transactions included in such term as provided in paragraph (3) of section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as heretofore amended, except that a sale of a certificate of interest or participation shall be deemed a sale of the security or securities in which such certificate evidences an interest or participation if and only if such certificate gives the holder thereof the right to convert the same into such security or securities.

"(3) The term 'prospectus' shall have the meaning assigned to such term in paragraph (10) of section 2 of the Securities Act of 1933, as heretofore amended, except that in the case of securities which are not registered under the Securities Act of 1933, such term shall not include any communication (A) if it is proved that prior to or at the same time with such communication a written statement meeting the requirements of subsection (c) of section 305 was sent or given to the persons to whom the communication was made, by the person making such communication or his principal, or (B) if such communication states from whom such statement may be obtained and, in addition, does no more than identify the security, state the price thereof, and state by whom orders will be executed.

"(4) The term 'underwriter' means any person who has purchased from an issuer with a view to, or sells for an issuer in connection with the distribution of any security, or participates or has a direct or indirect participation in any such undertaking, or participates or has a participation in the direct or indirect underwriting of any such undertaking; but such term shall not include a person whose interest is limited to a commission from an underwriter or dealer not in excess of the usual and customary distributors' or sellers' commission.

"(5) The term 'director' means any director of a corporation, or any individual performing similar functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated.

"(6) The term 'executive officer' means the president, every vice president, every trust officer, the cashier, the secretary, and the treasurer of a corporation, and any individual customarily performing similar functions with respect to any organization whether incorporated or unincorporated, but shall not include the chairman of the board of directors.

"(7) The term 'indenture' means any mortgage, deed of trust, trust or other indenture, or similar instrument or agreement (including any supplement or amendment to any of the foregoing), under which securities are outstanding or are to be issued, whether or not any property, real or personal, is, or is to be, pledged, mortgaged, assigned, or conveyed thereunder.

"(8) The term 'application' or 'application for qualification' means the application provided for in section 307, and includes any amendment thereto and any report, document, or memorandum accompanying such application or incorporated therein by reference.

"(9) The term 'indenture to be qualified' means (A) the indenture under which there has been or is to be issued a security in respect of which a particular registration statement has been filed, or (B) the indenture in respect of which a particular application has been filed.

"(10) The term 'indenture trustee' means each trustee under the indenture to be qualified, and each successor trustee.

"(11) The term 'indenture security' means any security issued or issuable under the indenture to be qualified.

"(12) The term 'obligor,' when used with respect to any such indenture security, means every person who is liable thereon, and, if such security is a certificate of interest or participation, such term means also every person who is liable upon the security or securities in which such certificate evidences an interest or participation; but such term shall not include the trustee under an indenture under which certificates of interest or participation, equipment trust certificates, or like securities are outstanding.

"(13) The term 'paying agent,' when used with respect to any such indenture security, means any person authorized by an obligor thereon (A) to pay the principal of or interest on such security on behalf of such obligor, or (B) if such security is a certificate of interest or participation, equipment trust certificate, or like security, to make such payment on behalf of the trustee.

"(14) The term 'State' means any State of the United States.

"(15) The term 'Commission' means the Securities and Exchange Commission.

"(16) The term 'voting security' means any security presently entitling the owner or holder thereof to vote in the direction or management of the affairs of a person, or any security issued under or pursuant to any trust, agreement, or arrangement whereby a trustee or trustees or agent or agents for the owner or holder of such security are presently entitled to vote in the direction or management of the affairs of a person; and a specified percentage of the voting securities of a person means such amount of the outstanding voting securities of such person as entitles the holder or holders thereof to cast such specified percentage of the aggregate votes which the holders of all the outstanding voting securities of such person are entitled to cast in the direction or management of the affairs of such person.

"(17) The terms 'Securities Act of 1933,' 'Securities Exchange Act of 1934,' and 'Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935' shall be deemed to refer, respectively, to such acts, as amended, whether amended prior to or after the enactment of this title.

"(18) The term 'Bankruptcy Act' means the act entitled 'An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States,' approved July 1, 1898, as amended, whether amended prior to or after the enactment of this title.

"EXEMPTED SECURITIES AND TRANSACTIONS

"SEC. 304. (a) The provisions of this title shall not apply to any of the following securities:

"(1) Any security other than (A) a note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness, whether or not secured, or (B) a certificate of interest or participation in any such note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness, or (C) a temporary certificate for, or guaranty of, any such note, bond, debenture, evidence of indebtedness, or certificate;

"(2) Any certificate of interest or participation in two or more securities having substantially different rights and privileges, or a temporary certificate for any such certificate;

"(3) Any security which, prior to or within 6 months after the enactment of this title, has been sold or disposed of by the issuer or bona fide offered to the public, but this exemption shall not apply to any new offering of any such security by an issuer subsequent to such 6 months;

"(4) Any security exempted from the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933, as heretofore amended, by paragraph (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), (8), or (11) of subsection 3 (a) thereof;

"(5) Any security issued under a mortgage indenture as to which a contract of insurance under the National Housing Act is in effect; and any such security shall be deemed to be exempt from the provisions of the Securities Act of 1933 to the same extent as though such security were specifically enumerated in section 3 (a) (2) of such act;

"(6) Any note, bond, debenture, or evidence of indebtedness issued or guaranteed by a foreign government or by a subdivision, department, municipality, agency, or instrumentality thereof;

"(7) Any guaranty of any security which is exempted by this subsection;

"(8) Any security which has been or is to be issued otherwise than under an indenture, but this exemption shall not be applied within a period of 12 consecutive months to more than $250,000 aggregate principal amount of any securities of the same issuer; or

"(9) Any security which has been or is to be issued under an indenture which limits the aggregate principal amount of securities at any time outstanding thereunder to $1,000,000 or less, but this exemption shall not be applied within a period of 36 consecutive months to more than $1,000,000 aggregate principal amount of securities of the same issuer.

In computing the aggregate principal amount of securities to which the exemptions provided by paragraphs (8) and (9) may be applied, securities to which the provisions of sections 305 and 306 would not have applied, irrespective of the provisions of those paragraphs, shall be disregarded.

"(b) The provisions of sections 305 and 306 shall not apply (1) to any of the transactions exempted from the provisions of section 5 of the Securities Act of 1933 by section 4 thereof, as heretofore amended, or (2) to any transaction which would be so exempted but for the last sentence of paragraph (11) of section 2 of such act.

"(c) The Commission shall, on application by the issuer and after opportunity for hearing thereon, by order exempt from any one or more provisions of this title any security issued or proposed to be issued under any indenture under which, at the time such application is filed, securities referred to in paragraph (3) of subsection (a) of this section are outstanding, if and to the extent that the Commission finds that compliance with such provision or provisions, through the execution of a supplemental indenture or otherwise—

"(1) Would require, by reason of the provisions of such indenture, or the provisions of any other indenture or agreement made prior to the enactment of this title, or the provisions of any applicable law, the consent of the holders of securities outstanding under any such indenture or agreement; or

"(2) Would impose an undue burden on the issuer, having due regard to the public interest and the interests of investors.

"(d) The Commission may, on application by the issuer and after opportunity for hearing thereon, by order exempt from any one or more of the provisions of this title any security issued or proposed to be issued by a person organized and existing under the laws of a foreign government or a political subdivision thereof, if and to the extent that the Commission finds that compliance with such provision or provisions is not necessary in the public interest and for the protection of investors.

"SECURITIES REQUIRED TO BE REGISTERED UNDER SECURITIES ACT

"SEC. 305. (a) Subject to the provisions of section 304, a registration statement relating to a security shall include the following information and documents, as though such inclusion were required by the provisions of section 7 of the Securities Act of 1933—

"(1) Such information and documents as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe in order to enable the Commission to determine whether any person designated to act as trustee under the indenture under which such security has been or is to be issued is eligible to act as such under subsection (a) of section 310 or has a conflicting interest as defined in subsection (b) of section 310; and

"(2) An analysis of any provisions of such indenture with respect to (A) the definition of what shall constitute a default under such indenture, and the withholding of notice to the indenture security holders of any such default, (B) the authentication and delivery of the indenture securities and the application of the proceeds thereof, (C) the release or the release and substitution of any property subject to the lien of the indenture, (D) the satisfaction and discharge of the indenture, and (E) the evidence required to be furnished by the obligor upon the indenture securities to the trustee as to compliance with the conditions and covenants provided for in such indenture."

The information and documents required by paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to the person designated to act as indenture trustee shall be contained in a separate part of such registration statement, which part shall be signed by such person. Such part of the registration statement shall be deemed to be a document filed pursuant to this title, and the provisions of sections 11, 12, 17, and 24 of the Securities Act of 1933 shall not apply to statements therein or omissions therefrom.

"(b) The Commission shall issue an order prior to the effective date of registration refusing to permit such a registration statement to become effective, if it finds that—

"(1) The security to which such registration statement relates has not been or is not to be issued under an indenture;

"(2) Such indenture does not conform to the requirements of sections 310 to 318, inclusive; or

"(3) Any person designated as trustee under such indenture is not eligible to act as such under subsection (a) of section 310 or has any conflicting interest as defined in subsection (b) of section 310;"

but no such order shall be issued except after notice and opportunity for hearing within the periods and in the manner required with respect to refusal orders pursuant to section 8 (b) of the Securities Act of 1933. If and when the Commission deems that the objections on which such order was based have been met, the Commission shall enter an order rescinding such refusal order, and the registration shall become effective at the time provided in section 8 (a) of the Securities Act of 1933, or upon the date of such rescission, whichever shall be the later.

"(c) A prospectus relating to any such security shall include, as though such inclusion were required by section 10 of the Securities Act of 1933, a written statement containing the analysis, set forth in the registration statement, of any indenture provisions with respect to the matters specified in paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of this section, together with a supplementary analysis, prepared by the Commission, of such provisions and of the effect thereof, if, in the opinion of the Commission, the inclusion of such supplementary analysis is necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, and the Commission so declares by order after notice and, if demanded by the issuer, opportunity for hearing thereon. Such order shall be entered prior to the effective date of registration, except that if opportunity for hearing thereon is demanded by the issuer such order shall be entered within a reasonable time after such opportunity for hearing.

"(d) The provisions of sections 11, 12, 17, and 24 of the Securities Act of 1933, and the provisions of sections 323 and 325 of this title, shall not apply to statements in or omissions from any analysis required under the provisions of this section or section 306 or 307.

"SECURITIES NOT REGISTERED UNDER SECURITIES ACT

"SEC. 306. (a) In the case of any security which is not registered under the Securities Act of 1933 and to which this subsection is applicable notwithstanding the provisions of section 304, unless such security has been or is to be issued under an indenture and an application for qualification is effective as to such indenture, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) To make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to sell such security through the use or medium of any prospectus or otherwise; or

"(2) To carry or cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce, by any means or instruments of transportation, any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale.

"(b) In the case of any security which is not registered under the Securities Act of 1933, but which has been or is to be issued under an indenture as to which an application for qualification is effective, it shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly—

"(1) to make use of any means or instruments of transportation or communication in interstate commerce or of the mails to carry or transmit any prospectus relating to any such security, unless such prospectus includes or is accompanied by a written statement that meets the requirements of subsection (c) of section 305; or

"(2) to carry or to cause to be carried through the mails or in interstate commerce any such security for the purpose of sale or for delivery after sale, unless accompanied or preceded by a written statement that meets the requirements of subsection (c) of section 305.

"QUALIFICATION OF INDENTURES COVERING SECURITIES NOT REQUIRED TO BE REGISTERED

"SEC. 307. (a) In the case of any security which is not required to be registered under the Securities Act of 1933 and to which subsection (a) of section 306 is applicable notwithstanding the provisions of section 304, an application for qualification of the indenture under which such security has been or is to be issued shall be filed with the Commission by the issuer of such security. Each such application shall be in such form, and shall be signed in such manner, as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. Each such application shall include the information and documents required by subsection (a) of section 305. The information and documents required by paragraph (1) of such subsection with respect to the person designated to act as indenture trustee shall be contained in a separate part of such application, which part shall be signed by such person. Each such application shall also include such of the other information and documents which would be required to be filed in order to register such indenture security under the Securities Act of 1933 as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe as necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors. An application may be withdrawn by the applicant at any time prior to the effective date thereof. Subject to the provisions of section 321, the information and documents contained in or filed with any application shall be made available to the public under such regulations as the Commission may prescribe, and copies thereof, photostatic or otherwise, shall be furnished to every applicant therefor at such reasonable charge as the Commission may prescribe.

"(b) The filing with the Commission of an application, or of an amendment to an application, shall be deemed to have taken place upon the receipt thereof by the Commission, but, in the case of an application, only if it is accompanied or preceded by payment to the Commission of a filing fee in the amount of $100, such payment to be made in cash or by United States postal money order or certified or bank check, or in such other medium of payment as the Commission may authorize by rule and regulation.

"(c) The provisions of section 8 of the Securities Act of 1933 and the provisions of subsection (b) of section 305 of this title shall apply with respect to every such application, as though such application were a registration statement filed pursuant to the provisions of such act.

"INTEGRATION OF PROCEDURE WITH SECURITIES ACT AND OTHER ACTS

"SEC. 308. (a) The Commission, by such rules and regulations or orders as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, shall authorize the filing of any information or documents required to be filed with the Commission under this title, or under the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, by incorporating by reference any information or documents on file with the Commission under this title or under any such act.

"(b) The Commission, by such rules and regulations or orders as it deems necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, shall provide for the consolidation of applications, reports, and proceedings under this title with registration statements, applications, reports, and proceedings under the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.

"WHEN QUALIFICATION BECOMES EFFECTIVE; EFFECT OF QUALIFICATION

"SEC. 309. (a) The indenture under which a security has been or is to be issued shall be deemed to have been qualified under this title—

"(1) when registration becomes effective as to such security; or

"(2) when an application for the qualification of such indenture becomes effective pursuant to section 307.

"(b) After qualification has become effective as to the indenture under which a security has been or is to be issued, no stop order shall be issued pursuant to section 8 (d) of the Securities Act of 1933, suspending the effectiveness of the registration statement relating to such security or of the application for qualification of such indenture, except on one or more of the grounds specified in section 8 of such act.

"(c) The making, amendment, or rescission of a rule, regulation, or order under the provisions of this title (except to the extent authorized by subsection (a) of section 314 with respect to rules and regulations prescribed pursuant to such subsection) shall not affect the qualification, form, or interpretation of any indenture as to which qualification became effective prior to the making, amendment, or rescission of such rule, regulation, or order.

"(d) No trustee under an indenture which has been qualified under this title shall be subject to any liability because of any failure of such indenture to comply with any of the provisions of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"(e) Nothing in this title shall be construed as empowering the Commission to conduct an investigation or other proceeding for the purpose of determining whether the provisions of an indenture which has been qualified under this title are being complied with, or to enforce such provisions.

"ELIGIBILITY AND DISQUALIFICATION OF TRUSTEE

"Persons eligible for appointment as trustee

"SEC. 310. (a) (1) The indenture to be qualified shall require that there shall at all times be one or more trustees thereunder, at least one of whom shall at all times be a corporation organized and doing business under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia (referred to in this title as the institutional trustee), which (A) is authorized under such laws to exercise corporate trust powers, and (B) is subject to supervision or examination by Federal, State, Territorial, or District of Columbia authority.

"(2) The indenture to be qualified shall require that such institutional trustee shall have at all times a combined capital and surplus of a specified minimum amount, which shall not be less than $150,000. If such institutional trustee publishes reports of condition at least annually, pursuant to law or to the requirements of said supervising or examining authority, the indenture may provide that, for the purposes of this paragraph, the combined capital and surplus of such trustee shall be deemed to be its combined capital and surplus as set forth in its most recent report of condition so published.

"(3) If the indenture to be qualified requires or permits the appointment of one or more cotrustees in addition to such institutional trustee, such indenture shall provide that the rights, powers, duties, and obligations conferred or imposed upon the trustees or any of them shall be conferred or imposed upon and exercised or performed by such institutional trustee, or such institutional trustee and such cotrustees jointly, except to the extent that under any law of any jurisdiction in which any particular act or acts are to be performed, such institutional trustee shall be incompetent or unqualified to perform such act or acts, in which event such rights, powers, duties, and obligations shall be exercised and performed by such cotrustees.

(4) In the case of certificates of interest or participation, the indenture to be qualified shall require that the indenture trustee or trustees have the legal power to exercise all of the rights, powers, and privileges of a holder of the security or securities in which such certificates evidence an interest or participation.

"Disqualification of Trustee

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that if any indenture trustee has or shall acquire any conflicting interest as hereinafter defined, (i) such trustee shall, within 90 days after ascertaining that it has such conflicting interest, either eliminate such conflicting interest or resign, such resignation to become effective upon the appointment of a successor trustee and such successor's acceptance of such appointment, and the obligor upon the indenture securities shall take prompt steps to have a successor appointed in the manner provided in the indenture; and (ii) in the event that such trustee shall fail to comply with the provisions of clause (i) of this subsection, such trustee shall, within 10 days after the expiration of such 90-day period, transmit notice of such failure to the indenture security holders in the manner and to the extent provided in subsection (c) of section 313; and (iii) subject to the provisions of subsection (e) of section 315, any security holder who has been a bona fide holder of indenture securities for at least 6 months may, on behalf of himself and all others similarly situated, petition any court of competent jurisdiction for the removal of such trustee, and the appointment of a successor, if such trustee fails, after written request therefor by such holder, to comply with the provisions of clause (i) of this subsection. For the purposes of this subsection, an indenture trustee shall be deemed to have a conflicting interest if—

"(1) such trustee is trustee under another indenture under which any other securities, or certificates of interest or participation in any other securities, of an obligor upon the indenture securities are outstanding unless (A) the indenture securities are collateral trust notes under which the only collateral consists of securities issued under such other indenture, or (B) such other indenture is a collateral trust indenture under which the only collateral consists of indenture securities, or (C) such obligor has no substantial unmortgaged assets and is engaged primarily in the business of owning, or of owning and developing and/or operating, real estate, and the indenture to be qualified and such other indenture are secured by wholly separate and distinct parcels of real estate: Provided, That the indenture to be qualified may contain a provision excluding from the operation of this paragraph another indenture or indentures under which other securities, or certificates of interest or participation in other securities, of such an obligor are outstanding, if (i) the indenture to be qualified and such other indenture or indentures are wholly unsecured, and such other indenture or indentures are specifically described in the indenture to be qualified or are thereafter qualified under this title, unless the Commission shall have found and declared by order pursuant to subsection (b) of section 305 or subsection (c) of section 307 that differences exist between the provisions of the indenture to be qualified and the provisions of such other indenture or indentures which are so likely to involve a material conflict of interest as to make it necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors to disqualify such trustee from acting as such under one of such indentures, or (ii) the issuer shall have sustained the burden of proving, on application to the Commission and after opportunity for hearing thereon, that trusteeship under the indenture to be qualified and such other indenture is not so likely to involve a material conflict of interest as to make it necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors to disqualify such trustee from acting as such under one of such indentures;

"(2) such trustee or any of its directors or executive officers is an obligor upon the indenture securities or an underwriter for such an obligor;

"(3) such trustee directly or indirectly controls or is directly or indirectly controlled by or is under direct or indirect common control with an obligor upon the indenture securities or an underwriter for such an obligor;

"(4) such trustee or any of its directors or executive officers is a director, officer, partner, employee, appointee, or representative of an obligor upon the indenture securities, or of an underwriter (other than the trustee itself) for such an obligor who is currently engaged in the business of underwriting, except that (A) one individual may be a director and/or an executive officer of the trustee and a director and/or an executive officer of such obligor, but may not be at the same time an executive officer of both the trustee and of such obligor, and (B) if and so long as the number of directors of the trustee in office is more than nine, one additional individual may be a director and/or an executive officer of the trustee and a director of such obligor, and (C) such trustee may be designated by any such obligor or by any underwriter for any such obligor, to act in the capacity of transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent, escrow agent, or depositary, or in any other similar capacity, or, subject to the provisions of paragraph (1) of this subsection, to act as trustee, whether under an indenture or otherwise;

"(5) 10 percent or more of the voting securities of such trustee is beneficially owned either by an obligor upon the indenture securities or by any director, partner, or executive officer thereof, or 20 percent or more of such voting securities is beneficially owned, collectively, by any two or more of such persons; or 10 percent or more of the voting securities of such trustee is beneficially owned either by an underwriter for any such obligor or by any director, partner, or executive officer thereof, or is beneficially owned, collectively, by any two or more such persons;

"(6) such trustee is the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, (A) 5 percent or more of the voting securities, or 10 percent or more of any other class of security, of an obligor upon the indenture securities, not including indenture securities and securities issued under any other indenture under which such trustee is also trustee, or (B) 10 percent or more of any class of security of an underwriter for any such obligor;

"(7) such trustee is the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, 5 percent or more of the voting securities of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 10 percent or more of the voting securities of, or controls directly or indirectly or is under direct or indirect common control with, an obligor upon the indenture securities;

"(8) such trustee is the beneficial owner of, or holds as collateral security for an obligation which is in default as hereinafter defined, 10 percent or more of any class of security of any person who, to the knowledge of the trustee, owns 50 percent or more of the voting securities of an obligor upon the indenture securities; or

"(9) such trustee owns, on May 15 in any calendar year, in the capacity of executor, administrator, testamentary or inter vivos trustee, guardian, committee or conservator, or in any other similar capacity, an aggregate of 25 percent or more of the voting securities, or of any class of security, of any person, the beneficial ownership of a specified percentage of which would have constituted a conflicting interest under paragraph (6), (7), or (8) of this subsection. The indenture to be qualified may provide, as to any such securities of which the indenture trustee acquired ownership through becoming executor, administrator, or testamentary trustee of an estate which included them, that the provisions of the preceding sentence shall not apply, for a period of not more than 2 years from the date of such acquisition, to the extent that such securities included in such estate do not exceed 25 percent of such voting securities or 25 percent of any such class of security. The indenture to be qualified shall provide that promptly after May 15 in each calendar year, the trustee shall make a check of its holdings of such securities in any of the above-mentioned capacities as of such May 15. Such indenture shall also provide that if the obligor upon the indenture securities fails to make payment in full of principal or interest under such indenture when and as the same becomes due and payable, and such failure continues for 30 days thereafter, the trustees shall make a prompt check of its holdings of such securities in any of the above-mentioned capacities as of the date of the expiration of such 30-day period, and after such date, notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, all such securities so held by the trustee, with sole or joint control over such securities vested in it, shall be considered as though beneficially owned by such trustee, for the purposes of paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) of this subsection.

"The indenture to be qualified shall provide that the specification of percentages in paragraphs (5) to (9), inclusive, of this subsection shall not be construed as indicating that the ownership of such percentages of the securities of a person is or is not necessary or sufficient to constitute direct or indirect control for the purposes of paragraph (3) or (7) of this subsection.

"For the purposes of paragraphs (6), (7), (8), and (9) of this subsection, (A) the terms 'security' and 'securities' shall include only such securities as are generally known as corporate securities, but shall not include any note or other evidence of indebtedness issued to evidence an obligation to repay moneys lent to a person by one or more banks, trust companies, or banking firms, or any certificate of interest or participation in any such note or evidence of indebtedness; (B) an obligation shall be deemed to be in default when a default in payment of principal shall have continued for 30 days or more, and shall not have been cured; and (C) the indenture trustee shall not be deemed the owner or holder of (i) any security which it holds as collateral security (as trustee or otherwise) for an obligation which is not in default as above defined, or (ii) any security which it holds as collateral security under the indenture to be qualified, irrespective of any default thereunder, or (iii) any security which it holds as agent for collection, or as custodian, escrow agent, or depositary, or in any similar representative capacity.

"For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'underwriter' when used with reference to an obligor upon the indenture securities means every person who, within 3 years prior to the time as of which the determination is made, was an underwriter of any security of such obligor outstanding at such time.

"APPLICABILITY OF SECTION

"(c) The Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 shall not be held to establish or authorize the establishment of any standards regarding the eligibility and qualifications of any trustee or prospective trustee under an indenture to be qualified under this title, or regarding the provisions to be included in any such indenture with respect to the eligibility and qualifications of the trustee thereunder, other than those established by the provisions of this section.

"PREFERENTIAL COLLECTION OF CLAIMS AGAINST OBLIGOR

"SEC. 311. (a) Subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, the indenture to be qualified shall provide that if the indenture trustee shall be, or shall become, a creditor, directly or indirectly, secured or unsecured, of an obligor upon the indenture securities, within 4 months prior to a default as defined in the last paragraph of this subsection, or subsequent to such a default, then, unless and until such default shall be cured, such trustee shall set apart and hold in a special account for the benefit of the trustee individually and the indenture security holders—

"(1) An amount equal to any and all reductions in the amount due and owing upon any claim as such creditor in respect of principal or interest, effected after the beginning of such 4 months' period and valid as against such obligor and its other creditors, except any such reduction resulting from the receipt or disposition of any property described in paragraph (2) of this subsection, or from the exercise of any right of set-off which the trustee could have exercised if a petition in bankruptcy had been filed by or against such obligor upon the date of such default; and

"(2) All property received in respect of any claim as such creditor, either as security therefor, or in satisfaction or composition thereof, or otherwise, after the beginning of such 4 months' period, or an amount equal to the proceeds of any such property, if disposed of, subject, however, to the rights, if any, of such obligor and its other creditors in such property or such proceeds.

"Nothing herein contained shall affect the right of the indenture trustee—

"(A) To retain for its own account (i) payments made on account of any such claim by any person (other than such obligor) who is liable thereon, and (ii) the proceeds of the bona fide sale of any such claim by the trustee to a third person, and (iii) distributions made in cash, securities, or other property in respect of claims filed against such obligor in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law;

"(B) To realize, for its own account, upon any property held by it as security for any such claim, if such property was so held prior to the beginning of such 4 months' period;

"(C) To realize, for its own account, but only to the extent of the claim hereinafter mentioned, upon any property held by it as security for any such claim, if such claim was created after the beginning of such 4 months' period and such property was received as security therefor simultaneously with the creation thereof, and if the trustee shall sustain the burden of proving that at the time such property was so received the trustee had no reasonable cause to believe that a default as defined in the last paragraph of this subsection would occur within 4 months; or

"(D) To receive payment on any claim referred to in paragraph (B) or (C), against the release of any property held as security for such claim as provided in paragraph (B) or (C), as the case may be, to the extent of the fair value of such property."

For the purposes of paragraphs (B), (C), and (D), property substituted after the beginning of such 4 months' period for property held as security at the time of such substitution shall, to the extent of the fair value of the property released, have the same status as the property released, and, to the extent that any claim referred to in any of such paragraphs is created in renewal of or in substitution for or for the purpose of repaying or refunding any preexisting claim of the indenture trustee as such creditor, such claim shall have the same status as such preexisting claim.

"The indenture to be qualified shall provide that, if the trustee shall be required to account, the funds and property held in such special account and the proceeds thereof shall be apportioned between the trustee and the indenture security holders in such manner that the trustee and the indenture security holders realize as a result of payments from such special account and payments of dividends on claims filed against such obligor in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law, the same percentage of their respective claims figured before crediting to the claim of the trustee anything on account of the receipt by it from such obligor of the funds and property in such special account and before crediting to the respective claims of the trustee and the indenture security holders dividends on claims filed against such obligor in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law, but after crediting thereon receipts on account of the indebtedness represented by their respective claims from all sources other than from such dividends and from the funds and property so held in such special account. As used in this paragraph, with respect to any claim the term 'dividends' shall include any distribution with respect to such claim, in bankruptcy or receivership or in proceedings for reorganization pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act or applicable State law, whether such distribution is made in cash securities or other property, but shall not include any such distribution with respect to the secured portion, if any, of such claim. The court in which such bankruptcy, receivership, or proceeding for reorganization is pending shall have jurisdiction (i) to apportion between the indenture trustee and the indenture security holders, in accordance with the provisions of this paragraph, the funds and property held in such special account and the proceeds thereof, or (ii) in lieu of such apportionment, in whole or in part, to give to the provisions of this paragraph due consideration in determining the fairness of the distributions to be made to the indenture trustee and the indenture security holders with respect to their respective claims, in which event it shall not be necessary to liquidate or to appraise the value of any securities or other property held in such special account or as security for any such claim or to make a specific allocation of such distributions as between the secured and unsecured portions of such claims, or otherwise to apply the provisions of this paragraph as mathematical formula.

"Any indenture trustee who has resigned or been removed after the beginning of such 4 months' period shall be subject to the provisions of this subsection as though such resignation or removal had not occurred. Any indenture trustee who has resigned or been removed prior to the beginning of such 4 months' period shall be subject to the provisions of this subsection if and only if the following conditions exist—

"(i) The receipt of property or reduction of claim which would have given rise to the obligation to account, if such indenture trustee had continued as trustee, occurred after the beginning of such 4 months' period; and

"(ii) such receipt of property or reduction of claim occurred within 4 months after such resignation or removal.

"As used in this subsection, the term 'default' means any failure to make payment in full of principal or interest, when and as the same becomes due and payable, under any indenture which has been qualified under this title, and under which the indenture trustee is trustee and the person of whom the indenture trustee is directly or indirectly a creditor is an obligor; and the term 'indenture security holder' means all holders of securities outstanding under any such indenture under which any such default exists.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified may contain provisions excluding from the operation of subsection (a) of this section a creditor relationship arising from—

"(1) the ownership or acquisition of securities issued under any indenture, or any security or securities having a maturity of 1 year or more at the time of acquisition by the indenture trustee;

"(2) advances authorized by a receivership or bankruptcy court of competent jurisdiction, or by the indenture, for the purpose of preserving the property subject to the lien of the indenture or of discharging tax liens or other prior liens or encumbrances on the trust estate, if notice of such advance and of the circumstances surrounding the making thereof is given to the indenture security holders, at the time and in the manner provided in the indenture;

"(3) disbursements made in the ordinary course of business in the capacity of trustee under an indenture, transfer agent, registrar, custodian, paying agent, fiscal agent or depositary, or other similar capacity;

"(4) an indebtedness created as a result of services rendered or premises rented; or an indebtedness created as a result of goods or securities sold in a cash transaction as defined in the indenture;

"(5) the ownership of stock or of other securities of a corporation organized under the provisions of section 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, which is directly or indirectly a creditor of an obligor upon the indenture securities; or

"(6) the acquisition, ownership, acceptance, or negotiation of any drafts, bills of exchange, acceptances, or obligations which fall within the classification of self-liquidating paper as defined in the indenture.

"(c) In the exercise by the Commission of any jurisdiction under the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 regarding the issue or sale, by any registered holding company or a subsidiary company thereof, of any security of such issuer or seller or of any other company to a person which is trustee under an indenture or indentures of such issuer or seller or other company, or of a subsidiary or associate company or affiliate of such issuer or seller or other company (whether or not such indenture or indentures are qualified or to be qualified under this title), the fact that such trustee will thereby become a creditor, directly or indirectly, of any of the foregoing shall not constitute a ground for the Commission taking adverse action with respect to any application or declaration, or limiting the scope of any rule or regulation which would otherwise permit such transaction to take effect; but in any case in which such trustee is trustee under an indenture of the company of which it will thereby become a creditor, or of any subsidiary company thereof, this subsection shall not prevent the Commission from requiring (if such requirement would be authorized under the provisions of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935) that such trustee, as such, shall effectively and irrevocably agree in writing, for the benefit of the holders from time to time of the securities from time to time outstanding under such indenture, to be bound by the provisions of this section, subsection (c) of section 315, and, in case of default (as such term is defined in such indenture), subsection (d) of section 315, as fully as though such provisions were included in such indenture. For the purposes of this subsection the terms 'registered holding company,' 'subsidiary company,' 'associate company,' and 'affiliate' shall have the respective meanings assigned to such terms in section 2 (a) of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935.

"BONDHOLDERS' LISTS

"SEC. 312. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring each obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish or cause to be furnished to the institutional trustee thereunder at stated intervals of not more than 6 months, and to such other times as such trustee may request in writing, all information in the possession or control of such obligor, or of any of its paying agents, as to the names and addresses of the indenture security holders, and requiring such trustee to preserve, in as current a form as is reasonably practicable, all such information so furnished to it or received by it in the capacity of paying agent.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall also contain provisions requiring that, within 5 business days after the receipt by the institutional trustee of a written application by any three or more indenture security holders stating that the applicants desire to communicate with other indenture security holders with respect to their rights under such indenture or under the indenture securities, and accompanied by a copy of the form of proxy or other communication which such applicants propose to transmit, and by reasonable proof that each such applicant has owned an indenture security for a period of at least 6 months preceding the date of such application, such institutional trustee shall, at its election, either—

"(1) afford to such applicants access to all information so furnished to or received by such trustee; or

"(2) inform such applicants as to the approximate number of indenture security holders according to the most recent information so furnished to or received by such trustee, and as to the approximate cost of mailing to such indenture security holders the form of proxy or other communication, if any, specified in such application.

If such trustee shall elect not to afford to such applicants access to such information, such trustee shall, upon the written request of such applicants, mail to all such indenture security holders copies of the form of proxy or other communication which is specified in such request, with reasonable promptness after a tender to such trustee of the material to be mailed and of payment, or provision for the payment, of the reasonable expenses of such mailing, unless within 5 days after such tender, such trustee shall mail to such applicants, and file with the Commission together with a copy of the material to be mailed, a written statement to the effect that, in the opinion of such trustee, such mailing would be contrary to the best interests of the indenture security holders or would be in violation of applicable law. Such written statement shall specify the basis of such opinion. After opportunity for hearing upon the objections specified in the written statement so filed, the Commission may, and if demanded by such trustee or by such applicants shall, enter an order either sustaining one or more of such objections or refusing to sustain any of them. If the Commission shall enter an order refusing to sustain any such objections, or if, after the entry of an order sustaining one or more of such objections, the Commission shall find, after notice and opportunity for hearing, that all objections so sustained have been met, and shall enter an order so declaring, such trustee shall mail copies of such material to all such indenture security holders with reasonable promptness after the entry of such order and the renewal of such tender.

"(c) The disclosure of any such information as to the names and addresses of the indenture security holders in accordance with the provisions of this section, regardless of the source from which such information was derived, shall not be deemed to be a violation of any existing law, or of any law hereafter enacted which does not specifically refer to this section, nor shall such trustee be held accountable by reason of mailing any material pursuant to a request made under subsection (b) of this section.

"REPORTS BY INDENTURE TRUSTEE

"SEC. 313. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to transmit to the indenture security holders as hereinafter provided, at stated intervals of not more than 12 months, a brief report with respect to—

"(1) Its eligibility and its qualifications under section 310, or in lieu thereof, if to the best of its knowledge it has continued to be eligible and qualified under such section, a written statement to such effect;

"(2) The character and amount of any advances made by it, as indenture trustee, which remain unpaid on the date of such report, and for the reimbursement of which it claims or may claim a lien or charge, prior to that of the indenture securities, on the trust estate or on property or funds held or collected by it as such trustee, if such advances so remaining unpaid aggregate more than one-half of 1 percent of the principal amount of the indenture securities outstanding on such date;

"(3) The amount, interest rate, and maturity date of all other indebtedness owing to it in its individual capacity, on the date of such report, by the obligor upon the indenture securities, with a brief description of any property held as collateral security therefor, except an indebtedness based upon a creditor relationship arising in any manner described in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), or (6) of subsection (b) of section 311;

"(4) The property and funds physically in its possession as indenture trustee on the date of such report;

"(5) Any release, or release and substitution, of property subject to the lien of the indenture (and the consideration therefor, if any) which it has not previously reported;

"(6) Any additional issue of indenture securities which it has not previously reported; and

"(7) Any action taken by it in the performance of its duties under the indenture which it has not previously reported and which in its opinion materially affects the indenture securities or the trust estate, except action in respect of a default, notice of which has been or is to be withheld by it in accordance with an indenture provision authorized by subsection (b) of section 315.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall also contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to transmit to the indenture security holders as hereinafter provided, within the times hereinafter specified, a brief report with respect to—

"(1) The release, or release and substitution, of property subject to the lien of the indenture (and the consideration therefor, if any) unless the fair value of such property, as set forth in the certificate or opinion required by paragraph (1) of subsection (d) of section 314, is less than 10 percent of the principal amount of indenture securities outstanding at the time of such release, or such release and substitution, such report to be so transmitted within 90 days after such time; and

"(2) The character and amount of any advances made by it as such since the date of the last report transmitted pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) (or if no such report has yet been so transmitted, since the date of execution of the indenture), for the reimbursement of which it claims or may claim a lien or charge, prior to that of the indenture securities, on the trust estate or on property or funds held or collected by it as such trustee, and which it has not previously reported pursuant to this paragraph, if such advances remaining unpaid at any time aggregate more than 10 percent of the principal amount of indenture securities outstanding at such time, such report to be so transmitted within 90 days after such time.

"(c) The indenture to be qualified shall also provide that reports pursuant to this section shall be transmitted by mail—

"(1) To all registered holders of indenture securities, as the names and addresses of such holders appear upon the registration books of the obligor upon the indenture securities;

"(2) To such holders of indenture securities as have, within the 2 years preceding such transmission, filed their names and addresses with the indenture trustee for that purpose; and

"(3) Except in the case of reports pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, to all holders of indenture securities whose names and addresses have been furnished to or received by the indenture trustee pursuant to section 312.

"(d) The indenture to be qualified shall also provide that a copy of each such report shall, at the time of such transmission to indenture security holders, be filed with each stock exchange upon which the indenture securities are listed, and also with the Commission.

"REPORTS BY OBLIGOR; EVIDENCE OF COMPLIANCE WITH INDENTURE PROVISIONS

"Periodic Reports

"SEC. 314. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring each person who, as set forth in the registration statement or application, is or is to be an obligor upon the indenture securities covered thereby—

"(1) To file with the indenture trustee copies of the annual reports and of the information, documents, and other reports (or copies of such portions of any of the foregoing as the Commission may by rules and regulations prescribe) which such obligor is required to file with the Commission pursuant to section 13 or section 15 (d) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934; or, if the obligor is not required to file information, documents, or reports pursuant to either of such sections, then to file with the indenture trustee and the Commission, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission, such of the supplementary and periodic information, documents, and reports which may be required pursuant to section 13 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 in respect of a security listed and registered on a national securities exchange as may be prescribed in such rules and regulations;

"(2) To file with the indenture trustee and the Commission, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission, such additional information, documents, and reports with respect to compliance by such obligor with the conditions and covenants provided for in the indenture, as may be required by such rules and regulations, including, in the case of annual reports, if required by such rules and regulations, certificates or opinions of independent public accountants, conforming to the requirements of subsection (e) of this section, as to compliance with conditions or covenants, compliance with which is subject to verification by accountants, but no such certificate or opinion shall be required as to any matter specified in clauses (A), (B), or (C) of paragraph (3) of subsection (c); and

"(3) To transmit to the holders of the indenture securities upon which such person is an obligor, in the manner and to the extent provided in subsection (c) of section 313, such summaries of any information, documents, and reports required to be filed by such obligor pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (1) or (2) of this subsection as may be required by rules and regulations prescribed by the Commission.

The rules and regulations prescribed under this subsection shall be such as are necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors, having due regard to the types of indentures, and the nature of the business of the class of obligors affected thereby, and the amount of indenture securities outstanding under such indentures, and, in the case of any such rules and regulations prescribed after the indentures to which they apply have been qualified under this title, the additional expense, if any, of complying with such rules and regulations. Such rules and regulations may be prescribed either before or after qualification becomes effective as to any such indenture.

"Evidence of Recording of Indenture

"(b) If the indenture to be qualified is or is to be secured by the mortgage or pledge of property, such indenture shall contain provisions requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee—

"(1) promptly after the execution and delivery of the indenture, an opinion of counsel (who may be of counsel for such obligor) either stating that in the opinion of such counsel the indenture has been properly recorded and filed so as to make effective the lien intended to be created thereby, and reciting the details of such action, or stating that in the opinion of such counsel no such action is necessary to make such lien effective; and

"(2) at least annually after the execution and delivery of the indenture, an opinion of counsel (who may be of counsel for such obligor) either stating that in the opinion of such counsel such action has been taken with respect to the recording, filing, rerecording, and refiling of the indenture as is necessary to maintain the lien of such indenture, and reciting the details of such action, or stating that in the opinion of such counsel no such action is necessary to maintain such lien.

"Evidence of Compliance With Conditions Precedent

"(c) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee evidence of compliance with the conditions precedent, if any, provided for in the indenture (including any covenants compliance with which constitute a condition precedent) which relate to the authentication and delivery of the indenture securities, to the release or the release and substitution of property subject to the lien of the indenture, to the satisfaction and discharge of the indenture, or to any other action to be taken by the indenture trustee at the request or upon the application of such obligor. Such evidence shall consist of the following:

"(1) certificates or opinions made by officers of such obligor who are specified in the indenture, stating that such conditions precedent have been complied with;

"(2) an opinion of counsel (who may be of counsel for such obligor) stating that in his opinion such conditions precedent have been complied with; and

"(3) in the case of conditions precedent compliance with which is subject to verification by accountants (such as conditions with respect to the preservation of specified ratios, the amount of net quick assets, negative-pledge clauses, and other similar specific conditions), a certificate or opinion of an accountant, who, in the case of any such conditions precedent to the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, and not otherwise, shall be an independent public accountant selected or approved by the indenture trustee in the exercise of reasonable care, if the aggregate principal amount of such indenture securities and of other indenture securities authenticated and delivered since the commencement of the then current calendar year (other than those with respect to which a certificate or opinion of an accountant is not required, or with respect to which a certificate or opinion of an independent public accountant has previously been furnished) is 10 percent or more of the aggregate amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding; but no certificate or opinion need be made by any person other than an officer or employee of such obligor who is specified in the indenture, as to (A) dates or periods not covered by annual reports required to be filed by the obligor, in the case of conditions precedent which depend upon a state of facts as of a date or dates or for a period or periods different from that required to be covered by such annual reports, or (B) the amount and value of property additions, except as provided in paragraph (3) of subsection (d), or (C) the adequacy of depreciation, maintenance, or repairs.

"Certificates of Fair Value

"(d) If the indenture to be qualified is or is to be secured by the mortgage or pledge of property or securities, such indenture shall contain provisions—

"(1) requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee a certificate or opinion of an engineer, appraiser, or other expert as to the fair value of any property or securities to be released from the lien of the indenture, which certificate or opinion shall state that in the opinion of the person making the same the proposed release will not impair the security under such indenture in contravention of the provisions thereof, and requiring further that such certificate or opinion shall be made by an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert, if the fair value of such property or securities and of all other property or securities released since the commencement of the then current calendar year, as set forth in the certificates or opinions required by this paragraph, is 10 percent or more of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding; but such a certificate or opinion of an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert shall not be required in the case of any release of property or securities, if the fair value thereof as set forth in the certificate or opinion required by this paragraph is less than $25,000 or less than 1 percent of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding;

"(2) requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee a certificate or opinion of an engineer, appraiser, or other expert as to the fair value to such obligor of any securities (other than indenture securities and securities secured by a lien prior to the lien of the indenture upon property subject to the lien of the indenture), the deposit of which with the trustee is to be made the basis for the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, the withdrawal of cash constituting a part of the trust estate or the release of property or securities subject to the lien of the indenture, and requiring further that if the fair value to such obligor of such securities and of all other such securities made the basis of any such authentication and delivery, withdrawal, or release since the commencement of the then current calendar year, as set forth in the certificates or opinions required by this paragraph, is 10 percent or more of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding, such certificate or opinion shall be made by an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert and, in the case of the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, shall cover the fair value to such obligor of all other such securities so deposited since the commencement of the current calendar year as to which a certificate or opinion of an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert has not previously been furnished; but such a certificate of an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert shall not be required with respect to any securities so deposited, if the fair value thereof to such obligor as set forth in the certificate or opinion required by this paragraph is less than $25,000 or less than 1 percent of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding; and

"(3) requiring the obligor upon the indenture securities to furnish to the indenture trustee a certificate or opinion of an engineer, appraiser, or other expert as to the fair value to such obligor of any property the subjection of which to the lien of the indenture is to be made the basis for the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, the withdrawal of cash constituting a part of the trust estate, or the release of property or securities subject to the lien of the indenture, and requiring further that if

"(A) within 6 months prior to the date of acquisition thereof by such obligor, such property has been used or operated, by a person or persons other than such obligor, in a business similar to that in which it has been or is to be used or operated by such obligor, and

"(B) the fair value to such obligor of such property as set forth in such certificate or opinion is not less than $25,000 and not less than 1 percent of the aggregate principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding."

such certificate or opinion shall be made by an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert and, in the case of the authentication and delivery of indenture securities, shall cover the fair value to the obligor of any property so used or operated which has been so subjected to the lien of the indenture since the commencement of the then current calendar year, and as to which a certificate or opinion of an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert has not previously been furnished.

If the indenture to be qualified so provides, any such certificate or opinion may be made by an officer or employee of the obligor upon the indenture securities who is specified in the indenture, except in cases in which this subsection requires that such certificate or opinion be made by an independent person. In such cases, such certificate or opinion shall be made by an independent engineer, appraiser, or other expert selected or approved by the indenture trustee in the exercise of reasonable care.

"Recitals as to Basis of Certificate or Opinion

"(e) Each certificate or opinion with respect to compliance with a condition or covenant provided for in the indenture shall include (1) a statement that the person making such certificate or opinion has read such covenant or condition; (2) a brief statement as to the nature and scope of the examination or investigation upon which the statements or opinions contained in such certificate or opinion are based; (3) a statement that, in the opinion of such person, he has made such examination or investigation as is necessary to enable him to express an informed opinion as to whether or not such covenant or condition has been complied with; and (4) a statement as to whether or not, in the opinion of such person, such condition or covenant has been complied with.

"Parties May Provide for Additional Evidence

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed either as requiring the inclusion in the indenture to be qualified of provisions that the obligor upon the indenture securities shall furnish to the indenture trustee any other evidence of compliance with the conditions and covenants provided for in the indenture than the evidence specified in this section, or as preventing the inclusion of such provisions in such indenture, if the parties so agree.

"DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITY OF THE TRUSTEE

"Duties Prior to Default

"SEC. 315. (a) The indenture to be qualified may provide that, prior to default (as such term is defined in such indenture)—

"(1) the indenture trustee shall not be liable except for the performance of such duties as are specifically set out in such indenture; and

"(2) the indenture trustee may conclusively rely, as to the truth of the statements and the correctness of the opinions expressed therein, in the absence of bad faith on the part of such trustee, upon certificates or opinions conforming to the requirements of the indenture;"

but such indenture shall contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to examine the evidence furnished to it pursuant to section 314 to determine whether or not such evidence conforms to the requirements of the indenture.

"Notice of Defaults

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to give to the indenture security holders, in the manner and to the extent provided in subsection

(c) of section 313, notice of all defaults known to the trustee, within 90 days after the occurrence thereof: Provided, That such indenture may provide that, except in the case of default in the payment of the principal of or interest on any indenture security, or in the payment of any sinking or purchase fund installment, the trustee shall be protected in withholding such notice if and so long as the board of directors, the executive committee, or a trust committee of directors and/or responsible officers, of the trustee in good faith determine that the withholding of such notice is in the interests of the indenture security holders.

"Duties of the Trustee in Case of Default

"(c) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions requiring the indenture trustee to exercise in case of default (as such term is defined in such indenture) such of the rights and powers vested in it by such indenture, and to use the same degree of care and skill in their exercise, as a prudent man would exercise or use under the circumstances in the conduct of his own affairs.

"Responsibility of the Trustee

"(d) The indenture to be qualified shall not contain any provisions relieving the indenture trustee from liability for its own negligent action, its own negligent failure to act, or its own willful misconduct, except that—

"(1) such indenture may contain the provisions authorized by paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) of this section;

"(2) such indenture may contain provisions protecting the indenture trustee from liability for any error of judgment made in good faith by a responsible officer or officers of such trustee, unless it shall be proved that such trustee was negligent in ascertaining the pertinent facts; and

"(3) such indenture may contain provisions protecting the indenture trustee with respect to any action taken or omitted to be taken by it in good faith in accordance with the direction of the holders of not less than a majority in principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding (determined as provided in subsection (a) of section 316) relating to the time, method, and place of conducting any proceeding for any remedy available to such trustee, or exercising any trust or power conferred upon such trustee, under such indenture.

"Undertaking for Costs

"(e) The indenture to be qualified may contain provisions to the effect that all parties thereto, including the indenture security holders, agree that the court may in its discretion require, in any suit for the enforcement of any right or remedy under such indenture, or in any suit against the trustee for any action taken or omitted by it as trustee, the filing by any party litigant in such suit of an undertaking to pay the costs of such suit, and that such court may in its discretion assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against any party litigant in such suit, having due regard to the merits and good faith of the claims or defenses made by such party litigant: Provided, That the provisions of this subsection shall not apply to any suit instituted by such trustee, to any suit instituted by any indenture security holder, or group of indenture security holders, holding in the aggregate more than 10 percent in principal amount of the indenture securities outstanding or to any suit instituted by any indenture security holder for the enforcement of the payment of the principal of or interest on any indenture security on or after the respective due dates expressed in such indenture security.

"DIRECTIONS AND WAIVERS BY BONDHOLDERS; PROHIBITION OF IMPAIRMENT OF HOLDER'S RIGHT TO PAYMENT

"SEC. 316. (a) The indenture to be qualified may contain provisions—

"(1) authorizing the holders of not less than a majority in principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding (A) to direct the time, method, and place of conducting any proceeding for any remedy available to such trustee or exercising any trust or power conferred upon such trustee under such indenture or (B) on behalf of the holders of all such indenture securities to consent to the waiver of any past default and its consequences; or

"(2) authorizing the holders of not less than 75 percent in principal amount of the indenture securities at the time outstanding to consent on behalf of the holders of all such indenture securities to the postponement of any interest payment for a period not exceeding 3 years from its due date."

For the purposes of this subsection and paragraph (3) of subsection (d) of section 315, in determining whether the holders of the required principal amount of indenture securities have concurred in any such direction or consent, indenture securities owned by any obligor upon the indenture securities, or by any person directly or indirectly controlling or controlled by or under direct or indirect common control with any such obligor, shall be disregarded, except that for the purposes of determining whether the indenture trustee shall be protected in relying on any such direction or consent, only indenture securities which such trustee knows are so owned shall be so disregarded.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that, notwithstanding any other provision thereof, the right of any holder of any indenture security to receive payment of the principal of and interest on such indenture security, on or after the respective due dates expressed in such indenture security, or to institute suit for the enforcement of any such payment on or after such respective dates, shall not be impaired or affected without the consent of such holder, except as to a postponement of an interest payment consented to as provided in paragraph (2) of subsection (a), and except that such indenture may contain provisions limiting or denying the right of any such holder to institute any such suit, if and to the extent that the institution or prosecution thereof or the entry of judgment therein would, under applicable law, result in the surrender, impairment, waiver, or loss of the lien of such indenture upon any property subject to such lien.

"SPECIAL POWERS OF TRUSTEE; DUTIES OF PAYING AGENTS

"SEC. 317. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall contain provisions—

"(1) authorizing the indenture trustee, in the case of a default in payment of the principal of any indenture security, when and as the same shall become due and payable, or in the case of a default in payment of the interest on any such security, when and as the same shall become due and payable and the continuance of such default for such period as may be prescribed in such indenture, to recover judgment, in its own name and as trustee of an express trust, against the obligor upon the indenture securities for the whole amount of such principal and interest remaining unpaid; and

"(2) Authorizing such trustee to file such proofs of claim and other papers or documents as may be necessary or advisable in order to have the claims of such trustee and of the indenture security holders allowed in any judicial proceedings relative to the obligor upon the indenture securities, its creditors, or its property.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that each paying agent shall hold in trust for the benefit of the indenture security holders or the indenture trustee all sums held by such paying agent for the payment of the principal of or interest on the indenture securities, and shall give to such trustee notice of any default by any obligor upon the indenture securities in the making of any such payment.

"EFFECT OF PRESCRIBED INDENTURE PROVISIONS

"SEC. 318. (a) The indenture to be qualified shall provide that if any provision thereof limits, qualifies, or conflicts with another provision which is required to be included in such indenture by any of sections 310 to 317, inclusive, such required provision shall control.

"(b) The indenture to be qualified may contain, in addition to provisions specifically authorized under this title to be included therein, any other provisions the inclusion of which is not in contravention of any provision of this title.

"RULES, REGULATIONS, AND ORDERS

"SEC. 319. (a) The Commission shall have authority from time to time to make, issue, amend, and rescind such rules and regulations and such orders as it may deem necessary or appropriate in the public interest or for the protection of investors to carry out the provisions of this title, including rules and regulations defining accounting, technical, and trade terms used in this title. Among other things, the Commission shall have authority, (1) by rules and regulations, to prescribe for the purposes of section 310 (b) the method (to be fixed in indentures to be qualified under this title) of calculating percentages of voting securities and other securities; (2) by rules and regulations, to prescribe the definitions of the terms 'cash transaction' and 'self-liquidating paper' which shall be included in indentures to be qualified under this title, which definitions shall include such of the creditor relationships referred to in paragraphs (4) and (6) of subsection (b) of section 311 as to which the Commission determines that the application of subsection (a) of such section is not necessary in the public interest or for the protection of investors, having due regard for the purposes of such subsection; and (3) for the purposes of this title, to prescribe the form or forms in which information required in any statement, application, report, or other document filed with the Commission shall be set forth. For the purpose of its rules or regulations the Commission may classify persons, securities, indentures, and other matters within its jurisdiction and prescribe different requirements for different classes of persons, securities, indentures, or matters.

"(b) Subject to the provisions of the Federal Register Act and regulations prescribed under the authority thereof, the rules and regulations of the Commission under this title shall be effective upon publication in the manner which the Commission shall prescribe, or upon such later date as may be provided in such rules and regulations.

"(c) No provision of this title imposing any liability shall apply to any act done or omitted in good faith in conformity with any rule, regulation, or order of the Commission, notwithstanding that such rule, regulation, or order may, after such act or omission, be amended or rescinded or be determined by judicial or other authority to be invalid for any reason.

"HEARINGS BY COMMISSION

"SEC. 320. Hearings may be public and may be held before the Commission, any member or members thereof, or any officer or officers of the Commission designated by it, and appropriate records thereof shall be kept.

"SPECIAL POWERS OF THE COMMISSION

"SEC. 321. (a) For the purpose of any investigation or any other proceeding which, in the opinion of the Commission, is necessary and proper for the enforcement of this title, any member of the Commission, or any officer thereof designated by it, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena witnesses, compel their attendance, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records which the Commission deems relevant or material to the inquiry. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such books, papers, correspondence, memoranda, contracts, agreements, or other records may be required from any place in the United States or in any Territory at any designated place of investigation or hearing. In addition, the Commission shall have the powers with respect to investigations and hearings, and with respect to the enforcement of, and offenses and violations under, this title and rules and regulations and orders prescribed under the authority thereof, provided in sections 20, 22 (b), and 22 (c) of the Securities Act of 1933.

"(b) The Treasury Department, the Comptroller of the Currency, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Federal Reserve banks, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation are hereby authorized, under such conditions as they may prescribe, to make available to the Commission such reports, records, or other information as they may have available with respect to trustees or prospective trustees under indentures qualified or to be qualified under this title, and to make through their examiners or other employees, for the use of the Commission, examinations of such trustees or prospective trustees. Every such trustee or prospective trustee shall, as a condition precedent to qualification of such indenture, consent that reports of examinations by Federal, State, Territorial, or District authorities may be furnished by such authorities to the Commission upon request therefor.

"Notwithstanding any provision of this title, no report, record, or other information made available to the Commission under this subsection, no report of an examination made under this subsection for the use of the Commission, no report of an examination made of any trustee or prospective trustee by any Federal, State, Territorial, or District authority having jurisdiction to examine or supervise such trustee, no report made by any such trustee or prospective trustee to any such authority, and no correspondence between any such authority and any such trustee or prospective trustee, shall be divulged or made known or available by the Commission or any member, officer, agent, or employee thereof, to any person other than a member, officer, agent, or employee of the Commission: Provided, That the Commission may make available to the Attorney General of the United States, in confidence, any information obtained from such records, reports of examination, other reports, or correspondence, and deemed necessary by the Commission, or requested by him, for the purpose of enabling him to perform his duties under this title.

"(c) Any investigation of a prospective trustee, or any proceeding or requirement for the purpose of obtaining information regarding a prospective trustee, under any provision of this title, shall be limited—

"(1) to determining whether such prospective trustee is qualified to act as trustee under the provisions of subsection (b) of section 310;

"(2) to requiring the inclusion in the registration statement or application of information with respect to the eligibility of such prospective trustee under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) of such section 310; and

"(3) to requiring the inclusion in the registration statement or application of the most recent published report of condition of such prospective trustee, as described in paragraph (2) of such subsection (a), or, if the indenture does not contain the provision with respect to combined capital and surplus authorized by the last sentence of paragraph (2) of subsection (a) of such section 310, to determining whether such prospective trustee is eligible to act as such under such paragraph (2).

"(d) The provisions of section 4 (b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 shall be applicable with respect to the power of the Commission to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers, attorneys, examiners, and other experts, and such other officers and employees, as may be necessary for carrying out its functions under this title.

"COURT REVIEW OF ORDERS; JURISDICTION OF OFFENSES AND SUITS

"SEC. 322. (a) Orders of the Commission under this title (including orders pursuant to the provisions of sections 305 (b) and 307 (c)) shall be subject to review in the same manner, upon the same conditions, and to the same extent, as provided in section 9 of the Securities Act of 1933, with respect to orders of the Commission under such act.

"(b) Jurisdiction of offenses and violations under, and jurisdiction and venue of suits and actions brought to enforce any liability created by, this title, or any rules or regulations or orders prescribed under the authority thereof, shall be as provided in section 22 (a) of the Securities Act of 1933.

"LIABILITY FOR MISLEADING STATEMENTS

"SEC. 323. (a) Any person who shall make or cause to be made any statement in any application, report, or document filed with the Commission pursuant to any provisions of this title, or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, which statement was at the time and in the light of the circumstances under which it was made false or misleading with respect to any material fact, or who shall omit to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall be liable to any person (not knowing that such statement was false or misleading or of such omission) who, in reliance upon such statement or omission, shall have purchased or sold a security issued under the indenture to which such application, report, or document relates, for damages caused by such reliance, unless the person sued shall prove that he acted in good faith and had no knowledge that such statement was false or misleading or of such omission. A person seeking to enforce such liability may sue at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction. In any such suit the court may, in its discretion, require an undertaking for the payment of the costs of such suit and assess reasonable costs, including reasonable attorneys' fees, against either party litigant, having due regard to the merits and good faith of the suit or defense. No action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under this section unless brought within 1 year after the discovery of the facts constituting the cause of action and within 3 years after such cause of action accrued.

"(b) The rights and remedies provided by this title shall be in addition to any and all other rights and remedies that may exist under the Securities Act of 1933, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, or otherwise at law or in equity; but no person permitted to maintain a suit for damages under the provisions of this title shall recover, through satisfaction of judgment in one or more actions, a total amount in excess of his actual damages on account of the act complained of.

"UNLAWFUL REPRESENTATIONS

"SEC. 324. It shall be unlawful for any person in issuing or selling any security to represent or imply in any manner whatsoever that any action or failure to act by the Commission in the administration of this title means that the Commission has in any way passed upon the merits of, or given approval to, any trustee, indenture or security, or any transaction or transactions therein, or that any such action or failure to act with regard to any statement or report filed with or examined by the Commission pursuant to this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, has the effect of a finding by the Commission that such statement or report is true and accurate on its face or that it is not false or misleading.

"PENALTIES

"SEC. 325. Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, or any person who willfully, in any application, report, or document filed or required to be filed under the provisions of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder, makes any untrue statement of a material fact or omits to state any material fact required to be stated therein or necessary to make the statements therein not misleading, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

"EFFECT ON EXISTING LAW

"SEC. 326. Except as otherwise expressly provided, nothing in this title shall affect (1) the jurisdiction of the Commission under the Securities Act of 1933, or the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, or the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, over any person, security, or contract, or (2) the rights, obligations, duties, or liabilities of any person under such acts; nor shall anything in this title affect the jurisdiction of any other commission, board, agency, or officer of the United States or of any State or political subdivision of any State, over any person or security, insofar as such jurisdiction does not conflict with any provision of this title or any rule, regulation, or order thereunder.

"CONTRARY STIPULATIONS VOID

"SEC. 327. Any condition, stipulation, or provision binding any person to waive compliance with any provision of this title or with any rule, regulation, or order thereunder shall be void.

"SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

"SEC. 328. If any provision of this title or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the remainder of the title and the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid shall not be affected thereby."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the changes made by the House amendment are more or less of a technical, clerical, and clarifying nature. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF WRITING OF THE STAR-SPANGLED BANNER

Mr. BARKLEY. From the Committee on the Library, I report back favorably Senate Joint Resolution 176 and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be read by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 176) providing for participation by the United States in the celebration to be held at Fort McHenry on September 14, 1939, in celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the writing of The Star-Spangled Banner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That, for the purpose of providing for participation by the United States in the celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the writing of The Star-Spangled Banner, there is hereby established a commission to be composed of the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the United States Senators from the State of Maryland, three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, the Members of the House of Representatives from the State of Maryland, three Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Governor of Maryland, the mayor of the city of Baltimore, and three persons to be appointed by the President of the United States. It shall be the duty of such commission to formulate and carry out plans for participation by the United States in the celebration to be held at Fort McHenry on September 14, 1939, in commemoration of such anniversary. The members of such commission shall serve without compensation and shall select a chairman from among their number.

SEC. 2. The commission is authorized to make such expenditures for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the first section of this joint resolution as it may deem advisable. Expenditures of the commission shall be paid upon the presentation of vouchers approved by the chairman of the commission.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $5,000 to be expended by the commission for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the first section of this joint resolution.

SEC. 4. The President is authorized to extend invitations to foreign governments to be represented by their accredited diplomatic agents at the celebration to be held at Fort McHenry on September 14, 1939, in commemoration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the writing of The Star-Spangled Banner: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted by the United States for expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with such invitation.

AUTHORITY TO COMMITTEES TO REPORT BILLS, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that during the recess of the Senate following today's session committees may have authority to make reports on bills, resolutions, and nominations; that the Vice President may be authorized to sign bills ready for his signature; and that the Secretary of the Senate may be authorized to receive messages from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ANDREWS in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting several nominations of United States attorneys, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Walter Bragg Smith, of Alabama, to be United States marshal for the middle district of Alabama.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion, and citizens for appointment as officers, in the Marine Corps.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment or promotion in the Regular Army as follows: Reserve officers for appointment as first lieutenants in the Medical Corps, first lieutenants of the Dental Corps Reserve to be first lieutenants in the Dental Corps, and several officers to temporary rank in the Air Corps, under the provisions of law.

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CONSIDERATION OF PANAMA TREATY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say for the information of the Senate that there are on the calendar many treaties, some of which will require some little discussion, but most of them are formal. The treaty with Panama may take 30 minutes or an hour, and we have an understanding that we will take that treaty up at 4 o'clock on Monday in order to accommodate the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. Some day next week I hope we may devote sufficient time to the treaties so that all of them may be disposed of before we adjourn.

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frederick V. Follmer to be United States attorney for the middle district of Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS REJECTED

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Welch to be postmaster at Deerfield, Ill.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I notice that the first two nominations of postmasters on the calendar have been adversely reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of John J. Welch?

The nomination was rejected.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Raymond A. Kennedy to be postmaster at Libertyville, Ill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

The nomination was rejected.

POSTMASTERS—NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the other nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

TREATIES

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are a number of treaties on the calendar which have been on the calendar for some time. The Committee on Foreign Relations have been very patient in seeking an executive session to have these matters considered, but they have gone over because there has been before the Senate important legislation which required action of both Houses, and the treaties require action by the Senate only.

The majority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], has already announced that at 4 o'clock Monday the Senate will go into executive session and take up, first, the Panama treaty and convention. We have postponed consideration of that from yesterday and from today out of courtesy to one of the Senators, but I must insist, so far as I am able to do so, that the Senate dispose of the treaties as rapidly as possible, and particularly the general Panama treaty and convention.

The Panama treaty has been pending in the Committee on Foreign Relations for 3 years. We have had numerous hearings on it, and at last all of the controversial questions, in my opinion, have been satisfactorily settled by correspondence between the Governments of the United States and Panama. The committee was unanimously favorable to the treaty, with the exception of one vote. Last year a very able subcommittee, composed of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], reported favorably upon the treaty.

I must insist that we finish the consideration of that treaty before final adjournment.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am interested in the copyright treaty, which I think has been referred to the able Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I do not care to have that treaty taken up immediately, but I desire to confer with the Senator from Utah prior to its consideration.

Mr. PITTMAN. A different situation exists with regard to that treaty. The treaty was reported to the Senate at the session of Congress before the last one, and was ratified by the Senate. Then former Senator Ryan Duffy, of Wisconsin, who had charge of the treaty, came in and stated there was an understanding with certain groups who were then opposed to the treaty that they were entitled to domestic legislation at the same time the treaty was ratified. They have since agreed on the domestic legislation they desire. The Committee on Education and Labor has considered it and reported it to the Senate. Therefore, the agreement has been kept with regard to the legislation. The various groups which have opposed the treaty have been against it on the ground that they could not agree on the domestic legislation. I think the treaty should be considered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the view of the Senator that we should consider the treaty at this time?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think we should.

Mr. McNARY. I will meet that issue when it comes before us.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are several radio treaties on the calendar which I think are of great importance to the United States. One is the treaty of Cairo, which is in charge of the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE]. There is another radio treaty, one between the United States and countries of Central America, which is of vast importance. And there is still another radio treaty on the calendar.

The only member of the Foreign Relations Committee who thoroughly understands this subject, if I may be so bold as to so state, is the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who has attended the conventions, and who is prepared to take up the three treaties. I hope we may reach those also on Monday.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. There are two communications treaties, to which the Senator from Nevada has referred, with which I am generally familiar. They are of great interest to our State Department and to other departments of our Government, and to the communications interests of the United States, and, so far as my knowledge goes, no interest in the United States and no individual in the United States has ever voiced opposition of any sort or character to the treaties. I wonder whether those treaties, to which there is no objection, might not be disposed of at this time. If they should provoke discussion, probably they should go over, but if there is no disposition to oppose them in any respect, I wonder whether they could not be disposed of. I have particular reference to Calendar No. 3 and Calendar No. 17.

Mr. PITTMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the two treaties at the present time?

Mr. BRIDGES. What are the two treaties?

Mr. WHITE. Calendar No. 3 is the treaty which was signed at Cairo last year and which revises the rules with respect to international radio communication. As I have stated, it has the sanction of every department of the Government of the United States; I think it has the approval of all the communications interests of the United States, and so far as my knowledge goes, and in saying this I am merely repeating, not a person or interest in the United States has ever voiced opposition to it or to any provision of it.

REVISION OF GENERAL RADIO REGULATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the first treaty referred to by the Senator from Maine?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive B (76th Cong., 1st sess.), the revision of the general radio regulations annexed to the International Telecommunications Convention, signed at Madrid on December 9, 1932, adopted on April 8, 1938, by the International Telecommunication Conferences which convened at Cairo, Egypt, on February 1, 1938, to revise these regulations, the additional radio regulations and the telephone and telegraph regulations also annexed to the Madrid Convention, and a certified copy of the final protocol, with the reservations made by certain governments, which was read the second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The revision is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the revision will be reported to the Senate.

The revision was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive B, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a revision of the General Radio Regulations annexed to the International Telecommunications Convention, signed at Madrid on December 9, 1932, adopted on April 8, 1938, by the International Telecommunication Conferences which convened at Cairo, Egypt, on February 1, 1938, to revise these regulations, the additional radio regulations and the telephone and telegraph regulations also annexed to the Madrid Convention, and the final protocol, with the reservations made by certain governments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. (Putting the question.) Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the revision is ratified.

REGIONAL RADIO CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES, PANAMA, AND COUNTRIES OF CENTRAL AMERICA

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, with the approval of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, I suggest that we dispose also of Calendar No. 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the convention, Executive J (76th Cong., 1st sess.), a regional radio convention for Central America, Panama, and the Canal Zone, signed at the Regional Radio Conference for Central America, Panama, and the Canal Zone, at Guatemala City on December 8, 1938, which was read the second time, as follows:

REGIONAL RADIO CONVENTION FOR CENTRAL AMERICA, PANAMA AND THE CANAL ZONE, SIGNED IN THE CITY OF GUATEMALA, DECEMBER EIGHTH, ONE THOUSAND NINE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-EIGHT

The undersigned, representatives of the Governments of Costa Rica, El Salvador, The United States of America in behalf of the Canal Zone, Guatemala, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panamá, after examination of their credentials, which were found to be in correct and proper form, constitute the Regional Radio Conference of Central America, Panamá and the Canal Zone, as follows:

For the Republic of Costa Rica:
His Excellency Rafael Castro Quezada;
For the Republic of El Salvador:
Messrs. J. Federico Mejía, and Fidel Villacorta;
For the United States of America:
His Excellency Fay Allen Des Portes;
Mr. Harvey B. Otterman;
Lt.-Col. David M. Crawford, U. S. A.;
Lt.-Cmdr. M. W. Arps, U. S. N.;
Messrs. Gerald C. Gross, and Walter H. McKinney;
For the Republic of Guatemala:
Messrs. Luis Schlesinger Carrera;
Arturo Peralta;
Jorge F. Sánchez;
Ramiro Fernández;
J. B. McElroy;
Walter C. Bay;
For the Republic of Honduras:
His Excellency Luciano Milla Cisneros;
For the Republic of Nicaragua:
His Excellency Hildebrando Castellón;
Mr. H. J. Phillips, Jr.;
For the Republic of Panamá:
The Honorable Teodoro Rudeke;

who by common consent, and subject to the ratification of the respective Governments, have concluded in the City of Guatemala, this eighth day of December, one thousand, nine hundred and thirty-eight, the following Convention, in accordance with the provisions of Article 7, Paragraph 8, Section 1, Sub-section 3, Division b) and c) of the General Radio Regulations of Cairo, 1938, annexed to the International Telecommunications Convention of Madrid, 1932:

PART ONE

Allocations

In view of the special requirements of the several states of Central America, Panamá and the Canal Zone with respect to broadcasting, there is established, in the radio frequency band of 2300 kc. to 2400 kc. the following allocation table:

Administrations	Frequencies in kilocycles
	Primary	Secondary
Costa Rica	2330	2370
El Salvador	2300	2360
Guatemala	2320	2400
Honduras	2380	2340
Nicaragua	2350	2400
Panama	2310	2340
The Canal Zone	2390	2370

PART TWO

Engineering Principles

The following basic engineering principles have been adopted in order to arrive at the allocations above specified:

a) The primary frequency assignments to contiguous administrations must be at least twenty (20) kilocycles apart;

b) The primary and secondary assignments to the same administration must be at least twenty (20) kilocycles apart;

c) The secondary assignments to contiguous administrations should be separated by at least twenty (20) kilocycles, but when necessary secondary assignments to contiguous countries may be only ten (10) kilocycles apart;

d) All broadcast frequency assignments shall end in zero;

e) The power of primary stations and the types of the antennae must bo so chosen as to comply with the provisions of Article 7, paragraph 8, Section I, Subsection 3, division b) of the General Radio Regulations of Cairo, 1938.

The power of secondary stations is limited to two hundred and fifty (250) watts;

f) All broadcasting stations must comply with the requirements for broadcasting stations as contained in the tolerance table in Appendix I of the General Radio Regulations of Cairo, 1938;

g) Frequencies ending in zero and not assigned as primary frequencies may also be used for tertiary broadcasting on a non-interfering basis. Such use must be modified or discontinued immediately upon notice of interference from the government having priority on the frequency concerned.

PART THREE

Legal Principles

The distribution contained in this Convention is based on the following legal principles:

a) The participating governments consider that this convention has the character of a regional agreement;

b) The governments agree that the band 2300 to 2350 kilocycles is assigned exclusively for broadcasting in Central America and Panamá, subject to no interference by any other services in this region.

In this connection, it is agreed that, in time of peace, the military services of land, maritime, or air forces of the United States of America operating in the vicinity of the Panamá Canal Zone will not interfere on channels assigned for broadcasting to the Governments of Central America and Panamá in this band;

c) In order to provide a separate, primary broadcast channel for each of the seven Governments represented at this Conference, with no secondary broadcast channel on the primary channel, it is agreed that the frequency of 2380 kilocycles be assigned to Honduras as a primary broadcast channel, and it is agreed by all governments represented that the assignment to Honduras of a primary frequency in the band 2350 to 2400 kilocycles does not establish a precedent nor limit in any way whatever rights may be held by the United States of America to the use of frequencies in the band 2350 to 2400 kilocycles subject to non-interference from broadcasting stations in Central America and Panamá in accordance with the General Radio Regulations of Cairo, 1938.

However, the Government of the United States agrees that, insofar as practicable its use in the geographical area covered by this Conference of frequencies other than those now in use in the band 2350 to 2400 kilocycles and furnished to the Conference will be on a basis of non-interference to broadcasting in Central America and Panamá.

PART FOUR

General Provisions

a) During the time this Convention is in force, each Government agrees not to use any primary channel assigned to any of the other contracting Governments, except as provided elsewhere in this Convention;

b) The participating Governments acknowledge the right of the military services to use the band of 2300 kilocycles to 2400 kilocycles for military purposes, subject to the provisions and restrictions of paragraphs b) and c), Part Three, of this Convention;

c) The present Convention shall be ratified by the contracting Governments in conformity with their respective constitutional procedures;

d) The ratifications shall be deposited with the Ministry of Foreign Relations of the Government of Guatemala, which shall notify such ratifications, as soon as possible, to the Governments concerned;

e) The present Convention shall become effective, as between the ratifying Governments, thirty days after instruments of ratification have been deposited by at least two of them, with the Ministry of Foreign Relations of the Government of Guatemala;

f) The present Convention may be denounced by notification addressed to the depository Government, which shall become effective as regards the denouncing Government one year after the date of receipt thereof.

The depository Government shall notify all participating Governments, including the denouncing Government, of the denunciations received;

g) The present Convention is drafted in Spanish and English and both texts shall have equal force;

h) The participating Governments recognize that, in spite of the efforts which have been made to arrive at a satisfactory agreement, it is impossible to assure, without actual operation, the completely effective functioning of this agreement, and provision is accordingly made for its revision. Such revision may be made by a future Conference called by a majority of the Governments which have ratified this Convention;

i) Nothing in this agreement shall be construed as precluding the consummation by the United States of America, of other radio agreements concerning the defense of the Canal Zone.

Done in the City of Guatemala, Republic of Guatemala, on the eighth day of December, in the year One Thousand, Nine Hundred and Thirty-eight.

Costa Rica:
R. Castro Q.

El Salvador:
J. Frederico Mejía.
Fidel Villacorta.

United States of America, in behalf of the Canal Zone:
Fay Allen Des Portes.
Harvey B. Otterman.
D. M. Crawford.
M. W. Arps.
Gerald C. Gross.

Guatemala:
L. Schlesinger Carrera.
J. F. Sánchez.
J. B. McElroy.

Ramiro Fernández.
Walter C. Bay.

Honduras (con los reservas consignadas en el Acta Final [1]):
L. Milla Cisneros.

Nicaragua:
H. Castellón.
H. J. Phillips, Jr.

Panamá:
Teodoro Rudeke.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The convention is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the convention will be reported to the Senate.

The convention was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive J, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, a regional radio convention for Central America, Panama, and the Canal Zone signed at the Regional Radio Conference for Central America, Panama, and the Canal Zone at Guatemala City on December 8, 1938.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the convention is ratified.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there are several other treaties on the calendar, but I will not ask that they be taken up now, although they are merely pro forma matters, treaties of extradition, and so forth.

RECOGNITION OF THE SERVICES OF PANAMA CANAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed legislative session.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, there is on the calendar Senate bill 1162, to provide for the recognition of the services of the civilian employees and officials, citizens of the United States, who were engaged in the construction of the Panama Canal. The bill contemplates a provision for recognition of the services of those employees by granting to them certain annuities. It has been on the calendar for several months with a favorable report from the Committee on Interoceanic Canals of the Senate.

[1] Translation: With the reservations stated in the Final Act. For reservations made by Honduras, see report of the Secretary of State.

I believe a similar House bill has had a favorable report by the appropriate House committee and is on the House calendar. I have deferred from time to time to other bills until I feel that an injustice has been done to this proposed legislation. So I give notice that in the early part of next week I shall call the bill up and insist upon its consideration, if I may.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, July 24, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JULY 21, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Heavenly Father, Giver of all good things in heaven and earth, we beseech Thee to bestow upon us blessings of purity of mind, rest of body, and guidance in all our labors. Grant that without sound, that the temples of our souls may arise with spiritual windows towering out of time.

Lead us to help others who may be in the shadow and gloom of failure and disappointment; pity the heavy-laden, the downtrodden, and the weary. May no temptation assail and no barrier of security be broken down to weaken their courage and resistance. In our comfort, the Lord help us to remember the poor who suffer from the sting of wintry winds and the blight of summer diseases. In the tendencies of our natures may there be more consecrated realms where purity rules and where self-renunciation is the crown of honor. With deep gratitude pulsating in our breasts, may we go on befriended, soothed, and deathlessly nourished by life, which is the ever-present goodness of God. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ATTENDANCE OF UNITED STATES NAVAL ACADEMY BAND AT NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR, ON MARYLAND DAY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 2805) to authorize the attendance of the United States Naval Academy Band at the New York World's Fair on the day designated as Maryland Day at such fair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the band of the United States Naval Academy to attend and give concerts, without expense to the United States, at the New York World's Fair on July 28, 1939, which has been designated as Maryland Day at such fair.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A House bill was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from our former colleague, Mr. John J. O'Connor, to another former colleague, Mr. Edgar Howard, of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on two subjects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL AID TO STATE OR TERRITORIAL HOMES FOR SUPPORT OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4647) to increase the amount of Federal aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the amendment?

Mr. FADDIS. This is a bill that was passed by the House increasing the Federal aid to State soldiers' homes for care of veterans and where the Federal aid was increased from $120 to $240 a year. It went to the Senate, and the Senate put in one amendment to take care of a regulation that the Veterans' Bureau had enacted, and they put in another amendment by which they prevented any back pay or accumulation of back pay before they were put under the care of the Administration.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this will be a great help to the States, will it not?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes, indeed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. As well as the veterans.

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. IZAC. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state whether we are going to accede to the Senate amendment or are we going to insist?

Mr. FADDIS. I want to concur in the Senate amendment, as it is acceptable to the committee.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does that include Pennsylvania?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. The State Soldiers' Home at Erie?

Mr. FADDIS. Yes; all State homes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The clerk read the Senate amendment as follows:

Line 13, after "enacted" insert: ": Provided, That said payments shall be made regardless of whether said veteran may be receiving domiciliary care or hospitalization in said home and the appropriations of the Veterans' Administration for medical, hospital, and domiciliary care shall be available for this purpose: Provided further, That no payment to a State or Territory under this act shall be made for any period prior to the date upon which the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs determines that the veteran on whose account such payment is requested is eligible for such care in a Veterans' Administration facility."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendments were concurred in.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from Claude Babcock protesting against the passage of H. R. 960, extending the Federal civil service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I do this to direct the attention of Members of the House to a statement of the Guaranty Survey showing the rising Government debt, and some of its consequences in this country, particularly with reference to the amount of taxes called for from business, and the effect it is having on confidence and business. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include this statement from the Guaranty Trust Co.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 188) to provide for an Administrator of United States Courts, and for other purposes, with a House amendment, to insist upon such amendment, and agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 188, with a House amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment, and agree to a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman tell us about this?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill provides machinery to expedite the handling of cases in the various Federal district courts. It sets up an administrator under the supervision of the Attorney General to watch these cases and see to it that the dockets are cleared, so that there will be a complete expedition in the handling of all of these cases.

Some amendments have been made by the House to the Senate bill, and we would like to straighten that matter out.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman know that this matter was under consideration in the House here about 30 days ago, and that after long hearings on the part of the Committee on Appropriations it was decided that the Attorney General should exercise some measure of control over the probation officers and that this House amendment completely negatives the House and Senate action on the subject?

Mr. CELLER. I do not think it is exactly as stated. The bill primarily is not a probation bill. We did, however, make changes and repealed a small portion of an appropriation bill which contained straight legislation concerning probation officers.

Mr. RABAUT. I call the gentleman's attention to the following on page 7 of the amendment:

SEC. 309. The following quoted provision of the act making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the Department of Commerce (H. R. 6392) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, approved June 29, 1939, Public Act No. 156, Seventy-sixth Congress, first session, to wit: "That no part of this appropriation shall be used to defray the salary or expenses of any probation officer whose work fails to comply with the official orders, regulations, and probation standards promulgated by the Attorney General: Provided further, That no funds herein appropriated shall be used to defray the salary or expenses of any probation officer unless the district judge shall have so far as possible required the appointee to conform with the qualifications prescribed by the Attorney General: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to abridge the right of the district judges to appoint probation officers, or to make such orders as may be necessary to govern probation officers in their own courts"— is hereby repealed.

And here is what is added—

Mr. CELLER. What is the gentleman's attitude; what does the gentleman wish done?

Mr. RABAUT. I do not think this repeal should be here at all.

Mr. CELLER. We will be very glad to take that into consideration when the conferees meet.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. But we want an assurance from the gentleman when he goes to conference that the conferees will see that the provision which has been inserted in this bill is stricken out.

Mr. CELLER. Of course, I cannot speak for the other conferees, who would be the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE]. I cannot tell what their attitude will be, but I am sure that they will take into consideration what the gentleman says. As far as I am concerned I shall be very glad to take it into consideration.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I spoke to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] about the matter yesterday, as well as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CHANDLER], members of the gentleman's committee whom I assumed would be members of the conference committee, and while I cannot speak for those gentlemen, they are here, and I would like to have them give us some expression as to this matter of probation officers.

Mr. CELLER. As fas as I am concerned, I may say that I have always had the highest regard for the point of view of the gentleman from South Carolina as well as for the point of view of the gentleman from Michigan, and I shall take into consideration everything the gentleman says and endeavor to bring about what they desire.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The point is, Mr. Speaker, that this matter was brought up under suspension of the rules last Monday, at which time the House membership was not advised that this provision was in this bill. I say in deference to my friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS], a member of the gentleman's committee, that he did advise me of the action taken by the Judiciary Committee in that this provision had been reported out by the committee, but the gentleman from Alabama himself will tell the House that he did not know at the time that this provision was going to be considered under suspension of the rules. The gentleman is here and he will agree to that?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. And I say to the gentleman that in view of that situation I think the committee members of the conference committee on the part of the House ought to be in position to assure the House that no agreement will be had in connection with this provision which is in conference, but that it will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. HOBBS. I for one want to make it clear that I am not giving any such assurance. I do not think that the legislation which was engrafted upon an appropriation bill was proper. I do not believe that it was considered in the light of existing law and it was for that reason that the Judiciary Committee authorized the committee amendment. I am perfectly willing that the majority of the conferees shall rule. I have no disposition to be obdurate, but I do think that the facts and the law should be thoroughly considered by the conferees, and that they should make up their minds accordingly.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. The gentleman is aware of the fact that this question was debated at length on the floor of this House at the time the bill was under consideration, and this House voted on this very question. Notwithstanding that fact, here we are today confronted with this very provision in this bill, which was approved by the President less than 3 weeks ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]?

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to make this amendment to the gentleman's statement. I believe there is no man in this House who wants to be more fair in everything than the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. THOMAS S. MCMILLAN], but he is certainly mistaken in his latest statement. I cite the RECORD of June 23, 1939, pages 7810 to 7813, inclusive, to prove that there was no vote on any of the amendments which were in agreement, such as No. 21, the one I criticized, but only on the adoption of the conference report and the amendments in disagreement. If you will look on page 7811 of the RECORD cited supra, you will see that I did not oppose the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object for the present.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection, because I am anxious to have this matter disposed of, but I do desire to see the integrity of the House preserved. That is the whole thing. If we could get some assurance from the gentleman as he goes into conference with the Senate that we will have that assurance, then I shall not object. Otherwise I will have to.

Mr. CELLER. I will say it is quite natural for the gentleman to take the position he is now taking, in view of what his own committee has done.

Mr. THOMAS S. McMILLAN. And what the House has done, I may say.

Mr. CELLER. There is no disposition on the part of the membership to be unfair.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, the fact of this matter is that the Senate bill—S. 188—which was made the subject of the motion to suspend the rules, was not even on the House Calendar. It was still in the Judiciary Committee, and when the House bill, which was on the calendar, was added to the Senate bill by way of an amendment this repealing provision was inserted as a committee amendment. It did not even appear in the House bill. No one was on proper notice of the intention to include the repealing provision under a suspension-of-rules motion, and I do not believe the House knew what it had acted upon. Therefore, I feel obliged to object.

EMIGRATION OF CERTAIN FILIPINOS FROM THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SCHULTE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 4646) to provide means by which certain Filipinos can emigrate from the United States, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after "States", insert "or in the case of a Filipino residing in Hawaii, to a port in that Territory."

Page 2, line 16, after "States", insert "or, in the cases of residents of Hawaii, to a port in that Territory."

Page 3, line 3, after "States", insert "and in Hawaii."

Page 3, lines 8 and 9, strike out "any port on the west coast of the United States" and insert "the port of embarkation in the United States or Hawaii."

Page 4, lines 5 and 6, strike out "the United States, its Territories or possessions" and insert "any State or Territory or the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a letter from the mayor of Gloucester.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BATES of Massachusetts addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE FISCAL SITUATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I should feel very derelict in my duty if I did not call your attention to the fact that, according to the Treasury statement issued by Mr. Morgenthau, Secretary of the Treasury, on July 17 you have gone in the red at the rate of over $20,523,000 a day. That means over $14,000 a minute. You are spending that much more than you are taking in. That is an enormous sum. For every dollar we receive we spend $1.66.

WHERE ARE YOU GOING TO GET THE MONEY?

I want to call attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that there are many more bills coming on the floor of the House in the next 10 days or 2 weeks which this Congress will be asked to pass. Every one of those bills will require additional money. Eventually the taxpayers of this country will have to pay for it. Remember, Mr. Speaker, you were three and one-half billion dollars in the red from last year. You have already appropriated money to put you over $4,000,000,000 in the red this year. Be careful what you do. Watch your step. Stop ruthless expenditures. Be sensible, be sane, be prudent in your spending. You will all regret it if you do not.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short radio address delivered in my district by W. Kingsland Macy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by L. T. Stone in Cotton and Cotton Oil Prices of June 24, 1939.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present in the Chamber.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 143]

Anderson, Calif.	Cummings	Healey	Schwert
Andrews	Curley	Hendricks	Secrest
Bolton	Dies	Kelly	Seger
Boren	Ditter	Kerr	Shanley
Brewster	Eaton, Calif.	Lambertson	Smith, Maine
Buckler, Minn.	Elliott	Lemke	Smith, Ohio
Buckley, N. Y.	Evans	McLean	Sumners, Tex.
Byrne, N. Y.	Ferguson	Magnuson	Thomas, N. J.
Byron	Fernandez	Massingale	Weaver
Casey, Mass.	Fitzpatrick	Mitchell	West
Cluett	Flaherty	Norton	Whelchel
Connery	Folger	O'Brien	Wolfenden, Pa.
Cooley	Ford, Thomas F.	Patman	Wood
Crawford	Gifford	Rockefeller	Woodruff, Mich.
Creal	Hartley	Sacks	Zimmerman

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ADMINISTRATION OF UNITED STATES COURTS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 188) to provide for the administration of the United States courts, and for other purposes, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, in order to send this bill to conference was any agreement entered into about which the House might like to know?

Mr. CELLER. No agreement whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CELLER, CHANDLER, HOBBS, MICHENER, and GWYNNE.

ROY-JENKS ELECTION CONTEST, SEVENTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I submit a unanimous-consent request, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire asks leave to withdraw from the files of the House the original Newton check lists which were submitted in connection with the Roy-Jenks election contest in the Seventy-fifth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

BEER PURCHASES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5137) to prohibit the purchase of beer on credit by retailers in the District of Columbia, with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, after line 18, insert:
"SEC. 4. This act shall expire July 30, 1940."

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if the only effect of the amendment is to change the date of expiration of the act?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the Senate felt the measure should be in the nature of an experiment, to be tried out for 1 year only.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I presume that all legislation concerning the District is more or less experimental anyway.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Somewhat, I am afraid.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address which I made day before yesterday before the Federal Bar Association.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INVESTIGATION OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the House passed House Resolution 258. There is now pending on the calendar a similar resolution for the same purpose, House Resolution No. 229. I ask unanimous consent that House Resolution No. 229 may be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, on three occasions this week when the roll was called I was attending a session of the Banking and Currency Committee and at the immediate time the roll was being called I was interrogating witnesses. I ask that the RECORD may show that fact.

AMENDMENT TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 262.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 262

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2009, an act to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 4 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider without the intervention of any point of order the substitute committee amendment recommended by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce now in the bill, and such substitute for the purpose of amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or committee substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "four" and insert "six."

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] desires to use his time, and I therefore yield him 30 minutes. I may say to the gentleman that I am going to yield some of my time to gentlemen who are opposed to the resolution, and, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Michigan is in favor of the resolution, I hope he will also divide his time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I intend to yield some of my time to those who are opposed.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order legislation extremely important to the entire Nation. It has to do with the railroad relief bill known as the Lea bill in the House. Personally, I am following the practice of bringing before the House any and all important legislation without having it smothered in the Rules Committee, as has been done in the past. There appeared before the Rules Committee between 40 and 50 Members of the House against the resolution. They maintained that because of its importance it should be delayed and more time granted before the bill is considered. However, the majority leader has made arrangements for the bill to be taken up today, and it has been suggested by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that the President is in favor of early action. The Rules Committee, therefore, has reported this resolution which brings the measure to the House for its consideration.

It seems to me that many Members are under the impression that this merely deals with the water and so-called truck regulation; but the bill also contains a very important provision giving the R. F. C. certain powers, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, with reference to the financing, reorganizing, consolidating, maintaining, and construction of railroads.

I feel honor bound to call the attention of the House to the important provisions in the bill. The resolution covering consideration of the bill is in your hands. The rule provides for 6 hours of general debate. Originally only 4 hours were requested, and ordinarily the amount requested is reduced, but in this instance it has been increased, giving the Members ample opportunity to be heard and to discuss this important piece of legislation which this rule makes in order.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Is it the understanding of the distinguished chairman of the Rules Committee that the time is to be equally divided between the proponents and opponents of the bill?

Mr. SABATH. In general debate?

Mr. CULKIN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; in general debate as well as the time on the rule, and that is why I propounded a question of the gentleman from Michigan. In view of the fact there are several other gentlemen who desire to be heard, I shall conclude my remarks.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, if I have anything to do with the handling of the time on the rule I will try to divide the time equitably and fairly, but I did not understand that the question the gentleman propounded of me had anything to do with the time in general debate or that it mentioned anything about an equal division of the time.

Mr. SABATH. Knowing the gentleman as I do, I know he is going to be fair and that the time will be equally divided. I am going to try to do the same thing.

Mr. LEA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. LEA. I would suggest to the gentleman that the principal controversy here seems to be in reference to the water provisions of the bill, and that probably represents only 40 percent of what is involved in the bill.

Mr. SABATH. That is the reason I have called attention to the other matters that are involved in the bill.

Mr. LEA. We will endeavor to be fair, however.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and now yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, legislation seldom comes before the House with more careful and painstaking consideration having been given it by the committee reporting it than has been given to this legislation. The importance of the legislation I believe cannot be overestimated. Whether anyone agrees with the bill or not, I believe he will agree that it is important.

I can say something about the care and attention which has been given to the legislation in a disinterested way, because I have not had any major part in the work leading up to the presentation of it to the House. The bill has been before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in a concrete way all this year, and the policy of it has been considered by the committee for a long time. The committee held hearings on the bill for about 10 weeks. After the close of the hearings a subcommittee was appointed to consider the legislation and to redraft the bill that was before the committee. I want to name the members of that subcommittee because I believe every man on the subcommittee has the confidence and the respect of the House. The House knows that any legislation coming from that subcommittee would be well thought out and would represent the earnest convictions of the members of it. The legislation was considered in a strictly nonpartisan sense and the bill before us has the support of every member of the subcommittee, Democrats and Republicans alike.

The subcommittee consists of the able chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Mr. LEA, of California; Mr. CROSSER, of Ohio; Mr. BULWINKLE, of North Carolina; and Mr. COLE, of Maryland, on the Democratic side; and on the Republican side Mr. WOLVERTON, of New Jersey; Mr. HOLMES, of Massachusetts; and Mr. HALLECK, of Indiana.

Let me say that seldom, if ever, has a committee of the House worked harder or more faithfully or put in longer hours than did that subcommittee in the consideration and the redrafting of this bill.

The bill comes necessarily from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce because under the rules of the House that committee has jurisdiction over legislation affecting railroads At the same time it is not a railroad bill. It is not primarily for the purpose of aiding the railroads. It is primarily for the purpose of furnishing the country with an adequate, efficient, and cheap transportation system. Speaking for myself if anyone here, after giving it mature and careful consideration, reaches the conclusion that it is not in the interest of the country as a whole, then I hope he will vote against it.

There is bound to be controversy and differences of opinion over an important piece of legislation of this kind. Every interest that is affected, even in the remotest degree, is bound to raise some question about it. As I understand, the principal controversy is over the provisions relating to the regulation of water carriers. The bill in a very modest way does look toward the regulation of water carriers.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Of course, being a busy member of another committee, I have not had time to read all the hearings on this measure. I feel that the subject matter of the proposed legislation is such that the average Member of the House who is not either on the committee or has had an opportunity to think carefully through the legislation would do well to follow the committee in the matter. As I understand, the principal issue is between water-borne transportation and the railroads.

Mr. MAPES. I do not believe that is the sole issue. In fact I am inclined to think the greater issue is whether the Maritime Commission or the Interstate Commerce Commission will have jurisdiction over the fixing of rates of the water carriers. I sometimes think the opposition is more because the bill proposes to deprive the Maritime Commission of a little of its authority over water carriers rather than because of anything else. Some of those who are violently opposed to this bill believe that water carriers should be regulated, but they think the regulating should be done by the Maritime Commission instead of by the Interstate Commerce Commission. This is just another one of those things. Whenever legislation proposes to limit, or interfere with, the jurisdiction of any commission or bureau there is bound to be opposition to it.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for one inquiry?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman because I made some reference to the Maritime Commission.

Mr. BLAND. The paging of the bill before the House is 108 pages, 51 of which are devoted to waterways. Does the gentleman believe that is modest regulation of the waterways?

Mr. MAPES. The subject has been gone into rather extensively and carefully so as to make sure that the regulation is modest.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman is also a member of the Committee on Rules. Does the gentleman not recall that one of the Members of the House, in opposition to the granting of the rule, only yesterday suggested that 18 percent of the commerce of the country is water-borne and that this bill exempts 15 percent of it and undertakes to exercise control or regulation over only 3 percent of it?

Mr. MAPES. I may say to the gentleman that I thought that was an extreme statement, but it was made by one of the opponents of this legislation.

The purpose of this bill is not to raise railroad rates or motor-carrier rates or rates over water carriers. It does not necessarily follow that rates over these different systems will be increased because they are regulated; in fact, it is hoped that the direct contrary will be the result.

Members of the House received a short time ago the advance copy of the Round Table on Transportation Policy and the Railroads which Fortune published in its August issue. The letter accompanying it goes on to tell how the members of the Round Table are selected. They are experts and represent different points of view, but they unanimously agreed, and I quote that—

> The railroads and other forms of internal transport should be placed upon an equal basis so far as regulations and alleged Government subsidies are concerned, except during a promotional stage.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 more minutes.

This is exactly what this legislation proposes. That is what the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has had in mind in presenting this legislation to the House.

As to this rule, all anyone is asking in regard to it is that the membership of the House adopt the rule and give the legislation the consideration which its importance deserves. If after doing that anyone thinks it is not in the best interest of the country, then for one I shall expect him to vote against it; but if, after he does give it such consideration, he reaches the conclusion it is for the best interests of the country then, of course, he will resist the pressure groups that are working in opposition to it and vote for it.

In this connection I ask permission to extend my remarks and to incorporate therein an editorial from Labor, which came to our desks this morning and with which I heartily agree.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to follows:

"FAIR FIELD; NO FAVORS," ASSURED ALL TRANSPORT—WATER CARRIERS' ARGUMENTS REFUTED BY HOUSE COMMITTEE; CONSOLIDATION PROVISIONS GREAT IMPROVEMENT ON EXISTING LAW; EMPLOYEES' RIGHTS ARE AMPLY SAFEGUARDED

(An editorial)

Labor hopes the House of Representatives will pass the Lea bill by an impressive majority. It represents months, and even years, of patient, capable labor by all elements interested in the transportation industry.

It has the support of the President of the United States, whose Committee of Six formulated the basic principles. It is earnestly endorsed by the Railway Labor Executives' Association, speaking for the standard railroad labor organizations, with close to 1,000,000 members in the United States and Canada. The carriers, through the Association of American Railroads, are supporting it with equal fervor.

The bill does not discriminate against any form of transportation. On the contrary, it specifically instructs the Interstate Commerce Commission to "preserve the inherent advantages of each mode of transportation." George M. Harrison, chairman of the Railway Labor Executives' Association and a member of the Committee of Six, interprets that mandate to the I. C. C. to mean that steam railroads, water carriers, and motor transportation shall all be given "a fair field and no favors."

In the matter of railroad consolidations, the bill safeguards all interests. The element of Government compulsion is removed, the carriers are permitted to submit plans for mergers, but the I. C. C. is designated a watchdog to protect the public interests.

For the first time, a specific provision is written into the law to protect the interests of employees who may be adversely affected by consolidations authorized by the I. C. C. Furthermore, for the first time employees are granted the right to intervene in consolidation proceedings.

Thus in the matter of consolidations, the Lea bill is a tremendous improvement over existing law and, in the judgment of Labor, is the most enlightened proposal so far submitted to Congress.

Labor records the simple truth when it says: "The Lea bill has the solid backing of the Railway Labor Executives' Association, the Association of American Railroads, and of the President of the United States, and, if enacted, it will insure a square deal to all mode of transportation."

Mr. MAPES. Because my time is limited, I shall read only two or three sentences from that editorial:

This legislation has the support of the President of the United States, whose Committee of Six formulated the basic principles. It is earnestly indorsed by the Railway Labor Executives' Association, speaking for the standard railroad labor organizations, with close to 1,000,000 members in the United States and Canada. The carriers, through the Association of American Railroads, are supporting it with equal fervor.

The bill does not discriminate against any form of transportation. On the contrary, it specifically instructs the Interstate Commerce Commission to "preserve the inherent advantages of each mode of transportation."

Let me read another paragraph from this editorial relating to railroad consolidations and their effect upon railroad labor:

For the first time, a specific provision is written into the law to protect the interests of employees who may be adversely affected by consolidations authorized by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Furthermore, for the first time employees are granted the right to intervene in consolidation proceedings.

Mr. Speaker, without taking any more time I say again that I trust the membership of the House will adopt this rule; that it will listen to the debate; that it will study this bill; and if it agrees with the committee, that it will vote for its passage. If, after thorough consideration of the measure it thinks it is not desirable, that it will vote it down. As for myself, I think it is desirable legislation and shall vote for the rule and for the passage of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday a large bipartisan group, fairly representative of both sides of the House, spent a considerable part of the day before the Rules Committee protesting against the consideration of this bill until January. We were never gullible enough to think that it would not come out. Yesterday we were merely building up our case for a larger forum here in the House today. We protested then, and we protest now, the indecent haste of trying to rush through this measure in the dying days of a distracted Congress without opportunity for adequate debate, study, or analysis, especially when title III of this act does not have to go into effect until July 1941.

It is claimed that it is a new bill, but it was only made available 2 days ago, and people affected and interested parties throughout the country are clamoring to be heard on the eleventh-hour changes that have been made without their knowledge.

Mr. Speaker, I have no opposition to railroads. Both in North Carolina and in this body I have tried fairly to appraise their problems. I recognize the tremendous part they have played in the upbuilding and the development of the country; but at the same time, because they now claim to be sick, I am not forgetful of their past, their misdeeds, or the time when they corrupted State governments and legislative halls, exploited their labor, built up false capital structures and have continued them even until today, and robbed and plundered and pillaged the American people with exorbitant freight rates and the American investor with watered stock. That is why they were regulated.

This is, in spite of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], a railroad bill. It contains everything they want—from further raids on the R. F. C. to a monopoly of transportation. No Congress in history has done so much for the railroads as has this Congress in the recent tax bill. If, according to common talk, there was a commitment when the 15-percent wage cut was up, that certain of the railroad employees would go along with this bill, while I commend them for keeping their word, I only regret there is nothing in it for them. Mark my words when I say to them as a friend who has stood by them when they needed friends in this body, that not one railroad job will it create, although it will throw thousands and thousands of others who toil out of employment. Certainly they must realize these coordinations and consolidations and shake-downs will ultimately mean the loss of thousands and thousands of their own jobs. As the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has already said, I was one of those that stated that 18 percent of the transportation of this country is water transportation. We have developed our great natural resources, the rivers and harbors of the country, to afford low-cost transportation, and it has been reflected in a tremendous saving to the American people. Does this bill bring in all water transportation? It does not. Three percent only is covered under it, and why? Why? Let the committee answer that in their own time. Bulk carriers on the Great Lakes are exempt, and I am glad of it, but the common carriers are not. So are certain other bulk carriers. Oil is exempt, but cotton is not. Let no one be deceived, Mr. Speaker, by these exemptions, for a conference will take them in or, under the urge of bureaucracy, they will be brought in next year.

This sop has not been sufficient to alienate those groups from their opposition to this measure, and they are standing firm against it. Every exemption in the bill is in favor of the big fellow and against the little one. Contract carriers will be utterly destroyed. This bill affects every section of the Nation. It will have a blighting effect on Boston, New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Norfolk, Wilmington, Charleston, Jacksonville, San Francisco, Seattle, Chicago, Duluth, the Gulf ports, the Mississippi and the Missouri Rivers and their valley, and every waterway in the country. It will mean, and the sole purpose of it is, that water rates will be raised everywhere to a practical parity with rail rates. It will place producers and consumers of the Nation in the grip of an iron-tight transportation monopoly. It will stifle legitimate competition.

Who is against this bill? Well, one of the brotherhoods is against it—the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, the largest of all—and have announced their unalterable opposition to it. The United States Maritime Commission, dealing with waterway problems and having a great knowledge of them, is against it. Admiral Land, the chairman of it, says it is perfectly apparent that regulation such as this is not in the public interest. The Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers are against it. They say there is no dissatisfaction with water transportation, that there is no destructive rate warfare between carriers, and that this bill will substantially increase the cost of transportation and deprive the public of the benefit of cheap and flexible transportation service. The Secretary of Agriculture is against it. He says no industry is so much concerned about low-cost transportation as agriculture. Farmers and other shippers should not be required to pay rates based on the transportation cost of property improvidently built, wastefully operated, or partially obsolete.

All of the maritime unions of the country are against it; all of the longshoremen unions of the country are against it, from both the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. The Central Trades and Labor Council of New York City, with a membership of 700,000, is against it.

Mr. Speaker, in January I was one of approximately 125 or 130 Members of this House, Democrats and Republicans, who met in solemn conclave and caucus over there in the House Office Building to protest against the terrific and frightful discrimination in freight rates against the South and southwestern sections of this country. Someone may get up and point out a section in this bill for an investigation on that subject. Investigation! Yes, the House knows what the average investigation is, and, above everything, the Members know what an investigation by the Interstate Commerce Commission is. Years and years have they already had the authority to make that investigation without anything being inserted in this present bill. Do not let me hear anyone who attended those meetings from Tennessee and Georgia and Texas and Louisiana, Arizona, New Mexico, and southern California protesting against that discrimination if they should decide to vote for this measure. Do not let me ever hear them stand up and whimper about the discriminations existing against those sections today.

Go back and tell the people of those sections, if you do so, that under the pressure of a great lobby you could not resist, and voted to take away from them the very last thing that they had to hold down freight rates in those sections.

This bill, Mr. Speaker, ought to be defeated. It is an outrageous sell-out of the producers and consumers of the Nation and is detrimental to every section of the country. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY].

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that considered this bill, S. 2009.

After listening to the last speaker, the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] who occupies a very important and exalted position in this House, I am somewhat fearful about even talking. He is usually rather conservative in his statements, but his statements today, to say the least, are rather extravagant.

Our committee had this bill under consideration from January 24 to March 30, and any citizen or representative of a waterway or other form of transportation could appear before that committee and present views for or against the bill. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] neglected that opportunity, and he comes here at a very late hour protesting with great vigor against the bill.

We had 73 witnesses before the committee, and there were 36 briefs filed concerning the various proposals in the bill.

This bill intends to create a national transportation policy. As you all know, President Roosevelt, some months ago, appointed a committee to study the problem of transportation, and they suggested most of the subjects covered by this bill. Our committee has attempted to write a bill which will provide efficient and economical transportation for all forms and types of industry in this country. It is not intended for any one group. It is intended for all of the people. It includes the railroads, the motor carriers, and the water carriers. I am sure that if the water provision in this bill was eliminated at this minute the opposition to this bill would collapse because that seems to be their only interest.

They discuss at length the number of pages in the bill that are devoted to the water provisions. Well, that is not unusual because it is an entirely new section. When the Interstate Commerce Act was written in 1887, it was attempted to bring the waterways in at that time, but they successfully resisted being included. We have found, throughout the years, that cutthroat competition among the water carriers has reduced them almost to a state of bankruptcy.

The gentleman that preceded me [Mr. WARREN] gave a list of the ports in this country that he would have you believe would either close up or be without business. Well, that is not so. The gentleman mentioned the American Maritime Association as being opposed to this. So that we may have no illusions about their opposition, that is an association supported by shipowners. Naturally, they have a very selfish interest and it apparently suits their purpose to fight this bill.

The gentleman mentioned some labor organizations who are supposed to be in opposition. These organizations did not appear before our committee. Their opposition is based on the theory that if this bill is passed the railroads and motortrucks will get more business and the ships will lose business. Therefore their men will not have their present employment. They are honestly mistaken, because I do not believe there is any possible chance of the motortrucks or the railroads taking business from the steamship lines as a consequence of this bill.

If you are in favor of a national transportation policy and you believe that it is important for the welfare of the employees as well as for the companies to provide efficient, economical, and safe transportation for this country, you will support this rule and you will support the bill.

I believe that the Interstate Commerce Commission will carry out the provisions of this act with all the care and discretion that they have exercised throughout the years in other matters entrusted to them. If you are afraid of that Commission administering this act in an unfair way, then, of course, you will probably vote against the bill. I have sufficient confidence in the Interstate Commerce Commission and sufficient confidence in the administrative heads of this Government to know that no injustice will be done to labor or to any form of transportation.

If we can coordinate the various forms of transportation, we will bring about better working conditions for the employees on every water front as well as on the motor carriers, express companies, and railroads. This will mean better wages, shorter hours, and a general improvement of the whole transportation system. For these reasons I am supporting the rule and shall vote for the bill. I think I can assure the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] that his fears about New York and Brooklyn, which, to my mind, is nothing more than an appeal for New York votes, are unfounded. I am sure our shipping industry in New York City will not be adversely affected one iota by the passage of this bill, but, on the other hand, will stabilize wages, hours, and the cost of transportation. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON].

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Speaker, probably no more important problem will be considered by the Seventy-sixth Congress of the United States than that of transportation. It has become increasingly more complex, with many and wider ramifications because of great technological improvements in motortrucks, locomotives, boats, barges, power, and increasing air, highway, and inland waterway transportation. Even the history of transportation in America, to say nothing of its evolution and the many affected factors, such as railroad labor, capital, industries, and the opening of new ports on the rivers of the country, lends itself to the serious and deliberate attention of this body. But how can we in a few short hours pass judgment on this problem that has been in the making since the beginning of a government in the United States?

How can we know that the measure before us is in the interests of the general public when no Member, save those who have religiously attended the hearings and sessions of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, ever saw either the bill or the report, containing both a majority report and a minority report, before yesterday afternoon?

Why the speed to jam this measure down our collective throats when by the very terms of the act some of the provisions need not become operative, at the election of the Interstate Commerce Commission, before 1941.

Are we as Members not entitled to study, and conference, with the citizens of our own districts? Do we know how vitally affected will the business interests of our communities be? Do we know whether or not we are not blindly setting a trap to further destroy railroad labor and further increase unemployment within its ranks? Can you be sure that, even though we amend this bill, we will secure a conference committee report that will safeguard the interests of the public generally?

There certainly is no unanimity of opinion amongst the railroad labor organizations in behalf of the measure and certainly no demand for the legislation from the members.

Even admitting that the great Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has worked for several months on the bill, why is it that now, so suddenly, we must take up their bill for consideration? Other committees have worked as hard and as arduously seeking a solution to the problem, and for the past month the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has had pending before the Rules Committee a bill to regulate waterway transportation and place it where it should be placed, under the Maritime Commission.

Inland waterway transportation is probably more vital to the average citizen of the United States than is air transportation, yet we have set up a separate authority to deal with air travel, the Civil Aeronautics Authority.

Why, then, must waterway transportation be placed under the Interstate Commerce Commission. It does not belong there, and I am suspicious, to say the least, that its only purpose is to destroy inland waterway transportation.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, as has been stated here this morning, this is a very important piece of legislation. I doubt if the House has been called upon to consider a piece of legislation at this session, or that it will be called upon to consider a piece of legislation at this session, that is more far reaching in its effect, not only upon the transportation system but upon the general welfare of the people of the country at large.

I have no axe to grind with the railroads. On the contrary, the railroads in their present dilemma have my most sincere sympathy. I think the railroads, just like every other department or arm of our economic life, have suffered as a result of a world-wide depression. I want to see the railroads helped as much as possible. I want to see the railroads put back so far as they possibly can be upon a firm basis; but my zeal for the railroads does not sweep me into a position whereby I want to lose sight of the general welfare of the people of this country as a whole, and while of course I could be mistaken, it is my honest considered judgment that if this piece of legislation is enacted into law in its present form it is going to react to the detriment of the people of this country as a whole. [Applause.] I believe that if part III of this bill remains in the bill that it is going to be the greatest blow that cheap transportation in this country has ever received.

For 150 years our Government, looking to the welfare of the people, to give them cheap transportation, has expended untold millions of dollars—yea, billions of dollars—in the building up of the rivers and the harbors of the country. The rivers and harbors of our country, unlike the railroads, belong to the people; they are a part of the natural resources of a great country. They are utilized for the purpose of furnishing cheap transportation to the people of the country.

It is not the amount of transportation that is carried over these waterways that is so important, for, as has already been pointed out, a very limited amount of the tonnage carried in transportation is carried by water-borne carriers; but need I point out to an intelligent Congress that the very fact we have these waterways furnishing this cheap transportation gives us a lever—a club, if you please—to hold over the heads of other forms of transportation to keep down the transportation charges? Let us not be misled; let us not fool ourselves; whenever and if this legislation should be enacted into law in its present form, freight rates will go up all over the country; that will be the inevitable result of the enactment of this proposed legislation. Let me call the attention of my colleague to a further fact.

This is not in the usual sense an administration bill. You have, on the one hand, the powerful Secretary of War, who has the interest of this country at heart, opposed to this legislation. His views are to be found in the minority report. The Secretary of Agriculture, who has at heart the interest of the farming people of this country, is opposed to this legislation. Why are these gentleman opposed to it? They are opposed to it because they realize the importance and the import of the proposed legislation, and that if it is enacted into law cheap transportation will be gone. Let me illustrate briefly what I mean by that.

In my little town of Pascagoula, on the Gulf of Mexico in Mississippi, the Government has a very small investment in a shipyard, or a repair yard, where the Government repairs its craft in that vicinity of the Gulf of Mexico. That does not amount to a great deal; they do not repair a great many ships there; they have to compete with private industry; not only do they have to compete with private industry but they have to underbid private industry upon the repair of these Government vessels by 10 percent.

The fact remains, however, that the great private shipyards know the Government has this little yard there and that they have to keep their bids down low if they are to get the business of repairing these ships. That is what you have in water transportation, if I may draw an analogy, the Government transportation system on the inland waterways, and the rivers and harbors of the country. You have a club to hold over the heads of the railroads which have been monopolistic in the past, to see that cheap transportation and competition is afforded. I do not know whether it is wise to consider this legislation at this time or not, but the Committee on Rules has granted a rule making it in order. So far as I am concerned now that it is in the House I do not know but what we ought to go ahead and consider it. I do, however, want to call the attention of my colleagues to the fact that section 3 of the bill, which does not affect the railroads as much as they would have you believe it does, is a powerful restraint upon them, should be taken out of this bill, and our rivers and harbors, our inland waterways, and other forms of water transportation should be left out of this bill. They are a part of this Government; and I hope that when the amendment is offered by the distinguished gentleman from Texas, that you will go along with us and take this provision out of the bill.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COLLINS). The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired. All time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the minority views on this bill. To my mind they represent a succinct and clear statement of the objections to this bill. It amounts to a state paper of first magnitude, and I urge the Members who are concerned about this legislation to read, ponder, and study carefully that minority report before voting on the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 10, strike out "four" and insert "six."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who speak on the rule or on the bill itself may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA].

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2009), with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at this time I call attention to some fundamental features affecting the controversy now before the House. As we advance in the consideration of the bill we will at greater length discuss its specific provisions.

In the spring of 1938 the President appointed a committee of 15 to consider the transportation problem of our country. This was not a new problem, but it was an acute one, coming down from the preceding years. Appropriate conferences were held at the White House, and, finally, after considering this question at length, the President appointed a committee of three to study and make recommendations as to necessary remedial measures. One particular purpose of that special committee was to consider the things that might be done to help the situation immediately.

The committee of 15 readily reached the conclusion that our transportation problems divided themselves into two classes, those of an immediate character and those of long-time importance. The committee was headed by Dr. Splawn, then Chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Commissioners Eastman and Mahaffie were also members. The committee filed a report which in important aspects corresponds to the principal purposes of this bill, particularly the portion having to do with unifying control of the transportation agencies of our country.

Later on the President appointed another committee to consider the whole problem, known as the Committee of Six. This committee was composed of six members representing rail management and labor. In December that committee made a report to the President. The President placed the responsibility on Congress of working out legislation.

In the early part of the present session the chairman of our committee introduced a bill which was prepared with the help of a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission. On the 24th of January hearings were begun by our committee, which continued for 10 weeks. Subsequently other bills were introduced, but the hearing proceeded without any limitation as to the transportation subjects to be presented.

At the opening of the session of the committee the statement was made by the chairman, with the consent of all members, that it was desired that everybody interested in any substantial phase of the transportation problem who had any constructive suggestions would be welcome to present their views. Every phase of the economic life of our country was represented at and took part in the hearings and were welcome.

A subcommittee was then appointed, composed of the chairman, Mr. CROSSER, Mr. BULWINKLE, Mr. COLE of Maryland, Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey, Mr. HOLMES, and Mr. HALLECK. I would be ungrateful if I did not express my admiration and appreciation for the work of each of those members of that committee. I have been in Congress for over 22 years, and for 18 of those 22 years I have served as a member of this committee. I never served with a committee that acted with greater fidelity and with a more serious consciousness of responsibility to the Congress and to the country.

Each member of the committee was willing to sacrifice individual convenience to prepare a measure creditable to the House and that would serve the interests of the people of the United States at large.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], the ranking Member on the Republican side, is recognized as one of the outstanding men in this House on the question of transportation legislation. I could go ahead and name each member of the subcommittee and say that each one materially contributed to the bill that is now pending before us. So far as we were able, this bill represents what we believe is a sane and useful approach to our transportation problem.

I could not pass on without paying tribute to Mr. A. H. Perley and Mr. Frank Mullen, who helped draft this legislation. They gave generously of their splendid ability and untiring service to perfect this measure.

About a year ago, when I assumed some responsibility on account of appointment to the President's committee, after surveying the question and the problem that confronted the country, I rather despaired of securing a bill that would fit into the needs of our country. No effective legislation could be adopted without somebody being disturbed. Each of these groups would place its own little affairs above the interests of the country and that would make good legislation almost hopeless.

My courage has improved as time has gone on. In the early part of this year Samuel O. Dunn, who for 20 years has been a close observer of our carrier problems, said:

> There has never been any other important American problem regarding which so many interests and individuals showed so much hypocrisy and short-sighted selfishness as regarding our railroad problem, and it cannot be solved under private ownership, if this continues to be the case.

The United States has the greatest transportation system in the world. The total income of the American people is approximately $65,000,000,000 a year, and in the turn-over of that money they are now spending about $20,000,000,000 a year for transportation.

First, we have our highways, 3,000,000 miles in all. We have Federal regulation of their interstate traffic. About $15,000,000,000 of the $20,000,000,000 is paid for transportation on those highways.

Then we have the rails as another important part of our transportation system, 240,000 miles of railroad lines, with over 400,000 miles of track. This railroad system goes into every State in the Union. There are 27 States in each of which there are over 4,000 miles of rail lines. Their capital structure at the present time is about $19,000,000,000. Approximately $5,000,000,000 a year is paid to the railroads of the country for their services. The I. C. C. has regulation of all of the important rail lines.

Then we have water transportation as another part of our transportation system. We have the coasts on each side of the country, 2,000 miles and more from Maine around to the Gulf and 1,500 miles along the Pacific Ocean. We have the Great Lakes, also, with over 1,000 miles of shore line for our country. We have the inland waterways, 8,000 miles with a depth of over 9 feet and 5,000 additional miles with a depth of 6 feet. The people of the country are today paying $700,000,000 a year for the service on these waters. We have the pipe lines also.

Where should we sensibly and practicably place water regulation? Water transportation is either foreign or domestic. This bill, of course, deals only with domestic transportation in interstate commerce. Domestic traffic in the United States is intermixed whether it moves by water, highway, or rail. Visualize a map of the United States, a great line of water transportation along each shore, the Great Lakes, and the inland waterways with their 8,000 or more miles penetrating different sections of the country.

The regulation of the commerce on the rails is entirely with the I. C. C., that on the highways is entirely with the I. C. C., and that on ships is in part with the I. C. C. The ships that are railroad controlled are under the authority of the I. C. C. Where joint rates are established between water and the rails the rates are under the I. C. C. So, while the I. C. C. has regulatory power over 93 percent of our domestic interstate commerce, water transportation, which represents only 7 percent of what the people pay for transportation, is either unregulated or regulated partly by the I. C. C. and partly by the Maritime Commission. We have a constant interchange of traffic between the ships, the rails, and the trucks. This bill would create additional interchanges of traffic between water and rail. How absurd would be a system of regulation that would change the regulatory authority over traffic every time it changed from or to land transportation. Why should a body representing water, with less than 7 percent of the domestic commerce, have the regulation of traffic interchanging with rail and highway transportation?

I believe everyone should agree that a rounded-out system of regulation requires that all these agencies be brought under common control. We cannot have one regulation of transportation competing with another, or have one type of transportation legally arrayed against the other, and expect to get satisfactory results.

Not long ago the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries of this House favorably reported a bill. In the report it is said:

> The general objectives of the bill are to extend the regulatory jurisdiction of the Maritime Commission to apply to common carriers by water engaged in interstate transportation on inland waters and, with the systems for the regulation of water carriers thus rounded out and made national in scope, to provide a plan and means to effect coordination in the regulation of carriers subject to the Maritime Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission where there is competition between such carriers.

This recognizes that common carriers on inland waters should be within Federal regulation. There is a disagreement as to who should do the regulating but not as to the fact there should be regulation. That bill proposes a sort of joint regulation, partly by the I. C. C. and partly by the Maritime Commission, with another intervening commission to iron out differences between those two.

The important fact is that here is the judgment of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee that common carriers on the inland waterways of the United States should be within Federal regulation.

The plan of regulation proposed in our bill has three main principles logically written out on that basis.

The first is that the Interstate Commerce Commission, as a regulatory body, should have jurisdiction of all common carriers by water of the class within the realm of interstate commerce. In the second place, that the Interstate Commerce Commission should have control of the minimum rates of contract carriers in order to protect just competition between them and between common carriers affected by their services. In the third place, certain exemptions are provided. These exemptions are based upon the theory that the contract carrier exempted can carry the specified classes of traffic so much cheaper than land transportation that there is no substantial competition. Those exemptions relate to bulk cargoes as defined in the bill, the bulk carriers on the Great Lakes, and liquid carriers. Then the Commission is given a discretionary power to grant further exemptions where the facts show there is no substantial competition. Then, of course, there are certain exemptions of small craft that do not materially affect the main scheme of regulation.

As a basis for the exemptions provided in this bill, I would like to read, briefly, from a statement of Mr. Eastman, who is recognized as a great transportation authority. Speaking in reference to the proposed water-transportation bill of 1935, he said:

> We endeavor in this bill (Water Carrier Act, 1935) to give the Commission wide latitude in exempting those other forms of carrier from the regulation which is proposed, where it appears that the public interest does not require that regulation.
> I think I could undertake to say now that there is no need for regulation of certain types of these contract or private carriers. I think I would put first in that category the tankers that carry oil. That is a special form of traffic. I think I would be inclined to put in that category colliers that carry coal between certain points on the coast. I think I would be inclined to place in that category the contract and private carriers which operate on the Great Lakes, because the transportation which they perform is so cheap and the distances are so great that they are not really competitive with the railroads or with the common carriers on the Great Lakes which largely confine themselves to package business. And it may be that before the committee gets through with the consideration of this subject it would feel that certain of those classes of operation should be exempted in the bill. I did not feel it was wise to attempt to pick them out in advance, but that the Commission should be given broad authority in the bill to release from particular forms of regulation the contract or private carriers where it is shown to the Commission that there is no need in the public interest for that form of regulation.

So you will observe that this bill conforms pretty faithfully to those recommendations.

Here we have a competitive situation, a very important and to a large extent a new situation in our transportation system. Competition has always been a vital factor in our transportation but it has greatly changed in character. About 100 years ago it started in when the railroads were first put in operation. The Erie Canal had been built at a great expense by the State of New York and that State passed a law to prohibit the carriage of any property on a railroad in competition with the canal, except the baggage of passengers. A law was passed in 1848 requiring that a railroad that ran parallel with the canal had to pay tolls on the freight carried, the same as if it used the canal.

Later the rails became stronger, and they then turned on the canals and attempted to destroy water transportation on the canals. There were two methods of doing it. One was to try to control the boats and the other was to put rates so low that it destroyed water competition.

In the late sixties this war between the canals and the rails largely disappeared from the picture. In the sixties cattle were carried from Buffalo to New York for $1 a car, in the face of rail competition. Later cattle were carried from Chicago to Pittsburgh free of cost. They carried cattle for nothing rather than let the competitors get the business. In the eighties passengers traveled from New York to Chicago for $1. That was destructive competition. The shipper or the traveler got the benefit of it, but could anybody in the world endorse that as a system of transportation that would work out for the benefit of the country?

This is, I think, a safe conclusion from the history of competition. If we leave it to the carriers, one, in effect would destroy the other if it can. The disposition of men keen and aggressive in business is to outdo their competitors. That is a natural tendency. There is no use quarreling about it. It does not involve any question of personality and to try to drag an issue like that into a serious situation like this is trifling with the question. Generally ship owners and rail owners are of the same clay. Human nature I have found in every crust of society is about the same; when selfish interest is involved it asserts itself about the same. So when we legislate, we must legislate with that in view.

What is the present status from a competitive standpoint of the railroads? In the first place, we are confronted with these facts. There has been a rail traffic decline of about $1,000,000,000 a year, due to the depression. I am speaking in round figures, and it is manifest that nobody could state that they are exactly correct, but I believe they fairly reflect the situation. In the second place competition, largely of a new type, including water, motor vehicles, air, and pipe lines, have taken from the railroads transportation of approximately $1,000,000,000 a year. Competitive conditions have forced a reduction of many of the competitive rates, which have been reflected in the general average of rates, and in transportation income. That is, for a number of years, partly under the pressure of rail competition, we have this reduction in rates with a reduction in net income.

Since 1920 the railroad lines have introduced economies which are claimed to have reduced operating expenses over $1,000,000,000 a year, and yet the roads from an income basis, are poorer than when the economies were introduced. In the fourth place the increased cost of labor and material, taxes, and a forced reduction in the rates, have enforced losses that more than equal the economies introduced.

I also call attention to something of the economic picture as to the rails. Railroads, for instance, under normal conditions, spend nearly a billion dollars a year for materials and supplies. They take, under normal conditions, 16 percent of the total timber cut of the United States, 17 percent of the steel and iron, and spend $294,000,000 a year for fuel. They take forest products worth $104,000,000, iron and steel worth $359,000,000, and miscellaneous supplies that amount to $207,000,000.

Turning to the ships, what has been the situation? Two years ago, I believe it was, I was one of a delegation that went down to see Mr. Kennedy, who was then head of the Maritime Commission. We were discussing this intercoastal shipping situation. Mr. Kennedy stated in substance that at that time a typical combination passenger and cargo ship going from the east to west coast and returning fully loaded would return "in the red." I had occasion a few years ago to check up to our intercoastal business by ships and I found it was substantially true, that on the whole those ships were making nothing. They were spending several hundred million dollars a year for labor, material, and supplies, and it was passing through their hands without leaving anything for them. To a large extent it was a duplication of what we have had in the railroad industry in recent years.

Looking at the situation generally, competition has greatly changed in the last 20 years. Twenty years ago the highways were simply feeders for the railroads and ships. Today the highways are very substantial competitors with the railroads and to a degree with the ships. Motor vehicles are now being paid for public transportation about $900,000,000 a year. Twenty years ago it amounted to little by comparison. In the last 20 years the Panama Canal has developed as an important factor. The Canal was completed after the war in Europe started, and it was not an important factor in transportation until after the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Intercoastal shipping today serves the east and west coasts, and 65,000,000 people live near those coasts and have the service of that water transportation if desired.

In the meantime we have developed pipe lines that are being paid $200,000,000 a year for the transportation of oil. In that competitive situation which has become intense, an important problem in the regulation of transportation is due to that competitive situation. What we need is an umpire, a judge to be just and fair to each. We do not need an arbitration board. We do not need an advocate of one sort of transportation against the other. We need an umpire to see that that contest is conducted in a fair way. That is what we have tried to provide in this bill.

We hear the question of the subsidies discussed. We have a subsidy, we might call it a subsidy, for our highways. Our highway has been sustained very largely at public expense. Each man cannot build his own road. We all join together and build highways to serve the most remote sections of the country and the social and all the other needs of the population. That is, in a sense, a subsidy. It is noncommercial traffic largely. Of course, we have all been in favor of those highways.

Water transportation has also been subsidized. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars to establish highways on the watercourses of the United States. There is some difference between the waterways and the highways. The waterways today have become purely commercial enterprises, competing with private transportation.

The Government provides the depth and width of the stream and also the maintenance. Suppose a storm comes, and a sand bar appears in the river, the owner of a vessel operated on the river for private profit, calls up Uncle Sam by telephone and says, "We have a sand bar in this river. Come down and remove it." Uncle Sam comes down at his expense and removes that bar for the benefit of private operators on the river.

Suppose a flood comes and it may damage a stream. It may cost a railroad company several million dollars possibly to restore the damage. In that case does the railroad, engaged in private transportation, call up the United States Army Engineers and ask them to come down and rebuild the railroad? Certainly not. The railroad must dig down into its own resources and repair its tracks.

Now, it is urged here that notwithstanding the fact that we contribute great sums of money to maintain these highways on our streams, they cannot submit to that regulation to which all other carriers are subject.

I have supported, as far as I can recall, every bill reported from the Rivers and Harbors Committee, every bill from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries; but now we are told that notwithstanding the fact that the Government provides the stream and provides for the maintenance of that stream, these water carriers are unable to submit to the same regulation as other private carriers. How can we justify that situation?

Here is a bridge constructed by a railroad company, according to the designs required by the War Department. Finally the War Department comes along and says, "Remove that bridge. It is no longer suitable." The railroad company must rebuild that bridge. It may cost it $500,000 or $1,000,000, but they have to pay it out of their own pockets. For what purpose? To accommodate the water transportation that moves up the river—its competitor. It must pay every cent of that, whether it gets one dime of benefit from it or not.

Some people talk as though we have a right to disregard the rights of every railroad. If a railroad wants anything, what is the use paying any attention to that? If we have several hundred thousand investors in railroad securities, what is the use paying any attention to them? I believe that a very important thing for the future of this country right now and for the years to come is for the people of the United States to have an honest appreciation of the man who invests his money in the productive enterprises of this country and who thereby becomes an employer of labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Now, what is the situation about this subsidization? What is the transportation problem of the United States? How are we going to avoid Government ownership? Government ownership is just a form of subsidization. It does not help solve our problem. It lifts the burden from one place and places it more firmly upon the backs of the taxpayers of the United States. Do we not all recognize it is very difficult for a private industry to compete with a Government-financed industry that has no capital account to contend with? That is what we have in this present situation. I am not complaining about that, but I do say that these transportation agencies by water, that have been so helped by the Federal Government, ought not come here and object to submitting to that form of regulation, just and fair, that the Federal Government gives to the other transportation agencies of the country with which they compete.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEA. I have promised to yield to two gentlemen ahead of you.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Just for a suggestion: Most of us desire to get information on this bill. We have enjoyed the gentleman's statement very much, but I would like to have some information.

Mr. LEA. I stated in the beginning that further on our committee will try to serve that very purpose.

Now, I want to refer for a moment to the Ramspeck resolution. That is embodied in this bill. It directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to make an investigation of certain freight differentials, and then to make the orders that are necessary to remove the unlawfulness of rates found to be unlawful. It further provides, in the provisions prohibiting discriminations, the protection of territories and districts. In my judgment that resolution is directed at what is one of the most important situations in rate structure. It points to a place in our rate structure where the greatest opportunity to help our transportation system on an economic basis lies. The correction of that condition would serve the interests of shippers and carriers alike.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Page 163 of the bill as it passed the Senate contains the following language under the subject of the unification of railroads:

The Commission is authorized to approve under certain conditions the unification of railroads.

I notice on page 208 of the House bill——

Mr. LEA. May I reply to that? The House bill provides for voluntary consolidation of railroads. In the case of ships and motors, it provides that consolidation may be made without a hearing, but in the case of railroads it must be after a hearing.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman will pardon me, the language states that if the Commission finds certain things it shall do thus and so. In the present law the word "may" is used. In other words, the pending bill makes it mandatory upon the Commission instead of permissive.

Mr. LEA. But it is discretionary with them as to what they find based upon the facts.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. How do the provisions in reference to consolidation in the pending bill compare with the like provisions of existing law?

Mr. LEA. There is this difference: Under the present law it is the duty of the Interstate Commerce Commission to lay down the plan and submit it to the railroads. The pending bill would allow the railroads themselves to propose plans subject to approval, disapproval, or conditioned approval by the Interstate Commerce Commission when the Commission finds it in the public interest; and proper provision is made for employees.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I cannot yield; my time has expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota makes the point of order that a quorum is not present. The Chair will count.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the point of order for a moment to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

The CHAIRMAN. That cannot be done on a reservation of a point of no quorum.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I believe that would be discretionary with the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is under the control of the chairman and ranking minority members of the committee. The gentleman from Minnesota may ask a question if time is yielded to him, but the Chair thinks it is not proper to do so under a point of order.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I may say to the gentleman from California that most of us on the floor are here for information. This is a big bill, filled with many technicalities. Most of us want to find out what is in the bill and the purpose of the bill. We have so far had a very fine explanation of some of the difficulties that confronted the railroads, but I think we are entitled to have information as to the contents of the bill itself and what it is proposed to do with the legislation, so that the Members may vote intelligently for or against the bill when it comes up for final action.

Mr. LEA. I think the committee is doing just that. The committee desires to do that.

The remarks I made I thought were a proper preface and preliminary introduction to the subject, which will be followed up by other members of the committee. Certainly the committee does not want to shirk its responsibility in any way.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. We just got the committee report this morning, yet the committee spent 10 weeks on the bill.

Mr. LEA. If between now and Monday the gentleman will study that report, I think he will find it instructive.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEA. I am sorry, my time has expired.

FAIR REGULATION OF WATER CARRIERS

Under the privilege of extension I insert a reference to sections in the bill which seek to assure fair regulation of water carriers; also memorandum as to regulatory powers over domestic water transportation:

In the declaration of policy (p. 198), which the Interstate Commerce Commission must observe in the administration of the Interstate Commerce Act in the regulation of carriers by railroad, by motor vehicle, and by water, the following language appears:

"It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each."

In section 307 (f) (p. 260) there is found the rule of rate making similar to the rule provided in the case of railroads and motor carriers, which requires the Commission to give consideration among other factors—

"to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service."

In section 307 (d) (p. 259, lines 5–9, inclusive) the following provision appears:

"In the case of a through route, where one of the carriers is a common carrier by water, the Commission may prescribe such reasonable differentials, if any, as it may find to be justified between all-rail rates and the joint rates in connection with such common carrier by water."

In section 305 (c) (p. 253, lines 1–3, inclusive) there is a proviso to the effect that in any application to water carriers of prohibitions against granting undue or unreasonable preferences or advantages such provisions shall not be construed to apply to discriminations, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier of whatever description.

REGULATORY POWER OVER WATER CARRIERS

JULY 21, 1939.

Memorandum

1. Interstate Commerce Commission has complete authority over common carriers by water owned, operated, or controlled by a common carrier by railroad.

2. Commission has authority to prescribe interstate through routes and maximum joint rates over railroads and common carriers by water, through the Panama Canal or elsewhere. (Sec. 6 (13) (b) of pt. I of the present act.) Such joint rates are under the Commission's jurisdiction when established.

3. Commission has no authority to establish any route or rate for transportation wholly by water (sec. 15 (3)) except as stated in (1) above; that is, it has no power over port-to-port rates by water.

4. It is unlawful for any railroad to own, lease, operate, or control any common carrier by water operating through the Panama Canal or elsewhere with which the railroad may or does compete for traffic.

Commission decides question of fact as to competition or possibility of such competition. It may grant authority to a railroad to continue to operate such water carriers which the railroad owned prior to July 1, 1914, or to install new service not in conflict with this law, where such service is not via the Panama Canal. In every case of such extension the water carrier is subject in all respects to regulation by the Commission. (Sec. 5 (19) to 21, the Panama Canal Act amendments.)

5. The United States Maritime Commission has authority over common and contract intercoastal water carriers via the Panama Canal as to both maximum and minimum rates.

6. The Maritime Commission has authority over coastwise common carriers on regular routes as to maximum and minimum rates by water.

7. The Maritime Commission has authority over common carriers on the Great Lakes on regular routes but only as to maximum rates by water.

8. The Maritime Commission has no authority as to certificates of public convenience and necessity or over permits to operate.

9. Carriers on inland waters (except the Great Lakes, as noted) are not subject to regulation except as to their joint rates with railroads.

Under the Dennison Act any common carrier by water operating or about to operate upon the Warrior, Mississippi, Columbia, Snake, Sacramento, San Joaquin, or Savannah Rivers, or their tributaries, may apply to the Interstate Commerce Commission and obtain a certificate of public convenience and necessity. The Commission then directs all connecting common carriers to join with such water carrier in through routes and joint rates, and prescribes reasonable minimum differentials between all-rail rates and the joint rail-water rates. (Sec. 3 (e) of the Dennison Act.)

The substitute bill repeals this provision (sec. 26, p. 238). Certificates already granted and joint rates already established would continue in effect. Inland Waterways Corporation and Mississippi Valley Barge Lines now have certificates and would not have to reapply.

The substitute bill gives the Commission power to fix reasonable differentials as aforesaid where justified (sec. 307 (d), p. 259, lines 4–9).

S. 2009 provides the Commission may, and shall when necessary in the public interest, fix the minimum differential which should apply where one of the carriers in a through route and joint rate is a water line. Otherwise the provisions as to through routes and joint rail-water rates are substantially the same as the substitute bill.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eleven Members are present, a quorum.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that with the exception of part III of this bill, I think the measure is an excellent undertaking, especially the provisions relating to the railways, the extension of help to the railways from the R. F. C., and other provisions. These I think are valuable. It is not my purpose to discuss them at this time. I desire to confine my remarks to a discussion or part III which relates entirely to the regulation of water-borne commerce.

I listened with interest to some of the addresses made on the rule, and I think it incumbent upon me at this particular moment to be candid. In the interest of candor and not as criticism, much less abuse, I cannot avoid expressing the opinion that part III for the regulation of water-borne commerce would not be presented to the Congress were it not requested in the first instance, and constantly, and persistently by the railroads. As I intimated a moment ago, I do not offer this opinion in criticism but as a statement of fact which I believe every member of the committee realizes. I have yet to identify any public organization of shippers, or producers, or of those engaged in water-borne commerce, any organizations of businessmen or of employees outside of the railway field that have requested the Congress of the United States to regulate water-borne commerce. It is a fact that there is no public demand for it.

The record of the hearings and the correspondence of Members will demonstrate, I am sure, the accuracy of that statement. That does not mean, of course, that the legislation is not entitled to very careful consideration. That is the kind of consideration I hope and pray will be given to it by the Committee of the Whole and by the House.

Let me, if I can, paint a picture of the inland water transportation as I see it. The traffic is divided generally into three classes. There is, first, the private carrier. He is the man or company that carries his own goods in his own vessel. He owns the vessel, loads his own freight in it and carries it to the destination desired by him at his own expense. He performs no public service, nor does he hold himself out to perform a public service.

Obviously he is not regulated by part III. Indeed, I doubt very much if the Congress has the power to regulate a private carrier, be he operating on the highways or on the waterways. The private carrier today carries something in excess of 50 percent of the tonnage on our rivers. Great tows of barges are made up, for example, on the upper Monongahela and go down the Ohio to reach ports on the Ohio and Mississippi clear down to New Orleans. Many of them are loaded with fabricated steel and other very heavy articles of freight. They are owned to a great extent by large corporations. I make no criticism of that, because doubtless the operation is justifiable from an economic standpoint and probably contributes to a cheaper product at the other end of the line.

The second category is the contract carrier. He is the man or company that owns a barge and carries goods for other people on contract. He may carry great bulky cargoes or he may carry any sort of package freight or other articles. Of all the tonnage on the inland waterways, as I understand it, the contract carrier moves about 40 percent.

The third category is the common carrier. He offers a service to the general public at published rates, doing his best to conform with scheduled operations. He carries about 10 percent.

Part 3 seeks to regulate both the contract and the common carrier. I would like to emphasize the function performed by the contract carrier, who already carries 40 percent of this traffic. In a very true sense he corresponds to the tramp steamer on the ocean. As doubtless you all know, the tramp steamer wanders around the world, plowing slowly through the seas, picking up cargoes wherever they may be found, and carrying them on contract from port to port. He is the regulator of the rates for high-sea commerce. Automatically the tramp steamer prevents the great established through lines of steamers from overcharging the public so far as freight rates are concerned. Should the big conference lines, so-called, in reaching an agreement among themselves as to what they will charge for carrying freight upon the high seas put the price too high, the old tramp drops into port and picks up the business at a lower rate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And foreign ships under foreign flags will do the same.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The tramp goes all over the world, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, and he flies all the flags.

In a very true sense I think the contract carrier on the inland waterways performs exactly the same service. If the common carrier on the inland waterway charges too high a price for carrying goods, the contract carrier steps in and says to the shipper, "I can carry those goods at a cheaper rate. I will send a tow of barges over to you and carry that stuff for you to the port of destination under contract." He regulates automatically the rates on the rivers. In other words, the rates on the rivers today are regulated by competition, and it is free competition.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is that the case on the Mississippi River?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Not above St. Louis, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. All the testimony we had before the committee was to the effect that the rates on the river systems generally are regulated by competition among the carriers themselves.

Now, we come to this bill which confessedly is designed to prevent for the future free competition on the rivers. It is designed to freeze rates, both for common carriers and contract carriers. For example, we will take a contract carrier who, in my judgment, holds the key to this whole situation. The bill provides that if he is to remain in business he must get a permit from the Interstate Commerce Commission to do so. There is where the paternalism starts—paternalism starting on the Father of Waters that up to this moment has flown unvexed to the sea. Having secured his permit and desiring to go into business, he files with the Interstate Commerce Commission his contract and his rates. The rates to be charged are made public. If that rate is low, any competitor—rail, motor, or water—may appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission and protest that it is a destructive rate. The Interstate Commerce Commission may suspend that rate for 6 months. The overwhelming majority of contract carriers are little fellows. They must then appear by attorney and with experts before the Interstate Commerce Commission and defend their contract rate against the galaxy of attorneys from the railways.

Finally a minimum rate may be fixed by the Commission and below that rate he cannot charge. He may make application that his minimum rate be lowered but the instant he does so, he is confronted with the attorneys of his competitors and if he is a little man, and most of them are, he simply will not try it. He cannot afford the expense of the litigation.

The thing I dread most in this bill is that by this paternalistic system finally to be established upon what hitherto has been a free waterway, free to any citizen to conduct commerce, the little man will be driven out of business. Take again this case of the contract carrier. Suppose he is on the point of making a contract which will last a year with some big shipper to carry this freight, but he is held up by hearing in the Interstate Commerce Commission for 6 months or more.

What will the shipper do? The shipper cannot wait. The shipper will be tempted to build his own barge and become a private carrier himself, and thus be freed from the inconvenience growing out of regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Already more than 50 percent of the tonnage is carried by private carriers. In my humble judgment, this bill is sure further to concentrate commerce on the inland waterways in the hands of the great and the powerful; it cannot operate in any other way. We cannot surround these little people with these restrictions, these impositions, and these requirements and expect them to hold their own against their large and powerful competitors. If we leave them alone as they are today they can live, and they are living. There is no demand from the inland waterways business for this regulation. It is regulating itself. There is no demand from the public, there is no protest from the public, there is no scandal, there is not even a nuisance; but we seem captivated by these paternalistic ideas that it is the duty always of government to regulate and regulate and go on regulating, until it seems to me sometimes that regulation is itself the objective rather than merely the good of the public.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Do I correctly understand from that statement that the position of the gentleman is that he is against the extension of regulation insofar as the water carriers are affected?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I said that again and again, and said it in the minority report.

Mr. HALLECK. Is that based upon the gentleman's general belief and views that such regulation is not in the public interest, generally speaking?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is. That is my only reason for speaking here. I may be mistaken in my conclusions, but I believe this is not in the public interest.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Is it the same reason that prompted the gentleman to oppose the regulation of trucks when that legislation was before the House in 1935?

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. So that would mean that the gentleman is opposed to any form of regulation of transportation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; that is a pretty wide assumption, may I say to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. TERRY. Does the gentleman feel that the users of the waterways of the country, whether private or common carriers, should pay some toll for the use of the waterways?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I believe that is entirely contrary to our tradition. I have always visualized our great rivers as belonging to all the people, free for their use without restraint, except, of course, in the interest of safety.

Mr. TERRY. Of course, the gentleman realizes that the Government pays out large sums of money to keep up the channels of the rivers?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; and I believe that is a sound public policy, where, of course, the money is expended on rivers where the traffic will eventually justify the expenditure. I do not believe we should abandon that policy. I would support appropriations for the improvement of a river whose traffic possibilities were good just as quickly as I would support appropriations for the deepening of New York Harbor. I make no distinction between them. Certainly no one would ever suggest that the ships coming into New York Harbor should pay toll.

Mr. TERRY. Of course, the deepening of New York Harbor is for the benefit of all forms of transportation within the country.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly; and I put the improvement of inland waterways in the same category.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATRICK. Does the gentleman not agree that there was ample evidence before the committee to convince him that increasing numbers of barge lines and other methods of water transportation would come in and compete for the business, with the result that no one would make any profits, that in many cases they could not pay the men who worked for them, and that under such a situation the system would break down?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I did not gather the impression from the testimony that the inland waterway transportation business was bound for the bow-wows; no. There was evidence that some of them were losing money, but for Heaven's sake, are we going to legislate here so that everybody shall make money?

Mr. PATRICK. Is there any way that situation can be remedied except by regulation?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Only by regulation upward, and I am against that.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. Is it not a fact that the leading European nations have gone much further than we have even thought about going in the matter of developing water transportation? Does the gentleman know whether or not that is true?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am not thoroughly informed on that subject, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. SOUTH. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to say that that is the case, and that instead of curbing further development they are constantly increasing it. May I ask the gentleman if he does not believe that the adoption of this provision will result in curbing the further development of our waterways?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me say in reply to the gentleman from Texas that I am not so concerned with the prophecies that the passage of this legislation will result in material increase in rates as I am that it will result in the hopeless retardation of the future development of water transportation. As I tried to say a little while ago, no longer will the little man go into that business. He is crowded out by these regulations. He cannot stand them. The traffic will fall into the hands of a few, and every time the little man tries to get into the business and obtain a certificate of convenience and necessity as a common carrier the powerful operators will combat his application, and he will find himself in the presence of the best legal talent his competitor can employ.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I would like to proceed with my statement.

During the past decade there has been a very substantial development in inland waterway transportation. This is the very purpose Congress has sought to achieve in the various programs of improvement of waterways which have been voted from time to time by this and preceding Congresses. Should this bill become a law there will be no new carriers for the simple reason that the restrictions of the legislation practically instruct the Commission to deny such persons certificates or permits if the Commission shall be of opinion that there are in existence sufficient transportation facilities to take care of the existing commerce. In other words, the rivers will no longer be free; only those may use them for commerce whom the Commission says may use them. This is a complete reversal of a traditional American policy. Think of it! Our rivers no longer free to our own people who own them. Only those with a permit may sail them.

When any person shows up with an application before the Interstate Commerce Commission, the railroads will pounce upon it, protest it, ask for hearings and litigate it to the limit, and how can a small operator afford to undertake such a hazardous operation or procedure? Small operators cannot stand the burden and the strain of the litigation; and at the same time, to the extent it increases the cost of water transportation to the myriad of small concerns in the country, it increases the advantage of the large industrial organizations already owning and operating their own fleets. They, as private carriers, will be the beneficiaries of this legislation.

This explains in large measure, I think, the attitude of the Secretary of War and the attitude of the Secretary of Agriculture.

The American public wants our water transportation to be developed as a national system. It desires that such transportation be made available by joint through rates. It is true that the bill provides that through rates shall be established between railroads and waterways, but the restrictions imposed upon the waterways would make it unattractive to them, and I would like to call attention, if I have the time, to a provision of this bill which completely revolutionizes the waterways traffic.

It is provided here that if the owner of a barge or of a vessel charters that barge or vessel to another carrier, he, the owner, is still subject to this Transportation Act and all its regulations. Of course, that is not true with respect to a railway. A railway can lend its engines or its cars to another railroad and there is no responsibility thereafter for the operation of those cars or engines, but under this act, and it is rather cleverly put in, the charterer is subject to this act as engaging in transportation.

Mind you, this chartering is done in thousands of cases on the waterways and in coastal traffic. This bill proposes to upset it.

Let me illustrate what it does. A well-known, independent lumber dealer of the East came to me the other day and called my attention to the effect this would have upon the lumber industry. He said:

> We get large supplies from the Pacific Northwest. We do not own any steamers. We have to send out to the Northwest and when we purchase or contract to purchase a cargo of lumber, we charter a vessel from an owner out there, and under a contract with him, we bring it around through the Canal and up the Hudson River to Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Under this bill the owner of that vessel is subject to the Transportation Act. What will happen? He will not charter it. How can you expect him to be responsible for compliance with this law when he charters his vessel to another? Under such conditions he will not charter his vessel to another. Today this chartering goes on all the time, not only in the intercoastal but the coastal and inland waterway business. It is an element of that flexibility which distinguishes commerce by water, and yet this bill would throttle it.

In addition let me call your attention to another thing in this bill. In the water commerce of today it is the general custom for vessels to perform both common-carrier and contract-carrier service. The owner may fill his vessel partly with a bulk cargo carried by contract and devote the rest of the vessel to the carriage of miscellaneous articles at rates published to the public. That this is a sound commercial practice cannot be denied. Moreover, it is another example of the flexibility of water-borne commerce so valuable to the public. And yet this bill forbids the practice for it provides that no operator can be a common carrier and contract carrier at the same time. Gentlemen, we would better explore this thing pretty thoroughly before we jump.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, the question has already been asked as to whether or not I expect in the few minutes allotted to me to make a detailed explanation of this bill. I would like to suggest to every one of you, and through you to every Member of the House, that the report filed with this bill is about the best report I ever saw on any bill. It explains the details of the bill very, very carefully. Any Member reading that report can get a better idea of the details of the bill and what it attempts to do than could be obtained from any speech any Member could listen to made by anyone from the floor of this House. What I would rather do is to attempt to answer some of the questions that have been suggested to me by Members of the House during the time this bill has been under consideration.

Let me suggest, first, that the subcommittee of seven which considered the bill covers all sections of this country. The membership of 25 of the Interstate Commerce Committee covers all of the sections of the country and all of the interests of the country. That committee, as I understand it, stands 23 to 2 in favor of this bill. I have not been on that committee very long, but I think those of you who have been here longer than I, have confidence in that committee, and, to my mind, that is about the best recommendation for the bill that we could have.

When we started the consideration of this bill many of us understood there was an emergency transportation problem which peculiarly affected the railroads. We understood that the Government was to intercede in some manner calculated to improve the condition of the railroads to meet the critical emergency situation then existing. When the committee got into the consideration of the proposals, however, it concluded that the things that might be done to effect immediate assistance were rather limited. It was deemed advisable to bring about stabilization and coordination of our whole transportation system and unification and equalization of regulation to the end that the country—our people and the interests of all of our people—as well as all of our systems of transportation would be benefited and assisted on the long pull. That is what we tried to do in this bill, and I believe that we have done a good job of it.

The committee held exhaustive hearings. We did not listen only to the railroad people. We listened to everyone who chose to come before the committee to give us the benefit of his views.

Time and again the subcommittee issued committee prints of this bill. They were not broadcast generally, it is true, but those committee prints were submitted to representatives of water carriers and truck carriers and all other carriers and other interest generally, and their objections and suggestions were solicited. We got those objections and suggestions. We studied them. We called those representatives in and got their views personally. For what purpose? Not for the purpose of giving a sop to anybody, not for the purpose of soliciting support for this bill, but to the end that we could write a bill, and would write a bill, that would be in the best interests of the country.

Is there anything wrong with that procedure? Would you rather that your committee had had some brain truster downtown write a bill and bring it up here and rubber stamp it and bring it in to you to rubber stamp?

Someone suggested that this is not a modest approach in the matter of water transportation. If it is true that 18 percent of our commerce is water-borne, and 15 percent of it is exempted, is not that indicative of a modest approach in the matter of regulation?

It is said that we threw a sop to someone. Why were bulk carriers by water exempted? They were exempted because everyone recognizes that their carriage is so cheap that they are not in any substantial competition with any carrier. Why did we exempt the bulk carriers on the Great Lakes, and incidentally their exemption goes no further than the general exemption for all bulk carriers? Because we recognize that the Lake carriers carry traffic 70 percent of the mileage in many cases in joint operations with the railroads for 30 percent of the revenue. They are not in direct competition with the railroads. However, they are in direct competition with the Canadian carriers that have grown in importance to almost 50 percent of the traffic on the Great Lakes—Canadian carriers, who by their own Canadian shipping act are exempted from regulation. Were not those things done in an effort to write a fair bill and bring a fair bill before you for action?

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I prefer not to at this time. We had a lot of trouble and controversy between the American Express Co., on the one hand, and the trucking people on the other over lines of abandoned railroads. There was in one committee print a provision that the truckers seriously objected to, and as a result you all got telegrams and letters. We called the people in and attempted to harmonize differences and work out a fair bill. That is the kind of a bill that you have here today. It is the sort of a bill that everybody in this House can vote for, and ought to vote for.

Our bill is mechanically different from the Senate bill, and in a word I would like to explain that to you. The Senate bill undertakes to codify the whole Interstate Commerce Act. We did not do that. Part I of the Interstate Commerce Act has to do with railroads and part II with motor vehicles. We amended those parts of the act in certain particulars and we added part III to regulate water carriers. We did that because we thought it would be a more simple, easy, and effective approach than to attempt complete codification. The bills in their fundamentals are very much alike.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], for whom I have the highest regard, by his argument convinces me that his real opposition to this bill stems from the fact that he is on principle opposed to the extension of regulations like this. Generally he says, "Who wants it?" Did you get a letter addressed to you from the Farm Bureau of the United States? I shall not take time to read it, but it quotes their executive committee as saying:

> The American Farm Bureau Federation recognizes that if the Nation is to avoid Government ownership and operation of railroads—

Against which they have declared—> certain changes in present national policies providing for their regulation must be made. The provisions of the Transportation Act of 1939, as passed by a very substantial majority in the Senate, appears to be directed to this end, and, in general, seems to be in accord with the policy pronouncement of our organization.

Do they not represent shippers? I will take their advice as against that of Mr. Wallace, who writes us a letter, in one paragraph of which he says in effect that the transportation problem is just a part of our whole, general economic problem, and the way to solve it is to produce more. When, in heaven's name, did he develop that theory?

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I would prefer not to. When I get through, if I have time, I will be glad to yield.

Now, it is said this is a railroad bill. The proposals that were supposed to represent the ideas of the railroads were first submitted to the Congress by the so-called Committee of Six, appointed by the President of the United States, including three representatives of ownership or management and three representatives of labor. Would it interest you to know in connection with the assertion that this is a railroad bill just how many of the recommendations of the Committee of Six are in this House bill? There are just 4; 4 of 14.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I just refused to yield to another member of the committee.

Mr. SOUTH. You need not yield unless you want to.

Mr. HALLECK. After I conclude I will be glad to answer any questions.

They proposed a national transportation policy. We have that in the bill. They proposed certain changes having to do with the reconstruction of bridges and other facilities. We have that in the bill. They proposed that we abolish these so-called land-grant rates. That is in the bill. They proposed some changes in the consolidation plan. We have that in the bill. We have some of their recommendations as to the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission and as to the R. F. C. loans, and a little as to reparations. But here are some things that they wanted which we did not put in the bill.

My good friends in the railroad industry, management and labor alike, tell me this is not the bill they would have written.

They wanted revision of the rate-making rule. We did not put that in. They wanted repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause. We did not put that in.

Incidentally, the water carriers have been fighting that ever since it has been in Congress. The railroads wanted extension of the power of the Commission over intrastate rates. We did not put that in.

They wanted a transportation board to make a lot of recommendations about transportation generally in the country. We did not put that in.

Now, listen to this: The railroads argued with a lot of force before our committee that because waterways are subsidized by Government construction the people using them should be charged tolls. They wanted us to put that in the bill. We did not put it in the bill.

In view of that, who can stand in his place and say that our committee is undertaking to destroy water-borne commerce?

They wanted a separate reorganization court. We did not put that in the bill.

Thus it will be seen that this bill adopts only 4 of the 14 recommendations of the Committee of Six, concerning which there is little controversy. It rejects totally half, or seven, and adopts in modified form three of them.

Now, ultimately the question here is, Shall we regulate or shall we not regulate?

I do not care particularly to go into the theory of regulation of public utilities. Originally we undertook regulation to destroy monopoly; to give the little fellow a chance, and to bring about revision of rates downward, in the interest of the consumer. Since that time we have seen much governmental regulation seeking to effect a revision of rates or prices upward. After all, that is what the farm program is—looking to the revision of prices or rates upward in the interest of an ailing industry.

Whenever we undertake regulation of a utility, the Government must give that utility that is regulated some return; so we give them a franchise to operate, which takes the form of a certificate of convenience and necessity. We fix their rates. We fix them by Government operation, by Government agency, which is charged with seeing to it that the rates are fair and reasonable.

I understand that in an early day in this country the railroads were supposed to be something of a monster type, that undertook to destroy the rights of the people and the powers of government, and to discriminate against and trample down people, sections, and communities. I did not live in that time, and I do not really know just how bad they were. But I do not believe that is a very good argument in this controversy, because I am convinced there is an overwhelming demand among the people of this country for some such action as is contemplated in this bill. Why? Because they do not want to see the owners of railroad stocks and railroad bonds, the rights of people working on the railroads, the rights of people in other systems of transportation, sold down the river. They do not want to see any of them penalized.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman point out how this bill will help the railroads?

Mr. HALLECK. I suggested a number of recommendations of the Committee of Six that were included in the bill, that are of direct benefit to the railroads, and before I get through with this argument if I have time I shall point out to the gentleman and to all of the other Members of the Congress why this legislation in the long run will be of benefit to the railroads.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Part III?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes. Part III will be of benefit to the railroads and the water carriers themselves.

Now, some people believe in regulation and others do not, but I say to you that this country and our Government and our society is committed to a policy of regulation of utilities. Does anyone deny that? Then if we are committed to that policy, if that is our view as to the thing to be done, then how in heaven's name can it be said as a matter of fairness that one system of transportation shall be left free, outside of regulation, to carry on its operations, make any rates it wants, go any place it wants to, carry anything it wants to, against regulated carriers? I say that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If we are committed to regulation, then let us have regulation.

Most people favor regulation of utilities. The strange thing to me is that the waterways are against regulation for themselves but for it for railroads. The minute you try to repeal the fourth section, the long-and-short-haul clause, to give the railroads a little relief from restrictive regulation, the water carriers are in here moving heaven and earth to defeat the relaxation of regulation. They want the railroads regulated right down to the raw, but they resent any move, even modest as proposed in this bill, looking to the regulation of water carriers. Is this fair? I believe the House is not going along with that proposition.

A great many of those opposed to this bill subscribe to the theory of regulation but they want the regulating done by some agency other than the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am against that, and I will tell you why: Regulation of competing agencies of transportation by different agencies of Government tends to develop competitive regulation. Here is what I mean. Suppose the intercoastal carriers going around through the Panama Canal are regulated by the Maritime Commission and the railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Maritime Commission becomes jealous of the rights of its people and cuts rates to try to get business. The Interstate Commerce Commission feels the same way about it for the railroads. As a result, it is a cut-throat rate proposition. That is the truth of the matter, Mr. Chairman. The representative of one of the greatest intercoastal carriers came into my office and said: "We cut the rate to try to get the business. The railroads cut the rate to try to hold it, and as a result we are all going broke."

I say that this unification of regulation is the very thing that will prevent these abuses.

Some say the Interstate Commerce Commission is rail-minded. I do not know whether they so argued when the Motor Vehicle Act was under consideration or not, but the people operating motor vehicles are not today complaining that the Interstate Commerce Commission is crucifying them in the interest of the railroads. Is not that the best test? Why argue a lot of fancies, a lot of imaginings, when the history and experience of the country establish the fact that regulation by the I. C. C. will be in the interest of the country and all systems regulated? I think there is another reason for the inclusion of water carriers under the Interstate Commerce Commission. I spoke a moment ago of the objections of the water carriers to the relaxation of any type of regulation. I would like to suggest to my good friend from New York who just preceded me [Mr. WADSWORTH] that in my view, if he thinks we have too much regulation and seeks relaxation of regulation, the way to accomplish it is to bring all these competing agencies under regulation, and then, if they think the burdens of regulation are too heavy, they can all join hands in bringing about a relaxation of regulation. Is not that good sense?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, it is my firm belief that no general policy of relaxation can take place until all of the principal competing forms of transportation are under a similarity of regulation administered by the same Federal agency. As the situation now stands, should the railroads propose a general policy of relaxation affecting them, it would be assumed by all competitors that they were seeking and would probably gain an advantage. Opposition to the proposals of the railroads would be immediate, even though the competitor could not point out the exact manner in which the railroad proposal would affect its competitive relation.

One great value in the proposed legislation lies in the fact that it brings all competitors within the regulatory jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Thereafter, if each competing transport service feels that the weight of regulation is interfering with its best service capacity, it will naturally join hands with its fellow sufferers in an effort to secure such relaxation as may be needed by private management and yet fully protect the public interest.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. DONDERO. Is any of the Canadian water-borne transportation under regulation; and, if not, why?

Mr. HALLECK. The Canadian Shipping Act of 1938 exempted the contract bulk carriers on the Lakes because of the peculiar competitive situation existing between Canadian and American carriers.

Some people have argued and have asked me in good faith if we were not coming in here to destroy the water carriers. Well, now, listen. This Government has spent millions and hundreds of millions of dollars to develop cheap economical transportation. No one would be so ridiculous as to seek to destroy this investment. The communities served by this transportation have a right to the continuation of this service. There is nothing in this bill which seeks to destroy that service. Rail transportation is the most valuable transportation because it is faster and more convenient. The water people will admit that. If a person had the same rate he would ship by rail rather than water. As a result the ceiling of rates is fixed by the railroads. The water carriers operate under that ceiling at a competitive point because their costs are less. This bill recognizes that differential and the reason supporting it. This bill provides for the continuation of that differential. I might refer you to the provisions of the bill but I do not want to take the time necessary to read them.

The declaration of policy demands of the I. C. C. that it administer this act to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each type of transportation.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. SOUTH. Can the gentleman explain to the House what that expression means?

Mr. HALLECK. I think it has a very definite meaning. To me it means a recognition of the rights of the country to cheap and economical transportation by water, that there are certain advantages inherent in that type of transportation and that these advantages shall be preserved to the people of this country. I think you cannot read anything else into it. If you turn to page 259 you will find that in connection with joint rail and water rates the specific word "differentials" is used in recognition of that fact.

On page 260, in reference to the making of minimum rates for water carriage, this is said:

> They shall pay attention to the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service.

Does that mean anything to you or are we to assume that the Interstate Commerce Commission is going to throw all of those mandates out the window? Why, of course, the rates on water transportation will still be beneath the ceiling of the rail rates. They will continue to carry on their business.

But here is the situation that has existed: With the inland and other waterways unregulated, with the minimum rates of the intercoastal lines unregulated until 1938, the water carriers cut freight rates to try to get the business. The railroads cut their rates to hold on to the business. As a result no one is making money. Why, water carriers appeared before our committee and in answer to direct questions said they were not making money. They are not prosperous.

The statement is made, "Why, you are going to take these higher rates out of the hide of the consumers and the shippers." Is it in the public interest of this country and of all the people of our country that our great transportation systems shall operate at a loss? That is not the theory of our Government, and if we are to have regulation of public utilities, then it is incumbent upon us to give a fair field and no favors to everybody in the business.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. What is the object of this legislation? Is it not to raise more money for the railroads?

Mr. HALLECK. The object of this legislation is to coordinate and stabilize fundamentally all of the transportation systems of this country and to put them on a fair and equal basis and to preserve the inherent advantages of every type of transportation. You cannot read anything else in it in any line or at any place. This is a matter of equity and of fairness.

I know some people who have the advantage of water transportation where rail rates have been forced way down, who make the statement that this legislation may result in the raising of their rates. But there are people not so far removed from the district represented by the gentleman from Oregon who have no water transportation and who honestly and actually believe that they are making up the deficit of rail operations in other sections of the country, brought about by certain cutthroat water competition. This bill seeks to take out of our system cutthroat competition which is destructive of the interests of our people and of all carriers combined.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman point out one case in the history of our country where a waterway has hurt a railroad?

Mr. HALLECK. I just mentioned the intercoastal carriers a while ago. I never rode an intercoastal ship in my life. But when a representative of those interests tells me that in this cutthroat competition they have cut their rates down to where they are losing money, and the railroads followed, then I say somebody got hurt.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the gentleman believe that people are entitled to lower rates for the transportation of freight?

Mr. HALLECK. I said a moment ago, and I want that made clear, I am for the cheapest possible rates that can be given for transportation, but I am not in favor of rates that do not adequately reflect a fair cost of the service and a fair profit for the people doing the job. I do not believe the gentleman does, either.

Mr. CULKIN. We carry grain across New York State by rail for one-quarter what it costs to carry it across the gentleman's State or across Montana. This is by reason of the existence of a waterway there. Does the gentleman believe that is immoral?

Mr. HALLECK. No; I do not believe it is immoral. But that is a bulk commodity, and it is exempted from the provisions of this act. That is the reason we wrote it in the bill. The gentleman understands that as well as I do. He knows I favored that provision and stood for it and I am still standing for it. I hope it stays in the bill. I am not seeking to gouge anybody, but I am saying that people in the transportation business ought to have a fair chance for their white alley, and that is all this bill is trying to give them.

Mr. JOHNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. JOHNS. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the hearings, pages 1240 and 1241? The barge companies seem to have been making money and increased their freight rates. They do not seem to have lost anything.

Mr. HALLECK. Now, I yielded for a question only. I realize there were differences of opinion, but when you get to pinning them right down you will find ample corroboration for everything I have said.

I cannot lay my hand on the names right now, but several Mississippi barge lines are not opposing this legislation. Some have tried to leave the impression that all water carriers are against this bill, but that is not the situation. I undertake to say that the contract carriers of bulk commodities on the Lakes and on many of the rivers and in coastal and intercoastal service are not in opposition to this bill. They will not come to ask you to vote for it, but I am telling you that as this bill is written now they recognize it is a fair bill and one that could properly be enacted into law.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. I have talked about the water sections of this bill. That is not all there is in this bill. We have made revisions in part I of the bill. We have provided a change in the organization, a division of the duties of the Interstate Commerce Commission to expedite its work. Early in the game there was a proposal that we increase the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission by six members. We reached the conclusion that we could better expedite their work by making it possible for boards of examiners and single members to handle some business. But where we did that we were careful to protect the rights of the litigant, to give him an appeal as a matter of right from any such decision in order that he might have the benefit and the protection of the decision of the Commission itself.

Something has been said about the alleged freight rate differentials of the South. I sat through all those hearings and heard the claims of the people who came there. I submit on the record of the hearings that when we finally got through with them the most they asked was some extension of the antidiscrimination provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act to apply to regions and sections. We wrote that in the bill. In addition, they asked a direction to the Interstate Commerce Commission that the Commission inquire into the alleged discriminations with a view to correcting them if any existed. That is all the people who came there asked us for, and I submit it on the record of the hearings.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HARTER of New York. Do I correctly understand that the gentleman's sole argument for regulation under part III is for the possible leveling off of rates or increase in rates?

Mr. HALLECK. No; of course, that is not my sole argument. The gentleman has done me the honor to pay very close attention to what I had to say. If I did not get anything more than that across to him, I am afraid I have done a pretty poor job.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have always supported in the years I have been in Congress the so-called long-and-short-haul clause. It just seems to me that the factions that are opposing this bill today are the same factions that oppose the long-and-short-haul clause. I wish the gentleman would tell me how they can reconcile those positions.

Mr. HALLECK. Does the gentleman mean the repeal of the long-and-short-haul clause?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, it has to do with the effort of competitors to prevent relaxation of regulation when they are unregulated. They assume that any relaxation of regulation must be to their detriment, so they come in and oppose it. They want the absolute maximum of regulation on the railroads, but they do not want regulation of themselves. The only way you can relax regulation is to get them all in, get them all under regulation, and then when that day comes you will find a more concerted and equitable effort in the direction of relaxation of regulation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, this question is so important and so far-reaching that it is impossible to discuss it in 15 minutes. I will try to remove some of the mists and clouds and fogs that have been unintentionally, I know, occasioned by the gentlemen who have been advocating the bill, and particularly in the closing remarks of the gentleman who has just spoken.

There has been repeated again and again the statement that the waterways oppose regulation. They are regulated to a very large extent. I am glad the gentleman has been educated since yesterday, because before the Committee on Rules yesterday he made the statement that transportation through the Panama Canal was not regulated. His attention was called then to the fact that by the bill reported out of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in 1938, and in effect today, transportation through the Panama Canal, both as to common and contract carriers is subject to regulation by the Maritime Commission. Today hearings are being held by the Maritime Commission in practically every port in the United States for the purpose of determining questions with respect to the rates and other problems affecting transportation through the Panama Canal. The whole subject is under investigation.

Why so much talk about the Panama Canal? In 1936 seven principal western railroads carried 208,000,000 short tons of revenue freight and the common and contract intercoastal carriers carried but 7,500,000 short tons—7,500,000 as against 208,000,000. Admiral Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, points out that if this water traffic had moved by these western railroads it would have increased their tonnage by only 3.6 percent, and by reason of the low rates applicable to most of the commodities their revenues would be increased by an even smaller percentage.

I would also call attention to the fact that it is not the Panama Canal or the waterways that have reduced employment on the railroads. In 1920 there were 2,022,832 employees on the railroads, and this number had been reduced to 940,000 by 1938, a reduction of 53½ percent, while during the same period the number of ton-miles had dropped only 29 percent.

In other words, the greater proportionate reduction in the number of employees was caused by longer trains, larger locomotives, and improvements of that kind. The problems of the intercoastal carriers are mainly problems existing as between themselves, as Congress recognized in passing the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, which gave the Commission a more extended jurisdiction over this class of carriers at that time than in the case of coastwise carriers.

The primary question before the people of the Nation today is not regulation of railroads or waterways, but securing the most reasonable transportation that may be given the people of the United States. The primary purpose of our legislation here should be that the legislation should be in the interest not of any particular form of transportation but in the interest of the people of the United States, in order that they may have the most reasonable transportation that can be afforded them, to the end that commerce may flow from one section of the country to the other. In the flow of commerce from one section of the country to the other and in the building up of stability in business and industry, all the problems that now confront the railroads will be dissipated and forgotten in a little while.

The regulation of the water carriers through the Panama Canal today is complete by the Maritime Commission. By the same act in 1938 regulation was given to the Maritime Commission over coastwise common carriers. However, a large part of the coastwise trade involves transshipment cargo; that is, cargo originating in or destined for foreign ports. If this is diverted or the cost increased, it will go to foreign-flag ships at the points of origin. As to inland common carriers, there is pending today before the Rules Committee—not so much because regulation is necessary as to meet the claim that regulation is needed—a bill for removal of certain language in existing legislation which will give regulation to the Maritime Commission over common carriers on inland waterways as well. That bill contains the further provision that there shall be a joint transportation board made up of two representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission and two representatives of the Maritime Commissior, with a third appointed by the President, to the end that there may be a fair and a just and an honest effort to meet the difficulties and to remove any injustice between railroad and common carriers on inland waters.

I submit that that measure would furnish a determination of disputed questions, not by a railroad-minded commission in the interest of the railroads, nor by a waterway commission in the interest of the waterways, but by another body consisting partly of both and a third, which would afford a method of reaching a fair and a just and an honest solution, if a solution is needed of particular difficulties in this great problem.

I wish to call the attention of those who are interested in waterways to the size of this bill. I would call their attention to the fact that 51 pages of this bill of 108 pages deal with waterways transportation, yet it is supposed to be a railroad bill. I would direct your attention to the fact that they say the term "water carrier" means a common carrier by water or a contract carrier by water, and then they go on to tell you what kind of vessel is going to be regulated. The term "vessel" means any water craft or other artificial contrivance of whatever description which is used or is capable of being or is intended to be used as a means of transportation by water. Well did the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] say that this bill would result in wiping out the small transportation companies and carriers. Well might he have called attention to the fact that the fishing vessel that goes over to a port and brings back coal or commerce of some kind to some place not supplied with railroad transportation is subject to the regulatory features of this bill on every kind and character of waterway.

Mr. Chairman, are we prepared to vote for a measure of this kind? That part of the bill should be studied by a committee familiar with this kind of legislation. What does this bill do? They have not told us, and in all reverence I say, God only knows what it does do to the waterways of the country. They say in here—subsection f on page 247—that nothing in this part shall be construed to affect any law of navigation, admiralty jurisdiction of the courts of the United States, liabilities of vessels and their owners for loss or damage, or laws respecting seamen, or any other statute of maritime law, regulation, or custom not in conflict with the provisions of this part. This language implies that something in this part may be in conflict with those laws. Do you know what is in here that may be in conflict with those laws?

I do not know, and the committee here cannot tell us, to what extent they will affect these people. It is utterly impossible to do that. Back in 1935 the great chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], realized that measures of this kind should come before the Merchant Marine Committee. On February 26, 1935, there was transferred on the floor of this House, by the consent of the Congress, from the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House a bill similar to this part of this bill, and it was further provided that hereafter all bills relating to or affecting transportation by water carriers, regardless of the fact that they may amend an act originally considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, should be referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Mr. RAYBURN made that request. And now, by a process of legislative legerdemain, or I might say by a process of legislative larceny, this bill is brought in in such a way that we cannot require that the part relating to water carriers shall go to the committee to which this House in 1935 said it should go—that is, to the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House. However, this House can accomplish that result by striking out waterway carriers and putting waterway carriers where they ought to be—in the committee that knows something about them. We insist that this course should be followed. We submit that the House, on the unanimous-consent request made by the present majority leader [Mr. RAYBURN], recognized in 1935 that questions pertaining to waterways should be referred to the committee having peculiar jurisdiction over such legislation.

The request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] was made upon the authority of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce which seeks to undo in 1939 what it did voluntarily in 1935. If you do not wish consideration by the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of all of the matters in this bill, and I do not want them, and if you think the entire bill should be considered as a whole, then you will find pending before the Rules Committee a resolution providing that in the consideration of a bill such as this a special committee shall be formed to consist of two men from Interstate and Foreign Commerce, two men from Merchant Marine and Fisheries, two men from Rivers and Harbors, and three men from the Committee on Agriculture. I say without hesitancy that after 18 years' service on the Merchant Marine Committee it is impossible for me even now to say what is in the bill or its effect.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND. I cannot yield, as I have only 15 minutes.

Do you believe the Secretary of War would have made the vigorous protest he has; do you believe that the Secretary of Agriculture would have made the vigorous protest he has; and that these gentlemen would have registered their protests as they have or that the Maritime Commission would have protested if they had not believed they were acting in the interest of the people? Read their letters and you will admit, I believe, that they were protesting not in the interest of the waterways, not in the interest of railways, but in the interest of the people of this country who are entitled to transportation at the most reasonable rates they can get. We wish, Mr. Chairman, not to destroy, but to build. We wish to restore commerce and then we will lift this country above the depression that has caused the railroads so much trouble.

Well did Senator SHIPSTEAD say in the minority report that he filed on this bill that it will not help one man on the railroads, and it will only increase the distance between the caboose and the engine. On the other hand it will throw out of work many seamen of the country, longshoremen, and similar employees in the interest of what? Not of giving employment but in the interest of transferring commerce from the waterways to the railroads. Something was said about passengers through the Canal. The Canal has contributed to the transportation by the railroads. Look at the tourist travel. Look at the number of opportunities furnished and taken advantage of in the United States for tourists to pass through the Panama Canal one way and use the railroads the other way. I ask you, gentlemen, to study this bill. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] has pointed out some of the defects. I have tried to show you how absolutely far reaching it is. With all of the red tape incident to regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission and with all of the accounts that must be rendered, and all of the work that must be done in filing reports, the small carriers cannot survive. As to foreign commerce, I have been told today by the representative of a line engaged in foreign commerce that, after carefully studying the bill, he cannot say what effect it will have on the service of that line, and that his company has informed him that it must hold up its plans for construction of two ships until they know what the bill will do, what the relation of the Interstate Commerce Commission bill is to their service, and what regulations that Commission will put into effect if this bill is passed and that Commission has any control over that commerce. The situation is precarious in the extreme.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a short letter from Mr. Whitney.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter part of that request will have to be granted in the House.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Chairman, this bill that is before us in my opinion is one of the most important measures we have had presented at the present session of Congress. There are over 100 pages of a new bill and all of the Senate bill has been stricken out. Senate 2009, which is now under consideration, is the bill to which I refer. It was only yesterday that printed copies were available, although I believe a few copies were available the day before.

The first thing I want to point out about the bill is the fact that we are asked to act and vote on a measure that was just prepared 3 or 4 days ago, without opportunity on the part of the Members of the House to make a study of it, and without opportunity to consult the people who use the waterways and our various transportation systems, as to how legislation of this character would affect them in the future.

I represent a territory where water transportation is all important. I refer to the Lake Superior region. I live at Duluth, Minn., which is at the head of the Lakes. The people of that territory are vitally affected and vitally concerned with any legislation that has to do with their transportation rates.

I have listened to the debate this afternoon and I am not opposed to legislation that will benefit or help solve the railroad problems of this country. I supported the repeal of the so-called long-and-short-haul provisions of the railroad law, and I actively supported what was known as the Petengill bill in a former Congress. I have worked for other legislation to help the railroads out of their difficulties, but I have never supported and I do not believe I have been called upon to vote on a piece of legislation which would put any form of water transportation under the Interstate Commerce Commission—an agency that ever since its creation has been charged with the duty of rate making and the making of freight rates for the railroads of the country. The very heart and purpose of this bill is to regulate water transportation. Various arguments are used. They say that the railroads are entitled to have the water carriers regulated, but that it is not going to hurt the water carriers. Then the question was really appropriately asked on the floor of the House if there is not something in this bill that will help the railroads, what do you want to bring the water carriers under it for? It seems to me that the problem of water transportation and the problem of its regulation is a problem for a commission or a Government agency that is not shaped and framed for railroad problems and whose policy looks to the making of rates for the benefit of the railroads. The dockets in the I. C. C. are filled with complaints of shippers, with fights between rate-making agencies and railroads on the one hand and the shipping public on the other hand. As the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] so ably pointed out, when you venture on this new field, no one knows where you are going to stop or what will be done to the shipping public and to the consuming public. As I repeat, I am glad to help the railroads in the solution of their difficulties, but I do not think it ought to be done at the expense of the water carriers. I do not know of a single request that has come from the shipping public or from the people who use the waterways for this type of legislation.

And so I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that this legislation is too important to be acted upon in a hurried or hasty manner. I would like an opportunity to forward copies of the proposed bill which the House committee has just written to shippers and other people in Duluth and other parts of the district who are interested in this legislation. No such opportunity has been afforded me. In my opinion action on this proposed legislation should be deferred until the next session of Congress. I do not think the present procedure is conducive to good sound legislation. I realize that there have been hearings before the committee, but the general public has not been advised as to how the transportation question will be affected by these proposed changes or by the new regulations which will, in my opinion, revolutionize the whole transportation structure. If there are abuses in waterway transportation, they should be corrected by some agency of the Government which has for its purpose the study of that question. This should be an entirely separate matter from the subject of railroad rates or railroad regulations.

As has been pointed out on the floor of the House this afternoon, there may be a lot of sections in this bill which appear to be harmless, but which time and study will show are very far reaching and as a consequence may work damage to people who have built up business or industry based upon the present rate or transportation structure in the United States. I believe that the present bill is one of the first steps in a program to deprive the people of this country of the advantages of water transportation, which in the past has always been cheap and economical. There is no other agency for a long-distance movement of bulk commodities that can handle the problem as economically as the waterway-transportation system. I believe that people who live inland, considerably removed from lakes or rivers, are going to be just as vitally affected if this new legislation passes as people who live in river towns or on lake ports. Anything that is done to hamper and curtail and make more costly water transportation is surely going to increase the expenses of getting manufactured products to the consumer, and just to that extent the cost to the consumer is increased.

I believe that Congress will pass legislation designed to remove handicaps under which the railroads now operate, but I repeat that the way to remove those handicaps is not to present similar handicaps on the water-transportation system on our lakes and rivers and on our ocean coasts in the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH].

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to find myself not in agreement with our distinguished chairman. The gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] has worked hard and patiently, being fair to everyone on the committee and to all witnesses who appeared before the committee. He, as well as other members of the subcommittee who have considered this bill, certainly deserve the thanks of each Member of Congress. There are two or three provisions in this bill, however, which I think should be amended. Something has been said about eliminating the differentials that exist in certain parts of the country. Some of us have had much to say about it. I am one of those who has said a great deal about it. That is because in the section of Texas which I represent we pay from $1.60 to $1.85 for the same transportation that those living in the official territory pay $1 for. That is not right. Nobody has ever been able to justify it. Everyone who has made a careful study of the question knows that the present rate structure is neither based upon rhyme nor reason, that it is a hodge-podge which has grown up over a long period of years, and ought to be revised and perfected.

Now, let us see what this bill does for our section. The language on page 202 offers a sop to the rate-differential problem, and after instructing the Interstate Commerce Commission to study it, which it now has the authority to do, and which it has already done over a long period of years, winds up by the very generous and magnanimous statement that they shall have the authority to study the rate structure as it relates to manufactured products. How many of you gentlemen knew that that was the very liberal concession made to those of us who do not live in the official zone territory? They shall make a study of that portion of our transportation problem which is included in the expression "manufactured products." Well, the sheepmen in my district, the greatest wool-producing district in the United States, so far as I know, do not ship any manufactured goods out of the country. The great cotton producers of my district, although they produce and transport hundreds of thousands of bales of cotton, do not transport any manufactured goods out of that district. The great stock raisers in my district and in other districts that are discriminated against do not ship any manufactured goods; they do, however, ship a vast amount of raw products—goods not manufactured. Yet this bill proposes to do what? It proposes to let the Interstate Commerce Commission study that part of the problem that relates to manufactured products. I submit to you that "manufactured" ought to be stricken out and let them study our whole transportation problem, and grant such relief as the circumstances warrant.

Not only can Texas, and many other agricultural States, never hope to become important States industrially while this situation prevails, but our farmers and ranchmen are finding it increasingly difficult to prosper, while paying more than their just share of transportation charges.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOUTH. Not unless I can get more time. I am sorry.

I am also opposed to that provision of this bill which proposes to repeal the land-grant provision. You will be, too, if you will study it carefully, I believe.

In the beginning of railroad construction and for some years thereafter the Federal Government ceded to the railroads approximately 132,425,574 acres of land, and they entered into a contract with the roads that as a part of the consideration therefor the railroads receiving such grants would transport Government troops, Government men, and Government materials free. That was the consideration, and the Supreme Court has held that it was a valid contract, based upon a valuable consideration (Burke v. Southern Pac. Ry. Co., 234 U. S. 669). Later on it was agreed that the Government should pay 50 percent of the total cost. That is what they are paying now. The railroads have not only sold most of that land and under the provisions of this bill will keep the entire proceeds, but they now have vast areas of such land, some of which is now producing oil in large quantities and some of it is valuable timberlands. They do not propose either to return the consideration for the land which has been sold, or to return the land that they now hold. In other words, they propose to abrogate that part of the contract which requires them to give the Government the concession which they agreed to give, but they propose to keep every cent of the consideration paid by the Government for that right. I submit to you if you can go home and explain to your distressed farmers, to your distressed workers, and the distressed taxpayers of this country why you made that outright grant and donation to the railroads, then you are a better explainer than I am, or than I want to be.

I do not believe that water should be placed under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Our American waterways, which are Nature's gift to our entire people, make possible our cheapest form of transportation. Out in my section, where we are already paying too much, if we are deprived of the joint rate, or the combinate rate, which we got on goods shipped from the Northeast, and elsewhere, down to the ports of Houston, Galveston, Corpus Christi, and other Texas ports and then sent inland by rail, our rates will certainly be much greater than we are able to pay.

Now, my friends, they have told you that only two members of the committee view this proposition as I do. That may be true, but I submit to you that in the Senate of the United States, 22 Members voted to strike out this provision, and both distinguished Senators from my State not only voted to strike out this provision, but voted against the bill on final passage. Why? Because they believed as the Secretary of Agriculture believes, and as others interested in agricuture believe, that the farmers of this country will pay the increased cost which will result.

Why do they want water placed under this regulatory body? Because the railroads of this country have asked for it. Have you heard of any shippers coming before Congress and asking that water be regulated? Has anybody said that water is charging too much for transportation? No. Who is asking for it? The railroads of this country began asking for it 50 years ago, and they have been asking for it ever since. Some day they will slip it through, perhaps this time; but I would call your attention to the fact that in 1920, when this same measure was pending, the distinguished chairman presiding over this committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] was one of the leaders in the fight against placing water under the regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Because he knew it would be an added burden upon the farmers of this country, and a burden which they could ill afford to bear.

The Secretary of Agriculture has expressed this view with clarity in a letter to Speaker BANKHEAD, dated June 15, 1939. I quote from his letter:

> Unfortunately, the railroads seem determined to find a solution for the admittedly difficult financial situation of certain rail carriers without regard for the more general solution; in fact, from their public statements it would seem that they are seeking to solve their difficulties at the expense of agricultural and other shippers, consumers, and taxpayers.
> Farmers and other shippers should not be required to pay rates based on transportation costs of properties improvidently built, wastefully operated, or partially obsolete. Any effort to improve the condition of the transportation industry should be harmonized with the general welfare. The advocacy of thorough regulation of the minimum rates of motor and water carriers by a centralized agency appears to represent an attempt to use Government power to bring competing transportation agencies into a cartel, and, in this manner, to share traffic and adjust rates in such a way as to earn a return upon all transportation capital of these agencies. Hence, an umbrella would be held over the inefficient plant, and the present high rail rate level would be protected from the impact of vigorous competition. Undoubtedly such a policy would also result in more rigid rates in times of depression, since the motor carrier and boat line could no longer play their role as an effective competitive force in bringing down rail rates on commodities susceptible to rail or truck and rail or water movement.

This is the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, whose duty it is under a recent law passed by this Congress to represent the United States at rate hearings and therefore presumably an expert on rate matters.

I commend to your consideration, also, the following statement by the Secretary of War, contained in his recent letter to Chairman LEA:

> As far as this Department is aware, there is no dissatisfaction on the part of the public with the transportation service afforded on the inland waterways; charges are fully compensatory and there is no destructive rate warfare as between carriers.
> It has not been possible to find in * * * this bill a single proposal that the railroads do anything whatever toward the amelioration or improvement of their own situation. All the provisions seem designed to free them from restraints and obligations, while imposing prohibitive tolls and restrictions on their water competitors and making it more expensive for the public to move freight. Under these provisions inland water carriers can easily be regulated and taxed out of existence without the recapture of enough tonnage to affect railroad earnings appreciably.
> It is essential to realize that water transportation is unlike all other forms of carriage. It is the aggregate of thousands of small independent operators on the inland waterways which gives the character, furnishes the natural regulation, and automatically enforces the fair practices required in this type of transport. But it cannot sustain for long the concerted attack of powerful competitors not because it is not basically sound but because every resource of a powerful adversary has been brought to bear to prevent its becoming established on a normal basis. The remarkable fact is, not that there is so little water-borne tonnage, but that so large a volume actually seeks the waterways in the face of the most determined efforts to prevent it.

This is what Chairman Land, of the Maritime Commission, says about this provision:

> It proposes to expand and change the method of regulation of water transportation, not on the theory that the public using the water carriers demands or would be benefited by such regulation but on the theory that the present economic situation of the railroads require the form of regulation of water carriers provided for in this bill. I think that from your own experience in Congress you will arrive at the conclusion that there is no demand for the enactment of the present bill on the part of shippers or the general public.
> As a matter of fact, farm organizations, shippers, and their trade associations are alarmed at the proposals which the bill contains and sincerely believe that its passage would be detrimental to their interests. The farmers and other shippers in particular are convinced that the effect of the present bill would be to force water transportation rates to levels closely approximating those of rail rates and higher than necessary to reflect the reasonable cost of water transportation, and that they, the users of water transportation, would be footing the bill for the sole benefit of the railroads.
> The seven principal western railroads carried 208,000,000 short tons of revenue freight in 1936 whereas both the common and the contract intercoastal carriers by water together carried 7,500,000 short tons. If this water traffic had moved by these western railroads, it would have increased their revenue tonnage by only 3.6 percent, and by reason of the low rates applicable to most of the commodities their revenues would be increased by an even smaller percentage.

Let me remind you again, the railroads are asking for this regulation, not the shippers.

One of my railroad friends told me in Del Rio last year that I had a perfect voting record for last session, where railroad labor was involved. I do not know where he got his information, and I did not know that it was correct. I have not looked it up since, but presumably it must have been pretty good, or he would not have said this. I want to be fair to labor, and this is not a fight against railroad labor. If this bill is passed railroad management will get the benefit of it. Only 3 or 4 percent of our total tonnage is involved in this matter. By a slight lengthening of the trains, as we have pointed out in our minority report, they can and probably will absorb the little added tonnage involved, and the same men will do the work. No, railroad labor is not greatly concerned about the outcome of this controversy.

I do not want to appear to be harsh toward railroad management. They have had their difficulties. So have the steel companies of this country and various other industries, including the automobile manufacturers. What do you think a Ford, a Chevrolet, a Plymouth, or a Buick automobile would cost if the Government regulated the automobile companies to prevent so-called cutthroat competition, about which we are hearing so much in this debate? Cutthroat competition. What is cutthroat competition? Does Henry Ford have cutthroat competition in the manufacture of his automobiles? Does Walter Chrysler have cutthroat competition in the manufacture of his automobiles? They certainly do; and yet because they have not been regulated, because we have not stifled the initiative and the resourcefulness of the men who are in charge of this great industry, but have permitted and encouraged keen competition, they have furnished us cheap automobiles. The United States Government, with all of its regulatory bodies, with all of its boast of fairness and efficiency, has never managed a single business that I know of so well as these concerns have managed theirs. That is not all.

The Government is today in many cases either reaching out for more power and demanding more regulatory authority, as in this instance, to prevent fair and legitimate competition, on the one hand, or is threatening prosecution for some alleged violation of the antitrust law on the other, where it is contended competition does not exist. These two propositions do not jibe.

What is the matter with the railroads? Not enough regulation, say the gentlemen who sponsor this legislation—regulation for their competitors, mind you. That is what it amounts to. Regulate water transportation. Why? In order that the railroads may successfully compete with water. What kind of regulation will that require? It will require constantly raising water rates. No other kind of regulation will do the job which they want done. Not a single man has said that water rates are too high, so it is not likely they will be revised downward, they will be revised upward.

Who is going to pay this increase? The shippers of the United States must of necessity pay it first, and ultimately the producer and the consumer. So, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the membership study very carefully this proposition before giving the Federal Government additional regulatory power to harass and discourage industry and commerce, which in many cases are now suffering from too much regulation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, last year the President of the United States, recognizing the financial condition of the railroads of the country, appointed a committee of 15, representing various groups interested in transportation, as a committee to consider our transportation problems. Following that meeting, the President appointed a committee of three which made recommendations to the President, and upon that report the bill, S. 2009, which has been passed by the Senate and amended by the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is based.

The purpose of this legislation is to improve the Nation's transportation system and this bill is no hastily prepared or inadequately considered measure. Committees of the Senate and the House have held extended hearings on the subject and it is my belief that the bill in its present form constitutes the best approach to the regulation of all interstate transportation that has been formulated.

What the country needs is the best system of transportation that can be provided and one which will utilize every means of transport, whether rail, water, highway, air, or pipe, to the best advantage, each in its proper place, and with a maximum of cooperation and a minimum of uneconomic duplication and waste. Now, one great trouble, as I see it, is that while transportation is a very live subject and there is plenty of talk about it, the talk is mostly by partisans. Each form of carriage has its own particular watchdogs, and to make the melee still hotter there is another line-up of the watchdogs of the investor, of labor, of shippers, and of communities. The only interest which has lacked a watchdog has been the general public interest. I am trying to occupy a small part of that vacancy and living in hope that I shall not be chewed up in the attempt.

The problem is even something more than a transportation problem. Take the railroads. They still form, as is so often said, the backbone of our transportation system. Their health is essential to sound transportation health. But they also constitute one of the largest industries of the country and are normally among its largest consumers, particularly of capital goods. The railroads suffer when general business suffers, but this statement is equally true if reversed. From another angle, their securities have in the past had such a high place in the investment market that they are to be found in the portfolios of practically all fiduciary, educational, and benevolent institutions. In one way or another most of the people of the country have a financial stake in the railroads. Serious and widespread impairment of their securities therefore has far-reaching and demoralizing consequences quite apart from any transportation effect.

I bring this out not with any idea that on these accounts the railroads should be given any favored treatment over their competitors, or that they do not have any sins of commission or omission to answer for, but simply to show the importance in this instance of a square deal and of protection against any uneconomic development in transportation which cannot be supported from the point of view of the general public interest.

There has always been keen and widespread competition in the railroad field between the railroad themselves and with the water lines. Now, the railroads are beset on all sides by the further competition of the private automobile, the truck, the bus, the airplane, the pipe line, and the electric transmission line. If transportation which is competitive ought not to be regulated, railroad regulation could be reduced to very small proportions, and there is strict logic in such a proposal if the entire field is not to be covered by sane and comprehensive regulation. However, I am sure that the country does not want any such thing. If you will read your history, you will find that Federal regulation of the railroads was precipitated much more by the abuses of competition than by the abuses of monopoly, although both entered in. Owing to the rapid growth of other forms of transportation and our failure to cover the entire field with regulation, we now have a situation very like that which caused railroad regulation.

What the country needs is the best and cheapest combined system of transportation consistent with fair treatment of labor and with earnings which will support adequate credit and the ability to expand as need develops and take advantage of all improvements in the art of transportation. This system must be in the hands of reliable and responsible operators whose charges for service will be known, dependable, and reasonable and free from unjust discrimination. Unregulated competition will destroy instead of provide such a system. If experience teaches anything, it teaches that, and there is no escape from the consequent conclusion that the whole system must be brought under centralized control.

This control must concern itself with planning and prevention as well as with the cure of evils after they arise. It must deal with the future provision of new facilities, with the proper coordination of those which exist, and with the development of sound general policies affecting both service and rates. It must prevent unjustifiable duplication and waste; promote the use of each agency of transportation, in cooperation with the others, primarily in the service to which it is economically best adapted; check the forms of endless chain rate-cutting or service promotion which have come to be known as destructive competition; and protect the public against unreasonable charges and unfair discrimination.

In concluding, let me say that there is, in my judgment, no more important problem before the country than the transportation problem, and few that are more difficult to solve. I do believe, however, that the country is beginning to appreciate its importance and to see it in its entirety, and not merely its edges and angles and pieces. The essentials of the problem are beginning to come to light, and the need for dealing with it on broad lines and through some centralized and comprehensive form of control. Ultimately we shall find and apply the answer. We must think not solely in terms of railroads or waterways or highway vehicles or airplanes but in terms of transportation, and keep in mind the only important end, which is the general public interest.

Mr. Chairman, the Transportation Act of 1939, amending the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, and extending its application to addtional types of carriers and transportation, may not be the final answer to our transportation problems, but it is designed to better the present situation and has my unqualified support.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Chairman, perhaps it will be a good idea for a minute to glance at the national transportation policy upon which this bill is drafted. I will not give you the whole policy, but simply state that it is to cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof to encourage fair wages, equitable working conditions, and to the end of developing, coordinating, and preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as all other means whatever to meet the needs of the commerce of the United States, and so on. This has been an honest and sincere effort on the part of this committee to pursue the inspiration of that policy. Whether we have been able to do it or not, you are the jury to hear the facts and determine. Bear in mind there are 25 members on this committee. With one or two slight exceptions—and modesty precludes my naming them—strong men. I recommend that you study the personnel of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Oh, I know one or two have departed from the fold, and I must confess they are men of ability, students, men whose work on the committee has proven them capable. I am, however, particularly interested in the case of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH].

He came up there one bright morning espousing the cause of Professor Splawn, of the University of Texas. He proudly puts the doctor on the stand and gloriously recommends him and states that we will hear the very gospel of truth when he takes the stand. We heard him. We were greatly influenced by the contribution of Professor Splawn to the hearing. But Professor Splawn comes out recommending not only the land-grant provisions of this bill, as you will find them on pages 57 and 58 of the hearings, but the water provisions of the bill as set forth by section 3. Later on we find the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH] toward the latter part of the hearings, getting a little timid. Now we find him—and he has the right to do it—signed up with the genial, capable, and highly esteemed gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. The two have filed a sort of adverse or minority report.

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the genial gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SOUTH. When the gentleman votes in favor of repeal of the land grants, as I presume by his remarks he is going to do, what excuse is he going to offer to his people for the railroads to retain several million acres of the 134,000,000 acres that the Government gave them for a reduced rate, and which the gentleman is going to vote to abrogate? Why not let the railroads return the 12,000,000 acres they now have, since they have sold 122,000,000 acres and are no longer going to give the Government the benefit of the rates they contracted to give it?

Mr. PATRICK. I see the position which the gentleman constructs for me, but the gentleman is an able lawyer. I will consult him, and I am sure he will be able to give me some counsel, if it is commensurate with his defense in this case, that will put me in right with my folks.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman is going to repeal that provision.

Mr. PATRICK. I cannot suffer.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I cannot yield. I want to cover what little I have here in the time assigned to me. The reason I yielded to the gentleman from Texas was because I nominated him and I did not want him to feel too badly.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill is to try to regulate, as we must in enacting legislation of this kind, for the general good of the country. We know, of course, that the railroads have been charged with many practices that were iniquitous, whether true or not. We know that many things could be said that would probably tend to make some Members a little heedless and maybe ruthless in legislation of this kind. But let us try to remember that we are in this case legislating for a sweeping proposition involving 130,000,000 people. This is not a program applied to certain transportation companies particularly. It is applied to the whole picture of transportation, even in its logic and in its sweeping effect; and with all the wails and calls we have heard, we have failed to hear one logical reason advanced why, if we must regulate the railroads, the busses, and trucks in the country, we should not, by the same token, regulate water transportation. When we come to a thing of that kind, when we try to investigate, as we had to do in many cases, when we empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to go into the structure of hauling in this Nation, why do we suddenly come to a "sacred cow" and fall on our knees and salaam and begin paying tribute to it because it is the waterways?

Whenever you go into the whole picture you have to do that. You have to go into the thing in full detail. The Interstate Commerce Commission may determine and report the value of property owned and used by every common carrier. The purpose of that law is to get the facts and, having gotten all the facts, to know the facts, so that it will go into law. That is what this legislation seeks to do. Know the truth and the truth will set you free.

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I cannot yield. We will talk it over privately. I think I can heal the gentleman's wounds.

That is the way it must be handled if it is capably and fairly done. We come back to the argument presented by those who come here and say, "Let us alone. Let the rivers alone. Bind and fetter the railroads. Bind up and hold fast with bands of steel the motor transportation, but let our rivers alone." Then they get patriotic and grow eloquent with logic and arguments that smacks so heartily of the same arguments that were advanced when they came up in the past and said, "This is a free America. We cannot regulate the railroads." It sounds like the railroads' argument made at that time being presented in opposition to railroad legislation and the creation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They concede now that many things they fought the hardest have grown up to be most advantageous to them. This same procedure must be followed in the case of water transportation. The question is asked, "What is the little fellow going to do?" As a matter of fact, when you go into this, when you follow any sort of regulatory measure, it is regulation for all the people. It is not a matter of getting at any of the little folks or supporting the big ones. It is a matter of getting a program that will be for the general benefit of the entire Nation. This thing works itself into the fabric of a matter that is becoming more important to America every day. We must face it if we are going to take care of labor and if we are going to take care of the people who buy and sell in this Nation; we are certainly coming to one thing, whether it is an item of transportation, an apple on the market or a bed blanket. We must figure and work out a basis in this Nation so that every commodity that goes on the market, whether a locomotive or pack of needles, so that every person who contributes to it gets a living wage.

If it is a woman who picks the cotton or spins the thread or works out the spool in a spool of thread or stands behind the counter, everything on the open market, from the time it begins to turn over in trade to the end of its journey, must contribute a living wage to those who were a part of its movement and exchange. Any steamboat line that fails to do this is a burden to the public and an enemy to transportation development and recovery. This law seeks to aid in relieving the country from the evils of cluttered-up transportation and to bring order from the chaos now prevailing. Someday the river men will look up from the chunk-chunk-chunking of their paddle wheels and call this committee blessed.

When you do other than that, whether it is an old barge line or whatever it is, then you are helping to destroy the very structure that we must keep safe and sound if the Nation survives. It is these little corner-cutting propositions, in my opinion, that have hurt us and have injured transportation and have helped to bring about a condition that threatens the transportation structure of this Nation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. JOHNS].

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I had the privilege of reading the report of the committee that was appointed by the President of the United States to study the transportation problem and I found it most interesting and informative.

I believe that 90 percent of the reasons the railroads are in the condition they are today is that they have had entirely too much regulation. I have lived long enough to see the railroads of this country regulated from the time they were prosperous until today 33⅓ percent of the railroad mileage of the United States is in the hands of receivers. It is no wonder, of course, that the waterways feel that they do not want this regulation; that is natural, because they have stood by and seen what has happened to the railroads.

The railroads are to blame in large part for their present condition because they failed to take advantage of the advance of time, the improvements of transportation. They had their rights-of-way, they had their equipment to go ahead and compete with any other mode of transportation you might have had in this country; but instead of doing something, they let the man who had a few dollars go out and buy a truck on the installment plan, and he went out and took this business away from the railroads. They were not entirely to blame for that because, I am informed, if they started a proceeding before the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief it took them a long period of time before they could possibly get any order from the Commission to do anything.

As a businessman, I have had experience with the railroads and with the truck companies, as well as with transportation by water. I stood by for nearly 3 years and waited for the railroad companies to be able to deliver promptly at the door of jobbers in cities products that we were producing, and in the meantime I saw the truck companies take most of this business away from the railroads. So the condition that exists today is due in part at least to the failure of the railroad companies to do what they should have done in time.

This report referred to does not show much about the income of the waterways, but it does tell about the income of the railroad companies and what their losses have been. However, I call your attention to page 1240 of the hearings of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee on this legislation, where it is shown that the waterway companies, at least on the Mississippi River, have been prosperous; that they have made money at the same time the railroad companies were losing money. We cannot blame the railroad companies because the water-transportation companies have made money; neither can we blame the water-transportation companies because the railroads have lost money. This is an age in which we require that commodities be delivered fast, and the American public has reached the point where they insist on prompt service. The transportation company that is able to give that kind of service is going to get the business in this country. It does not make any difference whether it is the water companies, the truck companies, or the railroad companies. The railroad companies have discovered that, of course, and they are now competing with the truck companies. The waterways will never be able to compete with the railroad companies or truck companies as far as delivering freight promptly is concerned, so that they must devote themselves entirely to their own transportation facilities. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman—

> But yesterday the word of Caesar might
> Have stood against the world; now lies he there,
> And none so poor to do him reverence.

So it has happened to the railroad, once the industrial king of America. Now the jackass may kick the sick lion, and an opponent of economic royalism can stand on the floor of Congress and plead the cause of the railroads without having the finger of suspicion pointed at him. How have the mighty fallen, and that is about as low as they could fall.

Mr. Chairman, in my brief time I cannot undertake to discuss the provisions or the mechanics of this bill. I must leave that to the very able subcommittee which labored for 3 months to bring forth legislation for joint regulation under the Interstate Commerce Commission of the competing forms of transportation in the United States—rail, motor, and water, which is demanded by the deplorable conditions existing in the field of transportation, and due, in part, to unregulated competition. I know that the very able and competent chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the subcommittee, and the committee as a whole have labored to preserve each agency of transportation embraced in the bill in the field best adapted to its particular mode of transportation and to deal fairly with each of them, to the end that each may make its proper contribution to the transportation needs of the country, and on a basis of "live and let live." I believe this legislation is a more than fair beginning toward that end.

Railways and motorways in interstate commerce are now wholly under the control of one governmental agency. Waterways are partially but ineffectually under the same agency. This legislation simply proposes to complete the operation, and do, if we can, for transportation what we are trying to do for government by reorganization legislation.

If my contribution to this debate shall stress the importance and value in the national transportation field of one of these agencies, it is not intended for the purpose of injuring the others, but, rather, to overcome, if I may, what appears to me to be an underappreciation—indeed, a prejudice—against one of these forms of transportation, to the injury of this incomparably most important and most valuable of all forms of transportation.

If I may make any contribution to the consideration of the great measure before the House, involving more than $30,000,000,000 of capital investment, which contribution will be a bit different, from the standpoint of treatment of the question, and a bit helpful in enabling the Members of the House to see the whole picture of the transportation world in this country, with each phase of the picture in its proper relationship to the picture as a whole, I will feel that I have done something to enable some Members to form a proper judgment, and to see the justice and necessity of the establishment of a principle which the country now generally recognizes—that of the joint control in one regulatory body of the three forms of transportation dealt with in the bill.

My major premise will be that the great railway structure of this country, incomparably the greatest in the world, with 240,000 miles of trackage, and a capital investment of $24,000,000,000, is not only incomparably the principal but the only indispensable agency of transportation in the United States.

Tomorrow morning every ship on the inland and intercoastal waterways of the United States could be tied up at the docks and the country as a whole would not miss them. But if the wheels on the rails were to stop, the country as a whole would be paralyzed. This statement is supported by undisputed transportation statistics, by the uniform statements and admissions of the advocates of water as against rail transportation, and by the history of experience. I shall put in the last proof first.

During the period of the World War, the railways alone handled not only all the normal traffic of the United States but the extraordinary traffic of the war emergency. At the time of the World War the intercoastal lines through the Panama Canal, deserted that traffic en masse for the more-profitable trans-Atlantic traffic; and at the time of the World War motor transportation was not even a negligible factor, and was practically not in existence, as an agency of transportation. The railroads, unprepared as they were, unwarned by any past experience which might foreshadow to them and to the country the forthcoming of such an emergency—the railroads carried the load alone.

History could repeat itself. Tomorrow the ships could disappear from the intercoastal traffic. And the trucks, valuable though they are, disappear from the highways, except in local service, and the railroads would meet every urgent need in transportation. Bear in mind, I am not presenting the case of that agency of transportation which some interests and some areas think ought to receive last, not first, consideration, in the preservation and upbuilding of a self-sustaining transportation system in the United States. I am not building up a showing to support a claim that the other forms of transportation should be discriminated against or that the railways should be shown favoritism. I have in mind the sole purpose of stressing the vital necessity of giving the railways a square deal, as compared with their competitors, and this is all they are entitled to.

I started to say that history could repeat itself. It not only could, but would, repeat itself, given the emergency. If a world conflict broke out tomorrow, the railway structure of the United States would be its chief, incomparably its chief, transportation arm of the national defense, as it was in the World War. The ships would go out of the Panama Canal as they did before, and the trucks would supply only a moiety of the suddenly enormously increased volume of traffic that would be imposed upon our transportation system. We have now in this country eight transcontinental railway systems with their tens of thousands of miles of cross lines and feeders. They should be preserved and strengthened. They should be rendered and maintained fit to meet the emergency. They are not only as indispensable to the national defense as the Army and the Navy, but they come before the Army and Navy. Without them, the Army and Navy could not move, and all the inland and intercoastal ships could not supply any of the requirement, and all the trucks could not supply 1 percent of the requirement.

The Congress is busy building up the Army and building up the Navy, spending now more than a billion dollars a year, not one dollar of which will ever return. It is spending nothing to build up the railways, the first arm of the national defense. They are already built, but they are, in a measure, standing still, and going into bankruptcy and receiverships, one-third of them now there, for the want of revenue. Revenue not merely to pay for overcapitalization and overdebt, and there is an overload of these, but for the want of revenue to meet their actual expense of operation. If there are ways in which to remedy this situation it behooves the country to be about it.

I want to turn now to some statistics showing the comparative importance and value of the railway and waterway structures of the country in the field of transportation. I shall not need to confuse you with figures. These figures will deal with the proportionate traffic value of rail and domestic water transportation, excluding the Great Lakes, which traffic is exempted from this measure. I have taken them from the testimony before the committee, of Dr. Walter M. W. Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Let me divert here to say that two representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission appeared before our committee on this legislation—Mr. Joseph B. Eastman and Dr. W. M. W. Splawn. In this vast and complex system of government, it is reassuring to me to know that it has such men in its employ. It is an education to listen to these men. I have no hesitancy in saying that what Mr. Eastman and Dr. Splawn say goes a long way with me.

Dr. Splawn stated that in 1937 the railways of the country carried 363,000,000,000 ton-miles of freight as against 110,000,000,000 ton-miles by waterways, of which only 17,000,000,000 was inland and intercoastal water-borne traffic, the Great Lakes being excluded from this bill. Reduced to percentages, the inland and intercoastal waterways carried 4.7 percent of freight as compared with the railways. Intercity trucks carried thirty billions, or 5.5 percent, or more than the waterways.

As an agency of freight transportation the waterways are shown to be worth less than 5 percent of the railways. That the addition of this small percentage of water-freight traffic to the total value of railway traffic would be negligible to the railways, and that it could all be handled by the railways without the addition of a locomotive or freight car, and with an inappreciable addition of employees, has been iterated and reiterated by every representative of the water lines of the United States who has appeared before the Interstate Commerce Committee since I have been a member of it.

Not only that, but they have iterated and reiterated that the addition of water-traffic income to railway-traffic income would be negligible. When Major General Ashburn, president of the Inland Waterways Corporation, appeared before our committee against this bill and made such statements I interjected that similar statements had been made by all representatives of the water interests before our committee, and that this repetition raised in my mind the question, What is a thing worth that is not worth anything? Their claim that the water lines are the transportation salvation of the United States but that the total volume of their traffic and also their income would not materially help the railways simply added up in my mind, not to the answer, but to the question, What is a thing worth that is not worth anything? While water-borne traffic is not 5 percent of rail-borne traffic, its income is not 2 percent. Unquestionably it is the cheaper form of transportation. How it is that it can be cheaper I will come to later.

Many Members question the yardstick of T. V. A. in the measurement of the cost of power production. I am not an authority on that. Nor am I an authority on transportation costs. But some facts have been forced on my attention which have raised in my mind more than a question as to the reliability of the water yardstick as a measurement of the cost of its own transportation. I will come to that later.

Another comparison between these two forms of transportation which must be taken into consideration, if we are to deal justly between them, is the respective value of their investments. The figures given by Dr. Splawn were: Rails, $24,000,000,000; water lines, $3,800,000,000. Reduced to percentages, water lines are 16 percent of rail lines. The motor investment was given as: Trucks, $510,000,000; busses, $255,000,000; total, $765,000,000. Added to water lines, we have a total investment of $4,300,000,000, as compared with a railway investment of $24,000,000,000, or only 19 percent. All of them combined are still under 20 percent of the value of the railway systems of the country.

Another comparison is afforded by the respective operating expenses and taxes of the two agencies of transportation which raise the only issue in this bill: Railways, $4,400,000,000; waterways, $1,000,000,000.

Now, as to the cheapness of water transportation. It is conceded that water is the cheapest method of transportation, but I shall now undertake to show briefly that this is, in large part, due to differences for which the water lines are entitled to no credit, and which emphasize the justice of placing them under joint regulation with the railways in the matter of rates and charges. Nature furnished them free waterways—the oceans, the lakes, and the rivers. They are made fit and maintained fit for navigation out of the Public Treasury. They are harbored, channelized, and leveed out of the Public Treasury. In one bill, in the Seventy-fifth Congress, we authorized more than $600,000,000 for the improvement of rivers and harbors for navigation. The House at this session passed a bill carrying $83,000,000.

The water lines pay no taxes on their ways. They pay no maintenance. They are as free to them as the air.

The railways must buy and build and maintain and pay taxes on their ways. Even their rights-of-way are taxed as real estate. All that is necessary to embark in water traffic is a boat, and the Government has given away a lot of these. To engage in railway traffic, hundreds of millions of dollars must be spent in the building and equipment of a single line of railway; the acquisition of rights-of-way, the building of the trackage and the terminals, and all the fixed and permanent facilities and equipment pertaining to railway operation; and then, as I say, they are taxed for these ways and instrumentalities the same as any other property, and they should be taxed. If all the costs that are involved in furnishing and maintaining absolutely free ways were taxed to the water lines, it is a question how cheap their transportation would be. Indeed, it is a question whether there would be any inland water transportation. The cost would be too enormous to be borne.

And even with all the advantages furnished them by nature and the Government, they cannot compete with the railways in a free, open field. In order to compete, they must, in addition to all these other advantages, go largely unregulated, while the railways must be regulated and restricted at every turn, and prohibited by law from competing with the water lines. And on top of all this, with free ways maintained by the Government and unregulated, the water lines have existed only through Government subsidies. The waterways have always been a Federal relief project. Instead of being the cheapest form of transportation, they are the most expensive. They are only cheap because the great bulk of the cost of water transportation is borne by the Federal Government.

As compared with the railways, they are favored by cheap labor, the cheapest transportation labor in the country. The railway employees in the operating department are among the highest-paid workers in the country. Testimony before the subcommittee of the Interstate Commerce Committee, in hearings on the Pettengill bill, showed that rail wages averaged twice as high as water wages, and four times as high on the basis of tonnage handled per man. Railway employees rate high in the standard of citizenship. They are American citizens almost wholly. They are taxpayers. They own good homes in all the towns and cities of the land.

Sea labor is almost the opposite; more than half of them aliens. Harry Bridges is a natural product of water transportation.

If he is an outlaw, he is bucking an outlaw game, and he is legitimate. Read the testimony of grand old Andrew Furuseth—peace to his ashes—for 50 years the head of the American seamen—a grand character; a true son of the vikings—before the Interstate Commerce Committee for the story of the seaman, the type he is, and the conditions under which he exists, afloat and ashore. This is the type of transportation service and the type of men in the interest of which some Members of Congress and some areas would cripple the railway structure of the country and keep it in hobbles, while its competitor goes free.

The water lines claim, and I concede, that if the railways were turned loose, as the waterways are, subjected only to the present waterway type of regulation, the waterways could be put out of business. I make this proposition now: That if the railways had their choice between putting the waterways under joint regulation or being freed from the restrictions which tie them down, or even if they could be measurably loosened, there is no question what their choice would be. And if this proposition were put up to the water lines, there is no question what their choice would be. They would be running to Congress for joint regulation.

The country has wisely made the decision. This bill is not before the House simply at the demand of the railways. It is here mainly in answer to the demand of the country, the very necessities of the situation, that coordination and stability be brought into the transportation service of the country, with a view to conserving all of them; with a view to protecting them, not only from each other, but from themselves, if it is within the power of legislation and government to accomplish this result. The attempt should be made, and under this bill it will be made.

Railroads have been Government regulated for 50 years. Three years ago motor transportation, which is much more important to the country than inland-water transportation, was placed under the same control, and placed there with its approval, and its experience is that it has benefited, and that order and stability are being introduced into motor transportation. But there is a local interest demand that water transportation be exempt and continue as a charge on the Public Treasury, with a roving commission as its charter.

They say joint regulation will increase the cost of water transportation. The best answer I have heard to this was made by the representative of the great lumber interests of the State of Washington, appearing before the Interstate Commerce Committee in behalf of railroad-relief legislation. When asked how it came about that a representative of an industry peculiarly adapted to water transportation and accessible to such transportation was appearing in behalf of the railways, his reply was that his industry required something besides cheap transportation, that it required a market, and that formerly the railways supplied 75 percent of that market and now only 25 percent.

I believe this law will be administered fairly by the able Commission, with its great background of experience and service, to which it is to be entrusted, and I can find no more fitting conclusion to my remarks than to quote a paragraph from a statement made to our committee on this bill by Commissioner Eastman:

> The Commission believes in the equal and impartial public regulation of all important forms of transportation, and is also confident that much can be done to stabilize and improve conditions through proper use of the power to fix minimum rates and of the power to control the right to engage in new operations; but I think I reflect its opinion when I say that there is no reason to believe that such policies will be any more beneficial to the railroads than to other types of carriers.

[Applause.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure, as has been so often repeated here this afternoon, that we all want to help the railroads. I come from a district where there are many railroad men, a district where many railroads center; but I also come from a district where there are many persons who are not employed by the railroads or not interested in the railroads either financially or otherwise. I come from a district where there are also many shippers who are interested in fair and just and equitable rates and in a rate structure which will protect the industry and the commerce and the trade that is left to protect in my section of the country.

I do not know just what the percentage is of the people on one side or the other of this question, but as I have received letters, telegrams, petitions, and other communications regarding this question I estimate that possibly we can affect and perhaps benefit a small percent of the people temporarily by passing this bill and putting this act on the statute books, but at the same time we will be doing something, if not detrimental, then of a questionable value as regards the welfare of the best interest of the other much larger group of the people. So as I study this problem I have come to ask myself, "Am I to serve the interest of the small group or the greater interest of the larger group—in other words, the general welfare of the general public of my section and of your section?"

I have read the report of the President's Committee of Six, set up to study the railroads' problem. I have read it very carefully. In fact, I have studied it day after day since coming here on January 1, and after that study my conclusion is that that committee was thinking only of their own little problem and their own little affairs and had forgotten the rest of the Nation and its people and welfare. I have also reached the conclusion that their recommendations are based on fallacious assumptions and reasoning, and if I had more time—which I requested of the committee, but which, due to the fact that our time is limited here, I could not get—I could take this report of the Committee of Six apart, paragraph by paragraph and page by page, and show you exactly what I mean and point out to you the fallacy on which they base their arguments.

You heard it said this afternoon by my distinguished colleague from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] that the Interstate Commerce Committee of the House has put in this bill only four of the things which this Committee of Six recommended. Well, perhaps, they put only four things in, but as I read this report of the Committee of Six, I find, essentially, there are only about three things they are asking for, and if the Interstate Commerce Committee put four things in, then they have given one additional favor to the Committee of Six, or more even than they asked for in the beginning.

I realize, too, that this bill as it was originally written, based on their recommendations, covered 197 pages, and that today, as it is brought to us, it covers only 100 pages.

Evidently the pressure which has been put on here by the general public throughout the Nation has caused them to wring out about 100 pages and to bring down to only 100 pages the demands and the requests of this Committee of Six which they think they can railroad through Congress in the name of saving our railroads.

Yes, we are interested in saving our railroads, but I want to say to you and I know you will agree wth me if you have given this matter thought and consideration, you will never save the railroads by pursuing the recommendations either contained in this bill or contained in the report of the Committee of Six. You will do two things rather than that, and I cannot take the time at this time to go into those two things, but you Members of Congress know what those two things are and you are either for one of those things or the other, depending upon your own particular, individual, social, political, and economic philosophy.

The sense and the meaning of the demands of this Committee of Six, boiled down, are three, as I have said. First, they want equality of regulations. I think that is perhaps, a desirable, if unattainable, ideal. They want equality of taxation and they want equality of subsidization, they say. I am now quoting from the second and third paragraphs of the first page of their report.

Let us consider for a moment what that means and exactly what the result would be or just what the Committee of Six are asking, and what consequently this bill seeks to provide under the guidance of our sympathetic Interstate Commerce Committee.

Let us take the matter of subsidization: You are all familiar with the great grants and gifts and subsidies which were made in the early days of the history of our railroads to put them on their feet and to make them possible and profitable. You are familiar with the subsidies which have been given down through the decades since then, and I will submit to any sincere and fair-minded person that we have given the railroads far more in the way of subsidies than we have given our inland waterways, or all of our waterways for that matter. But they come back to us and say now, "We have spent or we have squandered all those subsidies, those gifts and grants that you generous people of the United States gave us, and we want you to give us some more so we can be put on an equality with a little infant industry which transports, as has been said this afternoon and is shown in this report, only 3 percent of the ton-miles of the traffic of this Nation."

With respect to equality of taxation or relief from overtaxation, I will agree with the Committee of Six that something should be done; and I believe that if they were to handle this thing in a businesslike and a sensible way they would go to the States which are overtaxing in many cases our public carriers, and they would get something done in the way of equity and justice as to taxation rates. It does not seem to me right or fair, as I have considered the plight of the railroads, that they should be continually forced to pay out in taxation more money than they are making, as has been shown by the records; in other words, paying a tax burden out of a deficit. This is not sound business and not good sense, and I recommend that the States of the Nation take into consideration the plight of the railroads, because that is one of the basic and fundamental things which we need to consider in rehabilitating our railroads.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ALEXANDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I understand the railroads of this country pay about $250,000,000 a year because of legislative restrictions now upon them that ought to be removed.

Mr. ALEXANDER. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan. The exact State tax figure for 1937 is $252,964,923, a little more for 1938, and I might add that there are two things which we, as legislators, if we are sincere and honest about this matter of helping the railroads, should do—examine carefully and correct the tax situation which is killing the railroads, and also give them some Federal financial assistance at low rates of interest on long-term loans in order to enable them to rehabilitate their lines and modernize their equipment.

The total taxes paid by class I railroads—that is, both State and Federal—were $325,665,165 in 1937 and $331,330,193 for the 12 months ending June 30, 1938. And this tax toll was exacted notwithstanding the fact that the year's net income was estimated as a net deficit of $125,000,000 at the end of 1938 when the Committee of Six made its report. Still the States continue to exact exorbitant taxes out of all proportion to earnings and perhaps out of reason, inasmuch as such taxes are three times as much as all Federal taxes taken from the railroads.

But to get back to the first item suggested by our Committee of Six—equality of regulation; that is, according to their formula, regulation by and under the Interstate Commerce Commission, which it is hinted in many quarters is now owned lock, stock, and barrel by the railroads, whom this Commission seeks daily so assiduously to serve, although it was set up originally in 1887 to protect and serve the shipper and the general public.

The distinguished chairman of the House Interstate Commerce Committee has just said, almost with tears in his eyes, "We are told that the waterways do not want to submit to the same regulations that the railways do."

Well, of course, they do not. Nor did the railroads ask for regulation in 1887, or consent to it. No, they did not ask for nor willingly consent to the benign regulations which they now enjoy and like so well that they, out of their generosity and the kindness of their hearts—of steel—want to give to the waterways. It is such a wonderful gift to the water and bus carriers that one almost wonders that the railroads could wish to give part of their good things away that way.

No, my friends, the railroads did not want the regulation they have now until they found in a few decades that they could gain control of their regulatory body. For more information along this line I refer you to the accounts of the backgrounds of several of the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission as found in the latest edition of Who's Who in America.

Now, how long will it take for our inland waterways handling all of 3 percent of our freight revenue ton-miles to gain the same or equal control over the regulatory death cell to which our overgenerous railroad boys want to consign the waterways in section III of this bill? Do not be so gullible as to think it will ever happen or that the water carriers could long survive if we turn control over to the I. C. C. On the other hand, and of a certainty, the net result will be their death and destruction instead, with consequent loss and damage to the shippers and to the consuming public and to the taxpayers.

Perhaps the proponents of this bill would like to suggest for a compromise that we divide the I. C. C. into regional sections or into business sections for purposes of selecting appointees. If so, then it would be interesting to inquire how they would cut up the country into 11 sectors or if they would give the railroads four appointees and the bus and water carriers three each, or should the railroads get 6 out of the 11 as special proponents of the welfare of the rail carriers?

There are of course, many other angles to this great national problem, but my limited time will not permit further discussion now. Therefore I wish to say in conclusion that I am opposed to this bill because of the injustice which it would perpetrate on the great mass of the people of this country for the benefit—and a very doubtful benefit—of a limited few, and I hope the measure will be generously amended or defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JONES of Texas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1871. An act to prevent pernicious political activities.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, JULY 22, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we ask Thee to read our hearts and know our minds. May we pray not for wealth or fame but for eyes to behold the truth and for a realizing sense that knows the eternal right. Clothe us with a manly faith, strong, courageous, which even dares with heart and hand to stoop to the lowliest of Thy children. We pray, dear Lord, for strength that never wavers, for a hope that never grows dim, and for those material blessings which the righteous may enjoy without harm and hold without wrong. Almighty God, give us power to gain dominion over selfishness, envy, and resentment. In every situation the Lord give us strength to hold on to our better selves. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 2065. An act to provide for the regulation of the sale of certain securities in interstate and foreign commerce and through the mails, and the regulation of the trust indentures under which the same are issued, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1610. An act to prevent discrimination against graduates of certain schools, and those acquiring their legal education in law offices, in the making of appointments to Government positions the qualifications for which include legal training or legal experience; and

S. J. Res. 176. Joint resolution providing for participation by the United States in the celebration to be held at Fort McHenry on September 14, 1939, in celebration of the one hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the writing of The Star-Spangled Banner.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANDERSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein an address by Dr. McCormick, grand exalted ruler of the Elks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered yesterday, July 21, by Col. J. Rion McKissick, president of the University of South Carolina, on Manassas Battlefield, at the presentation of a monument in respect to Gen. Barnard Elliott Bee.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the railroad bill and to include certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

REGISTRY OF PURSERS AND SURGEONS AS STAFF OFFICERS ON VESSELS

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 6076) to provide for the registry of pursers and surgeons as staff officers on vessels of the United States, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out "50" and insert "100."

Page 4, line 13, strike out all after "Provided," down to and including "operations" in line 15 and insert "That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any vessel of the United States operated on bays, sounds, inland waterways, and lakes, other than the Great Lakes, or to passenger ferries and car ferries operated on the Great Lakes."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Virginia tell us the effect of these amendments?

Mr. BLAND. The amendments really do not materially change the bill. The bill provided that on ocean-going vessels licensed to carry more than 50 passengers the officer in charge of the staff department should be the chief purser. The amendment increases that to 100 passengers.

The second amendment inserts, after the word "any", the word "such." It is a clarifying amendment.

Then there is another clarifying amendment which inserts the words "designated therein."

The other amendment inserted by the Senate was where we had provided that the provisions of the act should not apply to any vessel in the United States engaged in ferry operations. There was some question as to whether that sufficiently covered the situation, and the Senate amended it so that it would not apply to vessels operating on bays, sounds, inland waterways, and lakes, other than the Great Lakes, or to passenger ferries and car ferries operated on the Great Lakes.

That was the original intent of the bill as it passed the House, and we thought it was sufficiently clear, but it did develop that it was not, and this is simply a clarifying amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are no substantial changes in the bill?

Mr. BLAND. There are no substantial changes in the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COMMERCIAL LOANS

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Speaker, this morning I am in receipt of a letter from one of the leading industrial manufacturers in my district, a very reliable company that manufactures farming equipment and factory supplies. The secretary and treasurer of this company informs me that a few days ago they received a letter from one of their leading representatives from another State, who states that he had a prospect for the purchase of a piece of farm equipment, and upon applying to his local banker for a loan of $1,200 he was refused, but was told that they would let him have the money for the purchase of an automobile.

It appears that due to Federal legislation it is impossible to make loans on financial statements, and that the examiners of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Co. make them call in loans unless covered by liquid collateral, such as Government bonds or listed stocks. Most of these small businesses and manufacturers in my district do not have this kind of collateral and never did. At least this particular manufacturer did not and prior to the closing of the local banks a few years ago could go to his local banker and borrow a few thousand dollars upon the signing of a note and everything was satisfactory, but today, under certain Federal laws, he finds himself helpless to do this.

It seems our banks are loaded with millions of dollars to lend but, under the provisions, seem helpless to do so, and unless something is done immediately to correct this situation many of our industries will find it difficult to continue the struggle.

While I believe that Congress acted in good faith in creating these various boards and commissions such as the F. D. I. C. and others, it seems to me they do not function properly and are not administered correctly and are of very little, if any, help to anyone.

We also have millions of dollars frozen in banks and holding companies and if we wish to restore faith and confidence to small and large business, as well as the many depositors this money belongs to, we must correct this situation by either passing the proper legislation or rescinding that which has already been passed in order to correct such conditions and release some of this money.

Very shortly we will have to consider the President's spend-lend program, and from conditions as they now exist there seems to be plenty of money in the banks to lend. All we need to do is to pass the necessary laws and get some of the millions of people now unemployed and on relief back into private employment and we will have all the spend-lend we need without providing further legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds, in order to ask the majority leader and the gentleman from California a question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. I wonder if the majority leader and the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] are in a position to state to the House what is going to be the policy about the consideration of the pending bill today?

Mr. LEA. I will state that it is the desire of the Committee to finish general debate. There are about 3 hours remaining. Then after the reading of the first section a motion to rise will be made.

Mr. WARREN. In other words, all amendments to the first section of the bill would be in order when we take it up again next week?

Mr. LEA. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARREN. That is entirely satisfactory.

WOOL-LABELING BILL

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am asked daily by Members, What is the status of the wool-labeling bill?

A wool-labeling bill was passed by the Senate yesterday by a roll-call vote of 48 to 23. A wool-labeling bill has been reported out by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House and is now pending before the Committee on Rules for a rule.

Many Members are interested in this bill. It has the endorsement of the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the National Farmers Union, the National Farm Guild, the National Federation of Women's Clubs, the American Federation of Labor, and many large consumer organizations in the country. It is sincerely hoped that the Committee on Rules will report out a rule and enable the House to consider the bill at this session of Congress.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF STATE HIGHWAY OFFICIALS

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 10 providing for the establishment of a joint committee to convey to the members of the American Association of State Highway Officials the appreciation of Congress of their accomplishments in the field of highway development.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand this involves no expense to the Government.

Mr. CROWE. This involves no expenditure whatever on the part of the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 10

Whereas this year marks the twenty-fifth anniversary of the organization of the American Association of State Highway Officials, which is composed of officials of the highway departments of all the States, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and the United States Bureau of Public Roads; and

Whereas said association, through its members, represents the State and Federal governmental agencies which have constructed and maintained a vast system of highways throughout the Nation, which highways are becoming increasingly important in local and interstate transportation; and

Whereas said association has announced that it is planning to celebrate in a fitting manner this quarter century of road building at a national meeting to be held during the month of October 1939 in the cities of Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va.: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the splendid results which have been accomplished in the vital development of our national highway-transportation system merit an expression of public appreciation by the Congress.

SEC. 2. A special committee of the Congress is hereby established, to consist of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to convey to the members of the American Association of State Highway Officials at the national meeting of said association to be held in the cities of Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va., during the month of October 1939, an expression of appreciation by the Congress of the praiseworthy accomplishments realized under their leadership and direction in the field of highway development.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the pending bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in an extension of remarks under the general authority granted on the transportation bill, tables, excerpts from testimony, and a few letters on the subject.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in two particulars: First, on the R. F. C.; second, concerning neutrality, including therein a brief observation made by Frederic William Wile.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. SABATH, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (Rept. No. 1249) for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 268

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 7096, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the complete independence of the Philippine Islands, to provide for the adoption of a constitution and a form of government for the Philippine Islands, and for other purposes." That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Insular Affairs, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. LEAVY addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MCCORMACK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

ASSISTANCE TO GOVERNMENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS

Mr. COLMER, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following resolution (Rept. No. 1250) for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 269

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of House Joint Resolution 367, a joint resolution to authorize the Secretaries of War and of the Navy to assist the governments of American republics to increase their military and naval establishments, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the joint resolution for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

GOVERNMENT LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SECCOMBE] a few moments ago referred to an incident where a farmer applied to a bank for a $1,200 loan, but failed to receive the loan due to regulations of the Federal Reserve System and of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. The gentleman from Ohio is quite right so far as he went but he did not go far enough. Regulations by Government bureaus are a real impediment to business, and competition by Government in business adds to the fear of private enterprise.

Forty billion dollars of funds lie idle in the private banks of the country. In a few days we are going to be asked to consider another spending-lending program after this Congress has appropriated $13,000,000,000. That means the Government is going to continue to compete with its own taxpayers and we will never have recovery so long as this system continues.

My purpose in making these few remarks this morning is to ask the House of Representatives as a whole, or some Member of it even though it be the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], to find out between now and the time that bill comes up for consideration "where we are going to get the money," so that I will know how to vote. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include some tables on imports and exports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include excerpts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. THORKELSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include a brief article from Field and Stream on pending legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an editorial from the Chicago Daily News.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. JENKS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include an article on the distinguished minority leader entitled "The Man Who Believes We Can."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a brief article from the East Orange Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. VREELAND]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a short newspaper item.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. THILL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

NEUTRALITY

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, President Roosevelt is reported as saying that the action of Congress on the neutrality bill "killed off the nicest little business boom you ever saw." How can anyone have confidence any longer in President Roosevelt, when he makes such loose, ridiculous, and unfounded statements? Such absurd and fantastic Presidential illustions are enough to make the angels weep.

The stock-market record shows that stock prices have increased steadily and substantially since the House restored the arms embargo. Businessmen, if the action of Congress had any effect on the stock market, probably were reassured and believed that Congress would insist on a policy of neutrality, nonintervention, and peace abroad and stability and security at home.

The only business that might have been affected in case of war is that of the munitions makers. The only boom punctured was the Roosevelt third-term boom which blew up.

The President is afraid to take the arms embargo issue to the people as, irrespective of the attitude of the eastern internationally minded press, the American people—particularly in the Middle and Far West—are overwhelmingly for the arms embargo and a real neutrality bill, and against collective security and quarantining the world with our blood and treasure.

I challenge President Roosevelt to either take the neutrality and arms embargo issue to the country and let the people decide, or quit talking through his hat. My guess is that he does not dare to accept the challenge.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, the primary reason there is idle money in the banks is because it consists of bank credit which will not move until there is an additional flow of money through the hands of the consumers of the Nation and a healthier price level for basic commodities, and especially farm commodities. The real trouble is with our method of creating money, our failure to exercise the constitutional power of Congress in this regard, and our failure to devise a tax-pension system which will keep consumer buying power in circulation. The proposed lending bill is not a bill which will cause an increase in taxation. It is a program involving Government investment, and every penny of that money will be repaid. As a matter of fact, even the proposed bond issues by the lending agencies could be avoided if we made use of some of our idle gold and silver as a base for this credit. The program then might yield a net income to the Government. Furthermore, the opponents of the present administration know full well that the one thing they can do which will be most effective in making the American people unjustly blame the present administration for their economic conditions is to block such a bill as the lending bill, or the housing bill, and to do such things as were recently done to the rank and file of W. P. A. workers in the bill which Congress passed. The more distress there is, the more likely a political overturn will be. I should hate to think anyone would be willing to increase the people's troubles to gain a political end.

But the people of America usually vote according to the general economic conditions existing at the time. There may not be much reason in this, but it is true. Those who oppose the present administration understand, without doubt, exactly what I mean. I do not accuse anybody of bad motives, but I think the people have the right to understand that at present the political interest of the reactionary forces of the country is, tragically enough, advanced by bad economic conditions among the people. But to anyone who is sincerely concerned about our people and our business conditions it is evidently of primary importance for this Congress to see to it that further legislation to increase employment and buying power be passed before this Congress adjourns. Such legislation is no substitute for the fundamental things we should do—such as to bring our monetary system into line with present-day conditions. But it is essential right now.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, if no one else desires recognition at this time, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include two short editorials, instead of one, from local newspapers showing the difference between the way Governor Murphy and Governor Dickinson handled the strike situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD with two short paragraphs showing the difference between the way Governor Murphy handled the civil service and the way the present Governor of Michigan handled civil service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

INTERLOCKING BANK DIRECTORATES

Mr. CELLER submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 2150) to amend section 8 of the act entitled "An act to supplement laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," particularly with reference to interlocking bank directorates, known as the Clayton Act.

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW BUILDING FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY] and in his behalf I submit a privileged report (Rept. No. 1253) from the Committee on Rules making in order the consideration of the bill H. R. 6830.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 270

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of H. R. 6830, a bill to authorize the construction of new buildings for the Navy Department in the District of Columbia. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed.

UNITED STATES RECLAMATION PROJECTS

Mr. WHITE of Idaho submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 6984) to provide a feasible and comprehensive plan for the variable payment of construction charges on United States reclamation projects, to protect the investment of the United States in such projects, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 2009) to amend the Interstate Commerce Act as amended, by extending its application to additional types of carriers and transportation and modifying certain provisions thereof, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2009, with Mr. JONES of Texas in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PEARSON].

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in order to discuss the transportation bill, but I should like to take just a moment of the time allotted to me to reply to the statement just made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] with reference to the President of the United States.

I have sat on this floor for 5 years and listened to that gentleman criticize in most vituperative language the Chief Executive of this Nation. I should like to say in all good feeling that if the time ever comes when my district—as has the gentleman's from New York—has the honor to furnish to this Nation its Chief Executive, I intend to have too much respect for the office which he holds to criticize him as an individual or as an official in the public life of this Nation. [Applause.] We owe that much respect to the Chief Executive of this Nation, no matter who he is or what his political beliefs may be. The people of the Nation have confidence in him or they would not have placed him there, and as long as he serves in an honorable way as President of the United States it seems to me it ill becomes any man serving in the legislative branch of this Government to level at him bitter personal criticisms. It is unnecessary and inexcusable. Every patriotic American resents it and I share their resentment.

Mr. Chairman, I know that every Member of this House is anxious to see the enactment of legislation which will help to promote and stabilize the transportation systems of this country, and whatever differences we may have grow not out of a lack of interest in the subject but rather in the method of approach. The bill before you is the product of weeks and months of study and consideration, and I want to assure the membership of the House that your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce offers it in the conscientious belief that it will partially remedy and remove the unfortunate and detrimental conditions which are destroying and deterring economic operation of every mode of transportation upon which we depend.

This measure is not offered as a railroad bill, a waterway bill, or a trucking bill, but as a transportation bill in the broadest sense of the term. It has already been explained, and I simply want to discuss it and its objectives in a general way.

When America was first established as a western frontier we were dependent upon what Nature gave us for transportation facilities, and commerce moved by trails and streams. Rapid expansion and development soon made it apparent that faster and better methods must be devised, and then came the development of railroads and highways penetrating the remotest corners of this continent. Only through them could the entire population be adequately served. Billions of dollars have been invested in these systems, supplemented by millions spent on the waterways. Thus we have established competing systems of transportation, and with the passing years the importance of each one in our economic life has grown increasingly important. They are all wards of the Government and property of the people of this country. They must be preserved. They must be protected from imposition, and each must be given a chance to exist and prosper under fair competitive conditions.

We are all familiar with the history of the railroads and conditions which brought them under regulatory control and supervision by the Interstate Commerce Commission. They had to be protected against themselves. With the development of transcontinental highways and inland waterways we have gradually brought about devastating competition between the different kinds of transportation that once existed between competing railroads, and now we are confronted with the task of doing something to remedy a very dangerous situation which is threatening the most important industry in our economic life.

As I see it we must do one of three things, namely:

First. Withdraw and repeal all existing regulations over rails and roads and leave the competitive warfare to the survival of the fittest.

Second. Permit the Government to take over waterways and rails and trucking rights and operate a socialistic system of transportation.

Third. Place all systems of transportation under uniform and unified control.

Certainly no one wants to see self-destruction of any system of transportation by unfair and unrestricted competitive conditions; few, if any, want to see the United States Government in the transportation business, and all of us want to do the thing that is necessary to avoid both. There is only one remedy—place all of them under the supervision and jurisdiction of one regulatory body charged with the duty of dealing fairly with each of them and thereby preserve for the people of this country every form of transportation to which they have been accustomed.

This bill does just that and, in my opinion, based not upon speculation but upon existing facts and conditions as shown in the hearings on this bill, if it is enacted into law it will ultimately prove beneficial to nearly 2,000,000 people employed by railroads, trucks, and water carriers, the owners of the systems, and the consuming public.

Some who have spoken on this bill express concern for the consumers and shippers of the Nation if this bill is passed, but they should be more concerned about them and their welfare if we do not pass it. Therein lies the danger to their interests. If we do not do something to relieve existing conditions we are going to create a nation of individual "transportationists," permitting the destruction of those systems which best serve the shipping and consuming public, creating unemployment and untold inconvenience and burdensome expense to the people as a whole.

For 50 years the railroads of this country have been under regulatory supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, for nearly 5 years busses and trucks have been regulated by the same body, and, despite the fact that both systems bitterly fought such regulation, I venture the assertion that today not one of them would want to engage again in unregulated competition. I well recall the arguments made in 1935 against bringing the trucks under governmental regulation. We were told then, as we are told now, that it would destroy competition and raise rates; that the consumer would suffer, and particularly that the farmers would be the helpless and innocent victims of the destruction of that mode of transportation upon which they depended. Subsequent experience has shown how utterly absurd these claims were. The Motor Carriers Act has done much to restore order from chaos, and where is to be found today one who would repeal the law or who will say that the owners of the carriers, the shippers, or the consumers have been injured by the enforcement and administration of that act?

Title II of this bill seeks to bring water carriers, generally speaking, under the control of the Interstate Commerce Commission. This objective is not for the purpose of destroying or hampering them in their operation, nor is it for the purpose of raising freight rates. It is for the purpose of coordinating transportation service throughout the Nation, affording unified control and regulation, adjusting unfair competitive conditions, and eventually saving for the public all forms of transportation. This bill is so drawn that even a casual reading will show that there is no purpose or intention to adjust rates in such manner as to deprive any carrier of the inherent advantage of its cheaper carrying costs. A coordination of rates must of necessity take into consideration and regard the advantage of one type of transportation over another, and this bill in its declaration of policy, made a part of the basic act, states that the purpose is "to provide for fair and impartial regulations of all modes of transportation * * * so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each."

At present our system of water transportation is in a state of confusion. The Maritime Commission regulates a portion of it, the Interstate Commerce Commission controls and regulates a portion of it, and a considerable portion is unregulated and operates without regard to other systems and with no uniform treatment of shippers. The Government has no authority to prevent discrimination and as a result land transportation and water carriers themselves suffer. This measure will clarify this situation and through complete and unified control will bring about a discontinuance of destructive competitive methods.

Mr. Chairman, as one who comes from a State and district enjoying all modes of transportation affected by this act I do not hesitate to support this bill because I believe its purpose is to improve the Nation's transportation system and because the welfare of these agencies is a matter of concern to them. They want and are entitled to economic service and they know the best way to get it is through equal and just treatment of competitive carriers and the preservation on a fair basis of all competitive systems.

In this connection I might add that the people of my section are vitally interested in section 6, subsection (1) (b), of the bill, which authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate the rates on manufactured products for the purpose of determining whether said rates are unjust, unreasonable, or unlawful in and of themselves, or in their relation to each other, and to enter such orders as may be appropriate for the removal of any unlawfulness which may be found to exist.

This section would make possible a correction of rate differentials found to be unjust or discriminatory. While it does not go as far as I would like to see it, it does open an avenue for full consideration and correction of a great injustice being done many sections of the country. If pursuant to this authority the Commission does not correct existing evils in the freight-rate structure of the Nation then Congress can, and I believe will, do so on its own responsibility.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] said on yesterday he was one of a group of 125 Members of the House who met in January to protest against the terrific discriminations in freight rates against the South and West and he does not want to hear anyone who attended these meetings from Tennessee and other States protesting further against those discriminations if they vote for this measure, but to go back and tell the people that, under the pressure of a great lobby we could not resist, we voted to take away from them the very last thing they had to hold down freight rates in our sections.

I was one who attended those meetings and I am one who is supporting this bill. And I say to him that this bill presents the first and only opportunity that we have ever had to correct the evils about which we complain, and if he opposes it he will be the one who is in an inconsistent position and will have to say to the people back home that he deprived them of the only chance they have ever had to rid themselves of the shackles and bondage of unfair rates. Not only do we have this opportunity through this section which authorizes a correction but through the enforcement and administration of this bill in its entirety. Unless something is done to integrate, unify, and uniformly control every method of transportation, the very collapse of a part of it will increase freight rates throughout the Nation to an unbearable degree. Waterways only go where God makes it possible for them to go but railroads and highways go wherever man wants to send them, and if we have to depend upon any one of them because of our failure to help all of them we destroy every hope and vestige of suitable transportation at reasonable cost.

Commissioner Splawn, when he appeared before the committee in support of legislation of this type, stated that in the consideration of the question involved we would have to think in terms of the greatest good for all the people of the country and that is the manner in which I have approached it. It should be the first consideration when acting upon a matter which affects so vitally every citizen of this country and I sincerely believe that what we do in this bill will redound to the benefit of all alike. Our transportation industry cannot survive much longer under present conditions and nothing could be more disastrous to our economic welfare than to permit any part of it to disintegrate or be destroyed because of lack of governmental interest and protection.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, this pending legislation will seriously affect the economic well-being of every man, woman, and child in these United States. The original draft of this legislation came from the Committee of Six. The Committee of Six were all railroad men, either executives or employees, and in that legislation they divided up the transportation phases of this country like a captured province, and prepared to make the American people and future generations pay through the nose for transportation. To the credit of the committee having in charge this bill, the present bill is a much softer version, somewhat sugar-coated, it is true, but in the main having the same objectives as were present in the original Lea bill.

The House should remember that this bill must go through the hazards of conference, and he who runs may read that when this legislation comes back from conference it will tie the public hand and foot.

May I say preliminarily that the railroads in their palmiest days never enjoyed such power as they are given under this bill. I speak the language of the highly intelligent leaders of the railway employees when I say that the effect of this legislation will be to make the international bankers, Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and J. P. Morgan & Co., the actual managers of the class I railroads, the masters of American transportation.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF AMERICA

I wish to state at this time that I make no war on the railroads. They have played an important part in the development of America and are essential to our national life and progress.

I will vote for any legislation which will enable the railroads to put their house in order, even to the extent of further loans from the R. F. C. for the purchase of equipment, but I am unalterably opposed to the creation of a transportation monopoly which will certainly slow this country down and seriously handicap the farmer and city dweller alike.

Distances in America are so great that adequate, low-cost transportation is essential to the life of our people. In some sections of the country we have great surpluses of the products of agriculture and industry for which there is no sale. In other sections there is suffering because of an unsatisfied demand for these products which cannot be carried to the sections where they are needed because of the prohibitive, excessive cost of transportation.

HIGH FREIGHT RATES FOR FARMERS

I have some background on transportation matters, having served as a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee for 10 years. Early in my service I was greatly shocked by testimony before the committee which told of farmers in the Snake River country in Idaho who had to pay to carry a bushel of wheat 100 miles more than the wheat was worth. I was greatly shocked when a farmer from the State of Washington testified that he had $20,000 worth of luscious apples, which are grown in that section, but that the freight rate was $15,000 and the barreling and the handling of the apples involved a cost of $8,000, which ran his total expense to $23,000. He testified that he had to leave the apples on the trees, because he could not market them except at a loss of $3,000. He further testified that since he had gone into that country railroad rates had been quadrupled by the Interstate Commerce Commission, although when he settled there in its beginnings, the railroads had told him freight rates would be reduced with an increase in population.

The able gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] adroitly brought Mr. O'Neal, of the Farm Bureau Federation, into the picture. He did not tell you that Mr. Pelley, the head of the railroad lobby, which is spending $10,000,000 in this year of our Lord in lobbying, had as his guest in Florida, tarpon fishing for a week at a time on two occasions, Mr.

O'Neal of the Farm Bureau Federation. They traveled there in a special train, and it is, perhaps, too much to hope that that environment did not have some effect on Mr. O'Neal's viewpoint.

In this same Rivers and Harbors Committee I learned that our exports were cut off, because the Canadian farmer, over privately owned railroads and by public waterways, is able to market his grain at one-half the price the American farmer pays for transportation.

So I say that the transportation system in the United States, under whosever auspices it is, has been a complete debacle so far as the farmer is concerned.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. If the gentleman will just let me go on, please, I shall be pleased to yield later.

This testimony to which I have referred excited my interest, and in some measure my wrath, because I did not think that America was accomplishing her true economic destiny, and I have been seeking a way out of this dilemma for both the farmer and the city dweller. No relief can be had for these groups through this legislation; on the contrary, this bill puts the American people, farmer and city dweller alike, in an economic strait jacket.

BUREAUCRATIC CONTROL

In the course of my investigation of this subject I looked into the performances of the I. C. C., concerning which some gentlemen speak with bated breath. I regard them as railroad-minded; and bitter experience has shown that this Commission, with several notable exceptions, has not been concerned with the transportation problems of the farmer or the consumer. The chief concern of this Commission, as is apparent from its written record, is to enable the railroads to continue to pay interest and dividends on their bonds and stocks, which represent the railroads' swollen and watered capitalization. That they failed to do this is no fault of the Commission. One fact will make this clear. It will make clear how completely this austere outfit has muffed the transportation problems of the American people. The Commission's appraisal of the value of the railroads, made largely by railroad employees, is over $26,000,000,000. The present market value of the stocks and bonds of the railroads, as furnished me by the Interstate Commerce Commission, is $9,000,000,000. It is a far cry from $9,000,000,000 to $26,000,000,000; but this fact has not deterred this railroad-minded Commission from endeavoring to make the American people pay a return on $18,000,000,000 worth of value which market reports show does not exist.

I exempt from my condemnation of the Commission Commissioner Eastman and several other members of the Commission, who have protested times without number against this outrageous procedure.

Let me give you the type of the reasoning which pervades the reports of this august Commission. The Commission has repeatedly pointed out that the value for rate-making purposes has little, if any, relation to the economic value of the property, and it disregards this value for rate-making purposes. To illustrate this point, the following comparisons between the economic value and the value for rate-making purposes are shown: Take the Ulster & Delaware Railroad. The value for rate-making purposes was $6,468,019 (110 I. C. C. 335), while the economic value was $2,500,000 (175 I. C. C. 65). The economic value represents about 39 percent of the value for rate-making purposes.

Then there was the Boyne City, Gaylord & Alpena Railroad, which was valued for rate-making purposes at $1,706,000 (119 I. C. C. 778), while the economic value was fixed at $230,000 (180 I. C. C. 538). The economic value represents 14 percent of the rate-making value.

Here is another poser, the Chicago, Attica & Southern. That was valued for rate-making purposes at $3,382,000, while the economic value was placed at $165,000 (187 I. C. C. 527), or 5 percent of the rate-making value.

If the House is interested in this question, I refer Members to the dissenting opinion filed by Commissioner Porter, reported at 117 I. C. C. 181 and 439. What an absurd, even a monstrous basis for rate making. And yet this is the procedure on which the railroads annually make a pilgrimage to the I. C. C. and ask for and obtain an increase in rates.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

RED TAPE AND DELAY

Mr. CULKIN. In just a moment. Lawyers will tell you today that it is more difficult to get into the I. C. C. with a case than it is into the Supreme Court. It costs thousands of dollars to try a case before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and an average of 3 years to get a decision on one. One famous case has run 15 years, and they are still taking testimony, although the Commission has never seen a line of the testimony. A number of other cases have run 4 and 5 years without a decision. This outfit has all the externals of a court, but none of its probity or civic consciousness. The fact is that at the turn of the century the railroads took over the Interstate Commerce Commission, and since then they have absolutely written their own ticket. Year after year freight rates have increased by leaps and bounds by the Commission, at the direction of the railroads, and the farmer in many instances has had to let his crop remain in the ground or his fruit on the trees, because he could not meet these ever-increasing rates, and get his product to the consumer in the cities.

During this period the Commission has not regulated the railroads; the railroads have regulated the Commission. When men in public life say that the railroads are being regulated I do not doubt their sincerity, but I do question their serious study of this problem.

For the past several years the American public has been deluged with propaganda in behalf of the railroads, the cost of which is said to run over $10,000,000 a year. They have flooded the country with false and lying statements concerning the economics of truck and water transportation. The average American is a kindly soul, and has more or less been taken into camp by this artful and skillful propaganda carried on through paid advertising, ofttimes reflected in the editorial pages of our newspapers.

The railroad lobby says that the trucks pay no taxes. As a matter of fact, they pay annually $417,000,000,000 in taxes. This is 47 percent of the value of truck property and $89,000,000 more than the railroads pay in taxes annually. The trucks serve 50,000 communities in the United States which are at present without railroad transportation. Approximately 8,000,000 people live in the areas where there is no rail service. It is estimated there are another 25,000,000 of our citizens who live in areas where the railroad service is marginal, a train a day being the usual procedure. These people have been getting conveniences and necessities by daily service from the trucks at reasonable cost. These trucks employ 3,545,000 men, over three times the employment given by the railroads. The trucks carry but 5 percent of the national tonnage. They have been a godsend as an employment agency in these troublesome times. They have been a godsend because they bring the conveniences and necessities of life to our people everywhere.

THE TRUCKS

In 1935 we passed a truck act which placed trucks under the Interstate Commerce Commission. The people up to that time were getting an excellent service at reasonable cost. Today truck rates are within 90 percent of railroad rates, and it is impossible to get information from the Commission as to their treatment of these truck cases. Many truckers have petitioned that these truck rates be reduced. Their applications have been in vain, and the Commission in many cases is now compelling trucks to charge an average of 40 percent more than the trucks feel justified in asking. This, if you please, is for the purpose of making the rails competitive with the trucks. This is the Commission which in legal theory represents the public interest. It is, in fact, bureaucracy at its very worst. There are some other scandalous stories afloat concerning this Commission. They are hearsay, and I will not repeat them. Congress, as a necessary preliminary to this legislation, should investigate this Commission thoroughly and find out what is rotten in Denmark.

WATER TRANSPORTATION

This bill proposes to put common carriers by water under the Interstate Commerce Commission. Note this: Whenever the I. C. C. has jurisdiction of water rates—and they have jurisdiction now of joint rail and water rates—the rates on water have gone up to within 10 percent of the rail rates. Here is an illustration. It costs $1.85 to carry 100 pounds of freight from Gulf ports to New York, a distance of 1,800 miles, under this regulation. It costs but 80 cents to carry a hundred pounds of freight from Gulf ports to Kobe, Japan, a distance of over 6,000 miles. In other words, it costs twice as much to carry freight from Gulf ports to New York than it does to carry it 6,000 miles to Japan.

NORTHWEST ORDINANCE

I am sure that you were thrilled yesterday by the able, statesmanlike discussion of this question by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH]. His viewpoint is always valuable and courageous. In his discussion he seemed to be laying down the doctrine enunciated in the Northwest Ordinance of 1777, passed by the Continental Congress of July 13, 1787. Listen to the content of this article IV of this ordinance, and then compare it with the text of the distinguished gentleman's speech. The ordinance is as follows:

ARTICLE IV

The navigable waters leading into the Mississippi and St. Lawrence, and the carrying places between the same, shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of the said territory as to the citizens of the United States, and those of any other States that may be admitted into the Confederacy, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor.

Thus, the founding fathers wrote into law the theory of free navigation. This was their viewpoint, even before the birth of the railroads. They decreed that the rivers and the streams should remain unshackled. This pending legislation attempts to undo the spirit and letter of that great document which, I am advised, is still law today in many of the Western States.

LOW-COST TRANSPORTATION NECESSARY

In the present national situation, when so many of our people are leading marginal lives, with the frontiers gone and our distances so great, low-cost transportation is essential to our national life. Water transportation is the first and last line of defense of our people in this field. The latest figures available show that in 1937 there were 583,100,000 tons carried over our coastal and internal waterways. This tonnage was carried at an average of one-tenth of the railroad rates, and I emphasize here in response to the suggestion of the last speaker that water transportation and rail transportation are in no sense competitive. They are in a distinct class.

I wish to say at this point, also, that in the development of our waterways, we have had the advantage of the advice and almost the direction on economic determination of those great public officers, the greatest public officers of any popular government in the history of the world, the United States Army engineers. Their findings are supreme in the field. No project is adopted except after it is recommended by them. The economic savings to the American people have paid the costs of these waterways a thousand times over. In addition they have been of immeasurable value to the man on the street and the farmer on land.

Savings in transportation are aways reflected back to the people. A red herring was drawn across the trail in the other body by the senior Senator from Montana. It will probably be suggested here. I hold in my hand 86 certificates from 86 distributors and jobbers who handle from 300,000 to 50,000,000 gallons of gasoline annually. These jobbers certify that the savings on transportation are always reflected back to the people. The certificates follow:

GENTLEMEN: Replying to your letter of the 3d inquiring as to whether or not water-transportation savings are passed on to the public, we wish to advise that upwards of 90 percent of gasoline moving into the State of Michigan is handled through water terminals and anyone following the price trends on gasoline will know that Michigan has the lowest average price of any State in the Northwest. Our markets are always at least 1 cent per gallon lower in price than in surrounding States who do not have the advantage of water-borne commerce.

It is physically impossible for anyone to compete in the gasoline business in the State of Michigan, where they have to depend on rail shipments and pay rail freight.

Very truly yours,

ROCKLAND FUEL OIL CO.
LEROY W. VAN ZANDT, Owner.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

SAVINGS IN WATER TRANSPORTATION

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, due to the intervention of water transportation of petroleum products, from the oil fields to the filling stations, every citizen of America saves 20 cents on a gallon of gasoline at the pump. (See p. 133, pt. 1, hearings before Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee of the House, on H. R. 3615, of the 75th Cong.; also p. 1079, pt. 2, Hearings before the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce on the Water Carrier Act of 1935.) Except for water transportation you would be paying 38 cents, instead of 18 cents, for a gallon of gasoline. This finding is based on a thorough examination of the subject and has never been disputed by the railroads. This is something for some of you gentlemen to think about when you go back and face your people. If this legislation passes, I predict that gasoline in the near future will go up comparable to some of the prices in Europe.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CULKIN. I am sorry. I only have a few moments.

Waterways have always helped the railroads. The House knows that railroad development has always been the greatest where the rails and waters meet. For example, $12,000,000 worth of freight in normal years is moved over the improved harbor of New York. The fact is that the railroads and their employees have been one of the chief beneficiaries of water transportation. Some of my colleagues speak in reverent tones of the railroads. I respect their achievements, especially when I consider that the public since 1851 has paid the railroads for transportation $182,000,000,000. During that period, certainly since 1887, when the Interstate Commerce Commission was born, not one single share of stock and not one bond was ever retired by the railroads. Where, I wonder, did the money go? What I visualize, however, is a transportation system that will give needed service at a reasonable cost, not an inflated cost born of bureaucratic determination.

May I say this: The American people in 1929 lost $50,000,000,000 in market values. They took it on the chin and kept moving forward. The railroad lobby and their affiliate, the I. C. C., would make the people pay for the water that was poured into the systems 40 or 50 or 60 years ago and bought by the American people. They wish to place on the backs of the American people this ocean of water that is still present in these securities. This bill is one of the steps in attempting to write into financial immortality the past performances of Jay Gould and Jim Fiske, and a host of other buccaneers that sailed the financial main under the black flag in the bad old days.

Congress should steel itself against this iniquity, and in the first instance should strike out the water section of this bill. Congress should steel itself against the onslaughts of these pressure groups who are here today endeavoring to work their will on the American people whom you gentleman represent.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. CULKIN. Now, I appeal to the conscience of the House to stand firm against the enactment of this legislation. Ten years from now, whether you are in the House or not, you will look back on this vote as the most important vote you cast during your service here.

For myself, I take my stand on the statesmanlike reasoning of the minority report and on the principles enunciated in that report. Doing that, I will vote to strike out the water section of this bill. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON].

OMNIBUS TRANSPORTATION BILL

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, under existing law the Interstate Commerce Commission has supervision over the railways and motor carriers. The Maritime Commission has supervision over coastal carriers, but there is no governmental supervision of inland waterway carriers.

I have a very high regard for the chairman of the committee and my colleagues who serve on the committee. I have such a regard for the members of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce. Those two committees have submitted bills that undertake to treat transportation problems in a different way. In fact, the House committee has stricken the Senate bill entirely and has submitted a substitute of its own. If the members of those two committees do not agree, surely Members of the House who do not agree with the conclusions of either committee are not to be criticized.

Mr. SOUTH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I trust the gentleman will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SOUTH. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. (After counting.) One hundred and ten Members are present, a quorum.

The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, we have undertaken to solve the problems of railway transportation by regulation and by governmental aid. The United States has been generous to railways, highways, waterways, and airways. All have been subsidized. In the Transportation Act of 1920, after an effort to regulate waterways had failed, it was declared in that act that waterway transportation should be promoted. The people of the United States, out of their Public Treasury, rehabilitated the railways after the World War. Executives of railways thought that their problems had been solved by the passage of legislation, but legislation will no more solve the problems of the railways than it will solve many other problems confronting the people of the United States. We have undertaken to solve the problem since 1920 by passing legislation that has largely resulted in increased compensation of employees, and for my part, I believe the laborer is worthy of his hire; and that has resulted in increased rates. It is said that the railways are sick. This bill is proposed to cure primarily the troubles of railways.

Personally I do not think it is necessary to destroy our waterways, to kill our waterways, in order to cure the railways. I have supported legislation in behalf of the employees of railways, but I regret, Mr. Chairman, that in much of the legislation that Congress has passed too much has been said about benefits to the railways proper and too little about benefits to the public. I am thinking about the railway employees who have been displaced. In our legislation we have emphasized too much increased compensation to a few of the employees and have overlooked entirely the great army of employees that has been displaced.

I ask you what benefits will accrue to the railways under the bill under consideration? The question has been asked, and thus far there have been no substantial reasons assigned as to where and how this legislation will aid the railways. It will provide for consolidations. It will provide for further financial aid, and if such provisions will aid the railways I will gladly promote them. Where will labor be promoted? What additional employees will be put on the pay rolls of the railroads? If there be consolidations, fewer employees will be given employment by the railways of the country. In a word, it is proposed to solve the transportation problem by some more regulation—by regulating the inland waterways and the coastal waterways of the country. If there are discriminations in the intercoastal waterways the remedy is to perfect existing legislation for their control under the Maritime Commission. I know of no public demand either on the part of the shippers or the part of the inland-waterway carriers asking for the regulation of the inland-waterway carriers.

The Government has subsidized all carriers. I shall not refer to the corruption, nor shall I refer to the scandals with respect to the construction of railways and the manipulations of legislatures by railways, except to say that whatever be said of the Federal contributions and appropriations for inland waterways and for the improvement of rivers and harbors in our Nation, no breath of scandal has ever attached to a dollar of the money appropriated from the Public Treasury for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of our common country.

Mr. Chairman, as a supporter of the administration I want to support any legislation that will be of real benefit to the railways and to their employees, keeping in mind the benefits that will accrue to the public. If there is any legislation that is proposed that will aid motor carriers, I will gladly support that. But thus far I have heard no advocate of the bill undertake to submit any proof whatsoever that the regulation of waterways will be of any material benefit to the railways; but, on the other hand, as a matter of common knowledge we know that it has been the purpose of those who control the railways to destroy the waterways; and, whatever be the intention of those who formulated this bill, it is well enough for us to look through the bill to the ultimate effect. In my judgment the inclusion of regulation of waterways can mean nothing more or less than the destruction of inland-waterway traffic in this country.

Mr. Chairman, it is said that the purpose is to unify and stabilize. What the public is entitled to is better services and reasonable and economical services. Whatever else may be said about the Interstate Commerce Commission, in my judgment it is railroad-minded, and, notwithstanding its 50 years of work, there are discriminations in rates that have worked against agriculture and industry in that section of the country whence I come, as well as in the great Southwest and western sections of the country, and thus far the Interstate Commerce Commission has taken no steps to solve that problem and to eliminate the discriminations that exist.

I congratulate the committee upon the provisions included in this bill that the committee undertakes to say will contribute to the solution of this discriminate-rate problem. If there have been discriminations with respect to manufacturers, there have also been and there are discriminations respecting agricultural products and raw materials. I join with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH], supporting as I do the views of this minority report, in the amendment that he proposes to the bill that will provide for investigation and relief not only for manufacturers but for raw materials.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, in the declaration of policy that the purpose of the bill is to preserve the inherent advantages of every clan or type of transportation. I answer that a declaration of policy is not enough. It was not enough to save the Agricultural Adjustment Act in the Supreme Court, as the Chairman presiding over this Committee well knows. I shall, therefore, offer an amendment at the appropriate place to this effect and in this language:

All of the provisions of this act shall be administered and enforced with a view to carrying out the above declaration of policy.

In an effort to be constructive, Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact and emphasize that under the terms of this bill private carriers are exempt, as they must be; and contract carriers of bulk commodities have been exempted. So there remains, as I am reliably informed, and as I conclude from the hearings before the committee, substantially 3 percent of the commerce of the country that will be regulated by including waterways. Coming, as I do, from the South and from the Cotton Belt, I submit that if the Standard Oil Co., if the coal barons, if those companies with private carriers, if sulphur, if other agricultural commodities are to be eliminated under the terms of this bill, I respectfully submit in all fairness that the provisions of this bill should be extended to cotton, which in reality is as much of a bulk product as wheat or corn. I shall, therefore, offer an appropriate amendment to accomplish this purpose. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I propose to offer amendments that will undertake to bring forward in this bill the provisions of the so-called Miller amendment adopted in the Senate so as to strengthen the language that is embraced to preserve to all modes of transportation the advantages that naturally accrue to them, and inhere in them.

Mr. Chairman, permit me to say that the waterways of the Nation are the property of the United States. They have been improved by appropriations from the Public Treasury. They should remain free and open so that the benefits intended for the public may accrue. For the waterways of America to be regulated as proposed in this bill means their destruction, and also means that waterway traffic will disappear from the waterways of our country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, under leave to revise, permit me to say again that the Interstate Commerce Commission regulates railways and motor carriers, but generally exercises no supervision over water carriers. Inland waterways are not regulated. Intercoastal carriers are subject to the supervision of the Maritime Commission. The Bureau of Maritime Inspection and Navigation supervises inland waterways for safety.

The bill under consideration proposes to solve the railway problem by amendments to the existing law for railways and motor carriers by the regulation of water carriers.

The bill is so prepared that parts 1 and 2 in title I cover railways and motor carriers, while title II, part 3, provides for the regulation of water carriers. The committee evidently had in mind that part 3 for the regulation of water carriers might be stricken from the bill without impairment of the proposed beneficial legislation respecting railways and motor carriers.

The declared policy of the Transportation Act of 1920 was to foster and preserve in full vigor both rail and water transportation. An effort was then made to regulate waterways. This effort failed.

I have always supported legislation in behalf of the improvement of railways and in behalf of railway labor. Thus far the principal legislation sought by railways and their employees has resulted in an increase of rates and in an increase of compensation to railway employees. The public has been overlooked. There is a place for railways, notwithstanding their sins, notwithstanding their past. There is a place for railways in the country. They have contributed to the development and to the well-being of the Nation. In the future, as in the past, I will promote the interests of railways and their employees.

I do not oppose railway legislation that will be of real benefit to the solution of the transportation problem. I believe that the railways for years have pursued a short-sighted policy; their efforts have been to destroy waterways; they have undertaken to promote railways by destroying the inland waterways. Their policy has been destructive.

The railway problem is acute. So are many other problems in the United States. I would like to contribute constructively to the solution of that problem. I have advocated cheaper transportation. I have advocated the elimination of the discrimination in the rates against manufactures, agricultural products, and raw materials in various parts of the country. I believe the railway problem can better be solved by the railways meeting and solving the problems of competition, rather than by destroying competition.

It is said that there is a demand for further regulation of the railways. I am responsive to that demand. It is said that there is some discrimination among intercoastal carriers. They are now regulated. I am for the further regulation of such carriers by the Maritime Commission that has supervision over them.

I know of no demand on the part of the public and no general demand on the part of the inland waterways themselves for the regulation of inland-waterway carriers.

As a matter of general knowledge, we know that the efforts of the railways have been directed toward the destruction of inland waterways. Those who advocate cheaper transportation for the great valleys and plains of the Nation are skeptical therefore respecting any policy that provides for regulating inland-waterway carriers when there is no demand for such regulation except from the railways themselves.

BENEFITS TO RAILWAYS

What are the benefits to the railways under the existing bill? Provision is made for consolidation. Provision is made for further refinancing. It is said that such provisions will aid the railways in their plight. I will support them, but candor compels me to say that thus far no advocate of the pending bill has shown wherein the provisions of the legislation under consideration insofar as the amendments to existing law respecting railways and motor carriers are concerned constitute any real benefit to the railways.

BENEFITS TO LABOR

What benefits are there to railway laborers and employees? Will the vast army of former railway employees now out of employment be reduced? Will the number of railway employees be increased? If so, how? One of the defects of legislation in behalf of railways has been to grant increases to employees retained by the railways, but by and large there have been no benefits to the employees who have lost their employment. Further consolidations will make for more unemployment.

In speaking of labor, if the waterways are destroyed, what becomes of the employees of the inland waterways? I am the friend of labor, whether employed by the railways or the waterways.

DESTRUCTION OF WATERWAYS

I have the very highest regard for the distinguished chairman and the members of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House. So have I for the distinguished chairman and members of the similar committee of the Senate. The Senate bill has been stricken out in its entirety. The committee in the House was evidently not satisfied with the provisions of that bill. An entirely new bill has been submitted by the committee. Those who advocate relief for the railways have thus been unable to agree upon a definite program that provides definite relief for the railways. It is evident to the most casual observer that if the substitute proposed by the House passes, the real bill will be written in conference. It is not a question of the intention of the members of the committees in charge of the legislation; it is a question of the effect of the legislation. No one can foretell in the closing days of the session the provisions of the bill that may be written in conference, but inasmuch as both bills provide for the regulation of inland waterways when there is no demand from either the inland waterways themselves or from the public for their regulation, it is safe to say that the real purpose of any bill that may be written in conference will be the regulation of the inland waterways. If there should be regulation of inland waterways, such regulation should be sympathetic. The Interstate Commerce Commission is railway-minded.

Whatever be the intent of the sponsors of the bill, the purpose of the railways is to increase waterway rates and thus eliminate the waterways. The country will suffer and the railways will not be benefited.

RATE DIFFERENTIALS

It is said that the bill provides for the elimination of rate differentials. Investigations are authorized with authority for the elimination of rate differentials. The Interstate Commerce Commission has been in existence for 50 years. Thus far no real contribution has been made toward the elimination of the rate differentials that have retarded manufacturing and agriculture, particularly in the South and in the Southwest.

The investigations are to cover manufactured products. Why manufactured products? What about the raw materials of the great agricultural sections of the country? I believe the bill should be amended so that the investigations and the resulting rates would cover both manufacture and agriculture, and I believe that the discriminations against the domestic consumers should be removed. Why should foreign buyers be accorded a cheaper rate than domestic consumers?

DECLARATION OF POLICY

Much has been said about the declaration of policy with respect to the regulation of water carriers, but declarations of policy in the titles of acts are not synonymous with the substantive law. I therefore propose an amendment, on page 199, line 8, as follows:

All of the provisions of this act shall be administered and enforced with the view to carrying out the above declaration of policy.

The declaration of policy in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, declared invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States, was not followed. The declaration of policy in the pending bill may not be followed. Declarations of policy should be followed by enactments for administration and enforcement of that policy.

Section 30, known as the Miller amendment in the Senate, has been largely eliminated from the pending bill. I therefore propose an amendment, on page 260, line 8, in the following language:

To the recognition and preservation of the inherent advantages of water transportation.

I would further amend paragraph (f) on said page, line 11, by inserting the following at the appropriate place:

To permitting water carriers to make or reduce rates so long as such rates maintain a compensatory return to the water carriers, after taking into consideration overhead and all other elements entering into the costs to the water carrier for the service rendered.

Again, if water transportation is to be regulated, if private carriers go free, the Standard Oil Co. and the great coal companies and the great steel companies will not be subject to regulation. They have their private carriers. So have some of the leading cotton buyers. If surphur and coal and oil are to be omitted from the contract-carrier provisions of the bill, why should not cotton, which can be just as easily and readily be carried in bulk, be eliminated? I, therefore, shall propose an amendment on page 245 of the bill, to be inserted at the appropriate place, that the exemption of subsection (b) shall apply to baled cotton. The textile manufacturers of North Carolina and of New England, as well as the cotton growers themselves, would benefit by the cheaper water rates for cotton, both on the inland and intercoastal waterways.

As I have indicated, I shall gladly support the amendment which the distinguished member of the committee Mr. SOUTH, of Texas, has indicated he would propose to insert on page 202 after the words "manufactured products," the words "raw materials."

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

It has been suggested that Gen. T. Q. Ashburn, president of the Inland Waterways Corporation, favors the regulation of inland waterways, but thus far no one has quoted him as advocating the provisions of the pending bill. My understanding is that General Ashburn has always advocated the regulation of contract carriers of bulk commodities. No such regulation is provided in the pending bill.

THE REAL SOLUTION OF THE RAILWAY PROBLEM

After the passage of the Transportation Act of 1920, and after the taxpayers of the Nation had rehabilitated the railways following the World War, the railway executives felt that the future of the railways was secure. They relied upon legislation and regulation, but they overlooked a fundamental principle in the life of men and nations. The railway succeeded and replaced the canal and the stage coach. The public demanded the services that the railroads could give. Highways have multiplied since 1920. They are affording a more adequate service in many cases, and now the airways are demanding their place in the sun. The people are entitled to the very best transportation of passengers and freight that can be afforded. Legislation and regulation alone will not do the job. Railways have got to meet the advancing progress of our modern age. There is probably cutthroat competition in the manufacture of automobiles, but who would advocate the regulation of the manufacture of automobiles? The competition has resulted in a better automobile and has resulted in better transportation facilities. Railway employees and laborers are entitled to reasonable compensation. I have always supported legislation in their behalf. Railways, on their actual investments, but not on their watered stocks and on their manipulated deals, are entitled to an adequate return; so is the farmer; so is the merchant, but the merchant and the farmer have got to meet competition. They cannot conduct a store as they did 50 years ago. They cannot farm as they did 50 years ago. The railways must give the public as good service, as reasonable service, and as economical service as the waterways, highways, and airways; otherwise, many of them will disappear from the scene.

But there is a public need for the railways. I want to promote their progress and their welfare. If the railway executives, if the railway management will devote as much time in improving the railway service as they have devoted to the destruction of waterways, the welfare of the railways will be better promoted.

OPPOSITION

As has been pointed out, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Chairman of the Maritime Commission have ably presented unanswerable arguments as to why waterways should not be regulated. But there are others. Commissioner Joseph B. Eastman, chairman of the legislative committee of the Interstate Commerce Commission, summed up the opposition to the regulation of the waterways. I quote from his testimony:

> In the first place, it seems to me that every other major objective of the bill can be accomplished, and readily, without such codification.
> In the second place, it seems to me there is no real demand for it.
> In the third place, I think it would be a better plan to continue to have a separate part for motor carriers and a separate part for water carriers. As a matter of fact, I do not personally anticipate that the regulation of water carriers will be of any great benefit to the railways.

PART III

Part III should be eliminated. Substantially no monopolistic rates and practices have been shown to require the regulation of water carriers. There is no cutthroat competition among inland water carriers to be regulated. The services of water carriers furnish natural regulation and automatically enforce their practices. There should be no regulation unless there is need shown. The various forms of transportation have their advantages. The public is entitled to the benefit of these advantages. The bill does not preserve them.

If there should be further regulation of intercoastal carriers, that regulation should be placed under the Maritime Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission has much work to do. There are long delays at present in the investigation of rates and discriminations. A better job could be done by the Maritime Commission.

Congress has made appropriations to improve the inland waterways, the coastal waterways, and the harbors of the Nation, and millions upon millions of dollars have been appropriated for such purposes. Competition has been promoted. There were scandals in the days of subsidies and land grants to railways, but no scandals with respect to the improvements of rivers and harbors have been shown. Highways have been subsidized. The public interest has been promoted by the subsidies that have been granted to both highways and waterways. Whatever be the intention of the committee, whatever be the intention of the bill, the interests that are demanding the passage of the legislation for the control of waterways have as their ultimate goal the raising of water rates and the destruction of water carriers.

The regulation of only 3 percent of the business of water carriers has been retained in the bill. Some 18 percent of the traffic is water borne. The other 15 percent is exempted from the bill. Private carriers of course cannot be controlled or regulated. The Standard Oil Co. and the coal companies will continue to reap the benefits of the appropriations made by the Congress for years to promote inland waterways. The contract carriers of bulk commodities under the terms of the bill are exempt. There remains only the regulation of the remaining water carriers. The great, strong financial private carriers and bulk carriers, as should be the case, will not be regulated, but the small shipper and the small carrier will be regulated and destroyed.

Rivers and the ports are the property of the people of the United States. They should be preserved and kept free and open to all the people of the United States.

In the great interior plains and valleys of the United States our inland waterways are our last line of defense. The benefits should be preserved. If the waterways are regulated it means that the rates will be increased and that the water traffic will disappear.

The contract carriers of bulk commodities are temporarily exempted from the provisions of the bill, but it is well for all advocates of inland and coastal waterways to remember "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

Instead of preventing monopolies; instead of curbing monopolistic practices; instead of encouraging competition, the bill, unless the regulation of water carriers is eliminated, will at the same time eliminate competition and promote monopolies.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein the amendments I stated I proposed to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I understand all Members have been given the right to extend their remarks on this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, it would indicate a woeful lack of grace and appreciation on my part if I failed to acknowledge the long, diligent, and effective labors devoted to this transportation bill by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce by its able chairman, Mr. LEA, of California, and by each individual member of the committee. It was a monumental task to whip this legislation into shape. The measure reported to the House represents a job well done, and the committee deserves commendation.

This bill should go far toward improving the somewhat scrambled transportation situation in this country. Indeed, this Transportation Act of 1939, which is now before the House for action, marks a praiseworthy advance in our transportation policy. While not even the sponsors are claiming that it is the last word on the subject, the bill as a whole should commend itself to the favorable consideration of the House and to all fair-minded citizens of the country.

This is truly a modern transportation act. For the first time in American history Congress has recognized all modes of domestic transportation, with the exception of air transport, which is otherwise regulated, in a single act. Under this bill all forms of domestic land and water transportation among the States would be placed on a basis of substantial equality, so far as regulation by the Federal Government is concerned.

Despite the fact that water transportation is the oldest form of interstate commerce in this country, it is noteworthy that water lines are the very last carriers to be placed on substantially the same basis of governmental regulation as other common carriers. This bill would subject all domestic water transport to the supervision and regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, where it should have been years ago.

That provision of the bill has brought howls of rage and anguish from some of the water lines. Despite the advantages the water carriers will continue to enjoy over competing rail and highway and other transportation facilities, not only in matters of regulation but in subsidies and taxes, some of the inland waterway interests are making the welkin ring with their wails of agony. In their desperate desire to continue unchecked a destructive and uneconomic policy of cutthroat competition, certain selfish interests are resorting to false and misleading propaganda in a vain effort to influence the Members of this House. The sole purpose of these false representations is to kill the regulatory provisions which would affect the water carriers.

However, let me hasten to say this wholly unworthy effort does not have the approval or the support of a large number of the water lines. On the contrary, a considerable number of the water carriers are in complete accord with the proposal to regulate their rates. And that suggestion came from the Interstate Commerce Commission itself. It is also supported by all impartial students of the transportation problem. And anyone who does not have an ax to grind on that side can see the utter lack of sincerity and soundness of this false propaganda being spread by this greedy group of water lines.

To be sure, there have been some other objections raised against the bill on matters of detail. But we must remember that all legislation contains some element of compromise. This measure probably is no exception to that general rule. But considering all the diverse interests to be satisfied in serving the public interest, the result is little short of remarkable. In any event, the general policy of fair and equal regulation laid down in this measure is unassailable from any standpoint.

Therefore, I stand on my original statement that practically the only opposition to this bill comes from a selfish and short-sighted faction of the water lines. It must be conceded that any transportation facility which endeavors to dodge regulation and thereby gain an unfair advantage is selfish. Let me also point out that air transport and bus and truck lines did not meet with any marked success until after those industries were stabilized through regulation. Hence, I say these water lines are short-sighted in their opposition to regulation.

Some of the well-paid propagandists who are conducting this ill-founded opposition to the bill have made the mistake of trying to brand it as a "railroad bill." Without success, they have sought to create the false impression that the railroads suggested the regulation of the water carriers. As a matter of fact, Chairman LEA and the other members of the committee can testify that the proposal came from the Interstate Commerce Commission, and from many of the water carriers themselves, as well as disinterested transportation experts outside the Government service, railroad labor and management.

One of the supposedly strongest pleas presented by these opponents of regulation of the water lines was the alleged opposition of the farmers to that provision. On the 14th of July last I presented to this House a large number of statements and resolutions from the leading farm organizations. Those documents most emphatically favored the regulation of rates and service of all transportation agencies—water, highway, and air—to the extent, that they are competitive with railroads. I think that presentation was sufficient to expose the wholly unauthorized use of the farmers in this false propaganda. It is unnecessary to review that conclusive evidence of the desire of the farmers for equality and fairness in the regulation of rates and service of all common carriers.

The national transportation policy laid down in this bill is well worth repeating at this point. It states:

> It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulations of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economical conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; to cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions—all to the end of developing, coordinating, and preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as other means, adequate to meet the needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense.

That is so clear that he who runs may not only read but also may comprehend. It is the sound principle of "equal rights for all and special privileges for none" strictly applied to our transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as other means. There can be no two ways to interpret this explicit policy. There can be no escape from it by any special pleading on the part of the water lines. They must yield to the logic of the statement and to the force of its application.

Because of the rapid, mushroom growth of some of the newer transportation facilities, we have been somewhat tardy in reaching the point of adopting this broad principle in the interest of our national welfare. We may excuse our failure in the past, but there can be no excuse now for the adoption of a fair and just policy. Without a sound transportation policy in this country it is impossible to have a sound national economy.

The railroad industry, which is the Nation's second industry when measured by investment, is in an unhealthy state, I will grant. But, it is not the only unhealthy member of the transportation family. Several of the younger members are ailing. And these economic ills are due in no small degree to the lack of proper regulation in the industry as a whole. As I stated a few moments ago, the air lines, the bus and trucking industries did not achieve a healthy stability until after they were placed under proper regulation, which put a stop to cutthroat competition by wildcat companies.

Moreover, the national economy has suffered as severely as the various branches of transport as a consequence of the inequality of regulations, or the total lack of it, in some instances. Quite aside from the moral and humanitarian aspects of slavery in this country, the economic factor was the great underlying cause of the Civil War. This was recognized by Abraham Lincoln when he declared this Nation could not live "half slave and half free." The same thing applies to transportation. This country cannot live with our transportation facilities "half slave and half free."

For more than half a century the Interstate Commerce Commission has been the "master" of the railroads. The Commission has been a benevolent "master," for the most part, but the fact remains that the railroads have been forced to compete with all the other forms of transportation as they developed. And the railroads have been tied down with strict regulations while their competitors have been free. Not only have these competing modes of transport been free from regulation until recently, but they have been the pampered pets of the Government. They have all been subsidized in some form or other but they have gone untaxed. And even now, that most of them have been brought under regulation, none of them must abide by the rigid rules provided for the railroads, and none of them bear anything like an equal share of taxation.

Now the time has come for transportation equality—at least, substantial equality—allowing for the inherent differences in the various transport agencies. We can secure substantial equality, so far as regulation of rates and service are concerned. This measure lays down the policy, and I feel confident the Interstate Commerce Commission will enforce the regulations with the even-handed justice which has characterized its actions since it was established.

It may require some years before the transportation systems can be shaken down to the point where we can reach a sound decision as to our national transportation needs. After all agencies have been given a fair trial under substantially equal regulation, we then can decide just what the inherent advantages of each may be and preserve the most economical and the most efficient branches of the industry. Up to now, even with their natural advantages added to the favoritism of subsidies, lack of regulation, and unequal taxation, none of the competitors even have challenged the railroads as a substitute. I, therefore, have little doubt about the railroads remaining the most important branch of our transportation system for many, many years to come. In fact, I doubt whether even American inventive genius and industrial superiority ever will find a complete substitute for the railroads.

Important as equal regulation may be to a sound and healthy transportation industry and the economic welfare of the Nation, I wish to emphasize that regulation alone will not solve this transportation problem. Sooner or later Congress must take steps to bring about a substantial equality of competition among the various branches of the industry. In view of the present inequalities of competition, it probably will be a long and difficult process to bring about the proper readjustment. Unless this competitive readjustment is effected the ultimate and inevitable result will be Government ownership and operation of the railroads, with all the dire consequences flowing from that undesirable end. That, however, would not solve the railroad problem by any means. The problem merely would be transferred from private management to a bureaucracy and little or nothing gained. The Government would be forced to place the railroads on an economically sound basis or subsidize them at enormous public expense.

Therefore, competitive equalization is even more vital than mere regulatory equality. It is obvious the railroads cannot continue indefinitely to stem the present tide of unequal competition. And you cannot utterly destroy one great industry like the railroads through unequal and wasteful competition and justify it from a national economic standpoint.

There are many factors which enter into this unequal and wasteful competition, but we will take the cost of maintenance to the railroads and subsidies to the inland waterways for an illustration. The average annual cost of maintaining a mile of railroad, including structures, is $1,792. That cost is paid out of railroad revenues in competition with all other modes of transportation, most of which are subsidized.

On the other hand, the yearly maintenance cost of the New York Barge Canal is $4,749 a mile. The New York Barge Canal was built at public expense entirely. Except for a short period, it has been maintained at the expense of taxpayers. No one ever has figured out what the value of New York Barge Canal is to the taxpayers of California, Florida, Texas, and Minnesota, for instance, and probably no one ever will. That value, if any, is dubious, to say the least.

The same thing is true of the Mississippi River. It has cost the American taxpayers in every State in the Union $145,000 a mile to improve the Father of Waters, exclusive of flood-control work. Users of that waterway enjoy a subsidy of more than $10,000 a mile every year at the expense of all the taxpayers.

Take a look at the other side of the picture. None of the taxpayers of any of the 48 States or any of our possessions overseas pay one red cent in subsidy for the maintenance of the railroads. And the ironic part of the whole picture is that the railroads pay a substantial part of the subsidies which go to their competitors.

Almost 10 cents out of every dollar of railroad revenue is paid out in taxes to the various governmental units. In fact, of all general transportation agencies, only the rail roads operate on their own roadways, which most of them bought and paid for, and pay all of their own costs, as well as help support the Government with the heavy taxes levied upon them.

That is a fair sample of the unequal competition with which the railroads must contend. The experts are divided on the causes of the decline in demand for railroad service. Yet they all agree that a very large measure of the difficulties besetting the railroads arise from such unequal competition from all other forms of transport, especially the newer modes, which the railroads help to support with subsidies out of their own earnings.

You can add that up any way you wish, and I defy anyone to make economic sense out of it.

And now I come to the land grants to the railroads. These lands were granted to encourage the building of railroads, which made possible the winning of the West. In return for the lands, the railroads which received them have since granted the Government reduced rates and fares. What was the value of those land grants and to what extent has that amount been paid off by the railroads?

In the period from 1850 to 1871, during which the land grants were made, the Government received on an average of 94.5 cents per acre for the sale of lands in the States and Territories involved in the grants. That is the only reasonable and logical method of arriving at the value of the lands. We must take the money value of the lands at the time they were granted, for, naturally, the coming of the railroads greatly enhanced the value of the lands in later years. At the rate of 94.5 cents per acre, the 130,000,000 acres would have been valued at $122,850,000 at the time the grants were made.

Now, a study of the savings to the Government from land-grant rates and fares, including mail, covering all American railroads, showed the amount to be about $5,000,000 a year. Recently the Interstate Commerce Commission estimated the total reduction in rates to the Government to be $7,000,000 annually. If mail and express were added, the annual savings to the Federal Government would not be less than $10,000,000.

If we assume the lands were worth $122,850,000 at the time they were granted by the Government, then, at the rate of $5,000,000 a year in reductions of transportation costs on Government traffic, the railroads would have paid off the total value of the land grants in 24½ years. If the figure of $10,000,000 a year is taken, the railroads would have paid in full for the lands in 12¼ years.

Recently I saw the figure 184,000,000 acres used in connection with the land grants. Even taking that figure, it is obvious that the lands granted to the railroads in aid of construction have been paid for many times over in reduced rates and fares on Government traffic.

The House bill, in effect, provides for the repeal of some of these land-grant provisions. That will mean an expected increase in railroad revenues from five to ten million dollars a year. And either figure would pay the wages of many railroaders and buy plenty of bread and butter, bacon, and beans for their wives and children.

Let us turn now to Government subsidies for competitors of the railroads. Reliable sources fix the total expenditures of the Federal Government to encourage the development of transportation at $6,500,000,000. Of that amount, about $2,250,000,000 went for waterways and about $4,750,000,000 for highways. The land-grant subsidy to the railroads in the pioneering period looks like chicken feed in comparison to the other transportation subsidies.

Whenever any industry finds itself in trouble, we always hear first from the antilabor element which has a panacea—to cut the wages of labor. These big-hearted gentlemen always can find a cure-all at the expense of the other fellow, and especially the little fellow. They tell us to take it out of the hides of the workingman and all the troubles of the industry will pass. They still are harping on that familiar tune.

Some of these same gentlemen have made the astounding discovery that an immediate reduction of 10 to 15 percent in railroad pay rolls would enable the carriers to cut their rates and thus meet this cutthroat, subsidized, unregulated, and untaxed competition. Let me say as a wage earner and a low-salaried railroader for 24 years I understand the problems of the hourly wage earner and the low-salaried railroader. I also understand something of the problems of railroad management. I assert that any such cut in railroad wages at this time would be economic folly and would have no practical or lasting effect in solving the railroad problem.

In the first place, there are any number of other transportation problems, basic and fundamental problems, which should and must be solved. These should be tackled first, and, in any event, a reduction in railroad wages should come only as a last desperate resort. If the railroads fail to get the needed relief from Congress and find themselves utterly unable to compete with this cutthroat, subsidized, unregulated, and untaxed competition unless they cut wages, then, and only then, should the railroads resort to such an expedient in order to keep the railroaders employed. God knows we have enough millions of people on relief now without adding thousands of good railroaders to the relief rolls.

There are numerous reasons why railroad wages should remain at the present levels, at least, and certainly should suffer no reduction at this time. For one thing, the wages paid to the 1,000,000 railroad employees constitute a substantial portion of our national purchasing power. Our need is more purchasing power, not less. How, may I ask, are we to achieve President Roosevelt's objective of an $80,000,000,000 country by cutting wages?

Furthermore, there is no justification for a wage cut. Instead of a cut the railroaders should be entitled to an increase in pay. On the basis of value received, the railroads are getting more revenue per employee than ever before. The railroads also are getting more units of production in much less time than formerly. This comes from an increase in the speed and the size of trains, both passenger and freight, together with the dual basis of pay.

Instead of lessening and lightening the work of the railroaders, these fast and heavy modern trains place greater burdens upon the railroad crews. Hence, I say, if there is any movement in railroad wages, it should be up rather than down, to compensate the men for the increased hazard and strain incident to the operation of heavy, high-speed trains. I sincerely trust this proposed wage cut will get nowhere. I sincerely believe also that this legislation will go far toward removing the reasons behind the demand for a wage cut on the railroads.

In the short time allotted to me it is only possible to touch on some of the high spots in this voluminous measure. However, I believe it has been demonstrated that the alleged opposition of the farmers to the regulation of the water lines has been faked and that the effect of such regulation has been greatly exaggerated. I also believe time will prove that regulation will become the salvation of the water lines, just as it has benefited other modes of transportation.

When gentlemen consider the whole-hearted support of this bill that come from the public generally, the labor groups, the farmers and investors, the railroad management, disinterested experts, and the Government itself, I believe they will agree that the selfish and short-sighted opposition of a few water lines is not worthy of consideration by this House.

Certainly none of the agencies can be granted special favors in any square deal for transportation, and the main object of this bill is to place all common carriers on an equality in matters of regulation. That equality is what the railroads need most to enable them to continue to give the American public the best transportation service ever furnished at the lowest true cost.

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count.

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Chairman, 5 minutes is admittedly too brief a period in which to go into a discussion of a measure which by the statements of those who have worked long and arduously on it during a space of 6 months, amounts to a rewriting of the Interstate Commerce Act. This bill was considered by an able committee. Weeks of time were taken in the hearing of witnesses and in conferences between Members and others interested. As a matter of fact, one of the Members who followed the first speaker in opposition to this bill recited with some pride that all of 73 individuals had come before the committee during that period of time to express their views. I refer to the remarks the gentleman from New York [Mr. KENNEDY] made on this floor following the address of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] these two distinguished gentlemen expressing opposite views.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to use any of this time referring to the provisions of the bill because I think that is not the original essence of the problem before this great forum of reason and deliberation. The reasoning of one man is at best a very poor tool with which to arrive at what might be termed a definitely correct conclusion. Only through the expressions of conflicting opinions is a correct conclusion reached on a really important subject. This bill comes to us first of all therefore, in a manner which prompted my first opposition to its consideration by this body in the dying days of the session. This bill comes from the Senate in the form of a complete amendment to the Interstate Commerce Act. The House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce brings to this body the Senate bill with everything after the enacting clause stricken out and entirely new language substituted. I say, therefore, that the bill comes before us in the dying days of the session under the peculiar condition which makes all of this talk about the provisions of the bill entirely beside the issue.

The bill we are discussing today, Mr. Chairman, will not be the law. That is point No. 1.

Second, all Members who are informed on parliamentary law know that when the House strikes out of a bill of another body all after the enacting clause and inserts new text, the conferees may discard language occurring both in the bill and in the substitute therefor and it may exercise a wide discretion in the incorporation of germane amendments. They may even go so far as to write a completely new bill germane to the subject.

Mr. Chairman, under these conditions I submit that the consideration of this bill cannot be as conducive to a thoroughly rational conclusion looking toward the solution of a problem as to approach it in the ordinary way at the beginning of a session of this Congress, when the entire membership would have an opportunity to discuss and rediscuss the measure. The proof that the committee itself is not satisfied with the bill is best to be found in the record of repeated amendments and changes made in the bill up to the very last day when it got out of the hands of the committee chairman and was reported to the House.

Anyone who reviews the contents of this bill is confronted, if he looks really into it, all the way through with the conclusion which to thoughtful men should be distasteful—the idea that the legislative branch might be accused of lending itself to be used as a club to remove, forsooth, a legitimate agency which happens to compete to a very small degree with another legitimate agency.

With the genesis of this bill I find myself confronted with considerable confusion. The speaker who just preceded me starts out with the statement that this is not a railroad bill, that this is a transportation bill, and concludes his fervid remarks with an exciting dissertation pointing with great emphasis to what this bill means to the railroads. Now, as to the bill's genesis, the major objective brought before this Congress had its real origin in the Committee of Six, composed entirely of railroad executives and employees. The bill as then considered in the House by a committee which, I repeat, is an able committee, but which has had to do, insofar as transportation is concerned, up until consideration of this bill, almost entirely with land carriers, railroads. A careful study of the biographies of these Members found in the Congressional Directory indicates that these distinguished gentlemen have certainly, insofar as major past endeavors are concerned, had nothing to do with marine shipping. This would indicate at least that insofar as knowledge of railroads and rail business is concerned that a great competency of authority on this subject had to do with the origin of the bill and its final presentation in its final form to this body.

In the district which I have the honor to represent, I have two ports and more than two rail lines. Two of these lines, the Missouri Pacific and the Southern Pacific, represent the largest rail company operations in Texas. The Missouri Pacific roundhouse and shops and offices for its southern division are located in Kingsville, Tex., 39 miles from where I live, so insofar as I am concerned, as a duly-elected Representative, I could not if I would show favoritism as between the railroads and marine or water shipping. Highway carriers, trucks, and so forth, are likewise well represented and I have many friends not only in this branch of carriers but in the aviation branch as well, there being two major air lines serving the town in which I live and my district. The fifth class of carriers, pipe lines, is also well represented in my district and in my home town where two large pipe lines converge and deliver oil.

It must be conceded, Mr. Chairman, that with all five methods of transportation which serve our country so represented in my home town and district I should, at least by environment, be somewhat familiar with their characteristics and needs and problems. It is for this reason, Mr. Chairman, that I view with alarm the undue haste as well as the method by which we now propose to pass what is called the transportation bill.

The only group affected of the three lines and kinds of transportation covered by this bill which has asked for this legislation is the rail transportation system, and the only benefits to be derived by any one of the three thus affected directly is likewise the railroad interests; and yet, my friends, this bill is not a railroad bill. Members of the Committee, the bill which we will finally vote up or down will be written by the conferees, and this House will be called upon to vote the conference report in the form of a new bill up or down in such an amazingly short period by comparison to the description of their arduous labors by the Interstate Commerce Committee as to cause me wonder. Why did they take all of this time on a matter so transcendingly important and then rush in here with it when, of course, they must know far better than I, who by comparison have been here a short time, that in the final analysis the whole Committee on Interstate Commerce and the rest of the membership of the House would in reality be wasting this time and have only the opportunity to hear the conference report read and then indulge in some street-corner and corridor talk about it. Mr. Chairman, many years it has been said by a great American—and I quote Thomas Jefferson:

> If we have any doubts concerning a power we should not exercise it.

And certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is evidence everywhere of grave doubts concerning the exercise by the Interstate Commerce Commission over the water-transportation agencies affected by this bill. For my part, for the Congress to vest this power under conditions which I have recited is in my opinion entirely devoid of the earnest consideration which this question merits from the Congress of the United States. I have listened to arguments presented by the proponents of this measure with great care, and apparently the only considerations involved are those which have to do with attaining the objectives proposed and desired by the originator and authors of this legislation.

Let us pause for a moment in contemplation of our country. Recent years have shown with ever-increasing rapidity a great movement to the coastline and to points adjacent to or on the inland waterways system, and far more than just the transportation system affected by this bill will soon realize the effect of the bill which none of us here can describe and to be written by conferees yet to be named. I submit, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion that unless this measure is recommitted that in coming years, as the facts become known, this Congress will be charged with the perpetration of the most poorly and carelessly considered, and, yes, probably the most destructive piece of legislation that can be found in the annals of its now over 150 years of existence.

I am proud of my association with all of you in this body. Let no word of mine be misinterpreted or tortured into what might be construed as a criticism of any Member or committee, save only, Mr. Chairman, as to what we might do unless we free ourselves from the horns of this legislative dilemma on which we find ourselves impaled. I repeat it is impossible to emerge from this situation with any degree of satisfaction if we insist upon bringing this legislation out during these closing days.

My recommendation, as result of earnest deliberation and now a firm conviction, is that the recommitment of this bill will mean immeasurably more to our country and the transportation systems of this country sought to be served than its passage under present conditions.

The vortex in which we find ourselves is a complete violation of representative democracy in its more desirable form and it is my fervent hope that before a motion to recommit is offered that the many great and patriotic minds in this Assembly will take counsel in their respective consciences to the end that we will stop this destructive foolishness before it is too late.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I take this time not for the purpose of making an argument for or against this bill. I am for the bill provided certain things can be cleared up in my mind. First, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in connection with my remarks section 5 (2) of the present Interstate Commerce Act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Section 5 (2) of the Interstate Commerce Act follows:

> Whenever the Commission is of opinion, after hearing, upon application of any carrier or carriers engaged in the transportation of passengers or property subject to this chapter, that the acquisition, to the extent indicated by the Commission, by one of such carriers of the control of any other such carrier, or carriers, either under a lease or by the purchase of stock, or in any other manner not involving the consolidation of such carriers into a single system for ownership and operation, will be in the public interest, the Commission shall have authority by order to approve and authorize such acquisition, under such rules and regulations and for such consideration and on such terms and conditions as shall be found by the Commission to be just and reasonable in the premises.

Mr. Chairman, on page 208, line 15, there is this language:

Lease, operating contract, or acquisition of control consistent with public interest.

The Senate bill carried the words "it may enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation, merger," and so forth. The House has changed the word "may" to "shall." In other words, it is now made mandatory upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. I would like to have the gentleman from California tell me just why the word "may" was changed to "shall."

Mr. LEA. If the gentleman will refer to line 10, page 208, he will find that if the Commission finds that so-and-so is true, in that event they shall enter an order approving of the consolidation. The word "shall", of course, does not mean that they must approve a consolidation regardless of its merits. It is only where they find it is meritorious and complies with the requirements that it is then their duty to enter an order permitting the consolidation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, there is no necessity of their making a finding unless they deem the merger necessary?

Mr. LEA. None whatever.

Mr. O'CONNOR. On page 209, line 9, the Senate bill carried these words—and I will begin at line 9, subdivision (2):

Where appropriate, the effect upon the public interest of the inclusion, or failure to include, weak railroads in the territory involved in the proposed transaction.

The word "weak" has been substituted by the word "other." I would like to know why that substitution was made by the House committee.

Mr. LEA. The House committee cut out the word "weak" because we thought the Commission should have authority to require any kind of a road to be included, if necessary and in the public interest. This does not limit but extends the power of the Commission to approve the consolidation and to increase or widen the conditions of approval.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In other words, before any railroads may be merged, do I understand the purport of this bill is to the effect that the Commission must find, first, that it is in the interest of the public?

Mr. LEA. That is true.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Now, then, what provision is there in the bill for taking care of the men who are put out of employment, assuming that we merge some of these railroads, either weak or strong?

Mr. LEA. You will notice on page 209, line 13, there is a provision reading:

And (4) where appropriate, the interest of the carrier employees affected.

They have a right to make that a condition upon which they grant approval of consolidation.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is one other question I want to reserve under the 5-minute rule. It is this: Just what obstacles under the existing law now standing in the way of bringing about consolidation have been eliminated in this bill? I do not ask the gentleman to answer that at this time.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW].

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely wish that every Member of this House could have the privilege of sitting on every committee of the House in order that they might all be fully informed on every subject under discussion and on which the House will ultimately be called upon to vote. This is a practical impossibility, so the work of the House is divided among the committees.

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, on which I have the honor to sit, has done a very difficult and I believe patriotic service. In the first place, we have listened to that which now appears in 1,900 printed pages of testimony, in 10 weeks, and have since analyzed that testimony, and we now present our considered judgment in the form of this legislation.

Some question has been brought up here as to just why the original Senate bill bearing this number, S. 2009, was not merely slightly amended by our committee. May I point out to you the fact that the Senate bill was introduced in the Senate a month or so after the original House bill was introduced in the House by our chairman, Mr. LEA, and that this bill, through hearings, and so forth, was in the course of preparation when this Senate bill came to us. I believe it is a matter of convenience that we have used the Senate number in passing this bill out to the House.

Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few statements which I hope will be interesting.

The American people are an extremely busy people. We found in our committee hearings that for every man, woman, and child in the United States between 10 and 15 tons of material are moved some place every year. If it is considered that 10 tons per year are moved for every man, woman, and child, that 10 tons is moved 432 miles. We are an extremely busy people. If our country were a good deal smaller in area than it is, of course it would not be necessary to move that material so far. If we did not have so many desires and wants, we perhaps would not have to move so much material.

Nevertheless that is the case: Ten tons for every man, woman, and child in the United States were moved 432 miles last year. A sum equal to nearly one-third of our national income is spent every year for transportation. Nearly all of that, or a great share of it, is handled through land transportation means, by railroad and by truck. A small percentage of it is handled on our inland and coastwise waterways. Something like 300,000,000 tons is handled on the waterways.

On the Mississippi River system, of which I would like to speak for a moment, in 1938 there were handled 63,000,000 tons. Of this tonnage 5,060,000 were transported by common and contract carriers. Of the 5,060,000 tons a little better than one-half, or 2,767,210 tons, were handled by the Government-owned Federal Barge Lines. The Mississippi Valley Barge Lines, a privately owned carrier, was the next in order. This handled 430,000 tons. One-half of the tonnage carried on the Mississippi River system was carried in the lower Mississippi section, including the canals running east and west into Texas and into Florida. The Federal Barge Lines and the Mississippi Valley Barge Lines have nearly one-half of all the common-carrier business on the Mississippi River, and perhaps two-thirds of that is now joint rail and water and under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as far as rates are concerned. Two-thirds of it is already under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

I do not know the exact tonnage of the intercoastal canals and coastwise vessels, but as nearly as I can find out they handle something in the neighborhood of 150,000,000 tons annually. Nearly all of this tonnage handled in the coastwise and intercoastal canal service is exempted under this bill as bulk carriage, and all but 5,000,000 tons on the Mississippi River system, approximately, is exempted as either bulk carriage or private carriage.

The Panama Canal carries the traffic that runs between the two coasts, and that traffic is fairly heavy, but it is not much more than seven or eight million tons per annum. But these intercoastal carriers paid in tolls to the Panama Canal in the year 1937, $10,799,740.28. This was 34.87 percent of the operating expenses of those carriers and 29.2 percent of their entire operating revenue. They paid as tolls to the Panama Canal nearly one-third of all the money they took in.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Why were the exemptions made for the Mississippi River boats, and also for the vessels on the Great Lakes?

Mr. HINSHAW. The exemptions were made for private carriers because, in the first place, anybody who owns a boat himself has the right to take it anywhere he chooses as the waterways, both inland and Great Lakes as well as intercoastal canals, are free as the highways are free. That takes care of the private carriers. As far as the bulk carriers are concerned, those hauling sand and gravel, coal, oil, and similar materials in rough bulk, it was thought that those commodities were of such a nature that the handling of such cargoes was not competitive, consequently they were left out. In this bill we are interested in competition.

Mr. DONDERO. As it relates to the Great Lakes, is it not also true that the Canadian commerce is unregulated and that we could not compete with them unless our own Great Lakes traffic were also left unregulated?

Mr. HINSHAW. I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that the Canadian commerce is regulated except for bulk carriers. Bulk carriers are excluded from Canadian regulation, and we have excluded American bulk carriers on the Great Lakes from this regulation. The Great Lakes are international waters by treaty and any boat of any nation has a right to go anywhere on them as it pleases.

Mr. DONDERO. Is it not a fact that the Canadian commerce is regulated so that their vessels can transport goods and materials far more cheaply than can American ships?

Mr. HINSHAW. By virtue of the fact that they work their seamen 12 hours a day and pay them considerably less than ours are paid, the cost of operation of the Canadian vessels is considerably lower than the cost of operation of the American vessels.

Mr. DONDERO. It is about 35 percent lower, I believe, according to the figures given.

Mr. HINSHAW. Something like that.

The gentlemen who are opposing this bill are opposing, practically, only one part of it, and that is title II, which brings the rates of common carriers and nonbulk operations of contract carriers by inland and coastwise waterways under regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It provides unified rate regulation for rail, highway, and waterway transportation within the continental limits of the United States. But especially it provides that the inherent advantages of each form of transportation shall be preserved in the public interest.

There is very little opposition to title I of this bill, or title III, so far as I can discover or so far as has been brought out in the debates in the House, which I have heard in full. Title I of the bill simply amends the present Interstate Commerce Act and adds to it a few provisions considered to be for the general advantage of the whole transportation system of the United States and in the public interest. Although title I does not comprise a very large proportion of the total number of pages in this bill, yet if you add to them the entire volume of laws of the Interstate Commerce Commission previously enacted you would have a very large body of printing. Therefore, as there is almost no controversy over titles I and III, I shall address myself for the moment to the subject of title II, which concerns the inland waterways.

Those people who object to regulation on the inland waterways must remember that a very small percentage of the tonnage on the inland waterways comes under this bill. The private carriers are completely excluded, and the bulk cargoes are completely excluded, and the remaining business of the contract carriers is to be regulated only in the matter of minimum rates. Approximately two-thirds of the common carrier water-borne commerce is already regulated as to rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission, through joint rail-and-water rates, and we merely seek in this bill to bring the other one-third under regulation. We provide also for joint rates and through routes for transportation by water and rail and transportation by water and motortruck.

Mr. JENSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman, briefly.

Mr. JENSEN. Are corn and small grains exempt from the inland water rates?

Mr. HINSHAW. If in bulk, it is exempt.

I see no particular reason why this opposition should develop. These inland waterways have been furnished to the people of the United States at very considerable expense.

On the Mississippi River and its tributaries the Government of the United States has spent $693,000,000; on the intercoastal canals and waterways the Government has spent $148,000,000; and on the lakes, harbors, and channels, $237,000,000; seacoast harbors and channels, $721,000,000. A total of $1,799,000,000 of the taxpayers' money has been spent on improving the waterways of the United States for which no tolls are charged, no gas tax, no property tax.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes; briefly.

Mr. TERRY. The gentleman has pointed out the very small portion of the traffic on the inland waterways that would come under this bill by reason of coming under the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am wondering, if that is true, why it is generally stated that by putting the inland waterways under the regulations of this bill, it will have a great tendency to save the railroads from their present financial difficulties.

Mr. HINSHAW. I do not connect it with a saving to the railroads of any great financial difficulty. I connect it more with the saving of the waterways from their own difficulties.

Mr. TERRY. In other words, the gentleman feels then that so far as being of benefit to the railroads themselves is concerned, that would be very small.

Mr. HINSHAW. It is a small benefit, if any, to be sure.

Mr. TERRY. And it would not assist in bringing the railroads out of the trouble they have now.

Mr. HINSHAW. It would assist in coordinating the entire transportation system of the United States to the benefit and best interests of the people of the United States and that is why I favor it.

Mr. TERRY. Then it is simply a matter of being for the general public good.

Mr. HINSHAW. That is my belief. In support of that statement I want to read from a letter sent to me by Mr. G. K. Little, vice president of the Baker Towboat Co. of Tuscaloosa, Ala. In this letter, dated June 10, Mr. Little states as follows:

> For a number of years this company has been towing coal from mines in Walker County, Ala., to a cement plant at Spocari, Ala., for $1.25 a ton. The Federal Barge Line, over our protest, cut this rate to $1 a ton and took the business away from us. Last year the Federal Barge Line and the railroads both reduced rates from the Warrior coal fields to Spocari, Magazine, and Mobile, Ala.

So I wrote the gentleman in answer to that and told him that I believed that his complaint of rate cutting is a good argument in favor of Interstate Commerce Commission regulation of rates. He attached to his letter a copy of his letter to Maj. Gen. T. Q. Ashburn, president and chairman of the Inland Waterways Corporation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, here is what he said to General Ashburn:

> DEAR GENERAL ASHBURN: We understand that the Federal Barge Line has put in the following rates on coal shipments in Alabama:
> River mines to Magazine, Ala., 85 cents per ton.
> River minth to Mobile, Ala., 75 cents per ton.
> River mines to Spocari, Ala., 50 cents per ton.
> These rates have already resulted in the reduction of the rail rates from Southern Railway mines to Magazine, Ala., to $1.10 per ton, and a petition from the railroads to the Alabama Public Service Commission asking that the domestic rate of $1.80 per ton to Mobile be reduced to $1.40 per ton.
>
> In our opinion, the rates quoted by the barge line are too low and should not be less than the following:
>
> River mines to Magazine, Ala., $1.10 per ton.
> River mines to Mobile, Ala., $1 per ton.
> River mines to Spocari, Ala., 75 cents per ton.
> We believe that these rates are the lowest at which any private boat line can operate and make a living profit, and we do not believe that the Federal Barge Line should make a rate so low as to shut out all private competition.
>
> We are advocates of the continuation of the Federal Barge Line, as we believe that it is doing a valuable pioneer work in restoring traffic to our rivers and fighting the battle of the waterways against powerful interests that would like to see them abandoned.
> We believe, however, that there is danger in quoting rates so low that the railroads and other enemies of our waterways will have just grounds for criticism, and also so low as to cripple the development of private boat lines.

If you can find a better argument for bringing the intercoastal and river navigation in under the I. C. C. so far as common carriers and certain contract carriers are concerned. I would like to know where to find it. Both the Mississippi Valley Barge Line, which does 500,000 tons of business a year and the Federal Barge Line, which does more than one-half of the common and contract carrier business on the Mississippi, favor this legislation. The balance of the business to be regulated is minor, it does not amount to much, with the exception of the bulk carriers and the private carriers, which are excluded. I believe that the arguments opposed to this bill are largely jurisdictional arguments, as made by the estimable and able gentlemen of the House who are on committees that consider water legislation, and that they should carry no weight in consideration of the all-important fact that we must have a unified, coordinated, and capable transportation system over the United States. I urge the adoption of the bill as it stands.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. Yes.

Mr. GEYER of California. I know that my colleague comes, as I do, from the southwest, and is very much interested in the growth of the Los Angeles area. I have received information from my maritime unions there that they feel this legislation will be destructive to commerce in Los Angeles Harbor. Are these fears well grounded?

Mr. HINSHAW. I think that they are not. I have examined into it carefully with that in mind. This bill does not adversely affect intercoastal traffic through the Panama Canal, and has nothing to do with Los Angeles Harbor.

Mr. GEYER of California. It will increase the freight rates, will it not, from Los Angeles into the back country?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; I do not believe it will. This bill does not repeal the fourth section.

Mr. GEYER of California. The gentleman stated that because of competition he wanted it, and if we are going to bail the railroads out, will we not have to automatically raise the rates?

Mr. HINSHAW. No; I do not think that is true. What we need is more and better business. Then all transportation will receive its fair share of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD].

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I have no prepared address for this occasion. In fact, I did not expect to speak until yesterday. First, I compliment the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and the other members of that committee. The chairman of that committee came to Washington in the same Congress in which I came, 1917. I believe that he and I have stood together on almost everything that has come before Congress up to this time. We even voted against the National Transportation Act of 1920.

One point was made by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] yesterday which I desire to mention. He refers to the maintenance of waterways and of railways and told us that when waterways become obstructed the obstruction is removed by the Federal Government, but that when the railway becomes obstructed that obstruction is removed by the railway at its own expense. That is true, but that waterway is free to the use of every citizen of the United States, and the railway is free to the use to that particular railway company only. That is a very broad distinction.

Attention has been called to a provision in this bill in regard to the replacing of the railway bridges over waterways. On page 9 of the report of the committee attention is called to that, and it is stated that that is a change from the present practice. I am afraid that some of the railways—I would like to say "train busters," but I shall say "brain trusters"—have pulled the wool over the eyes of the members of the committee.

In the pending river and harbor bill which passed this House but a few months ago and is now pending in the Senate, there is one provision in regard to the improvement of the Calumet-Sag project in Chicago, totaling a cost of $25,200,000; $10,700,000 of that amount is for replacing railway bridges at the cost of the United States Government. So you see there is no change in that provision from the present practice. That bill passed the Committee on Rivers and Harbors by a unanimous vote, and passed the House practically by unanimous vote. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce in the Senate by unanimous vote, and is now on the Senate Calendar. If it passes the Senate and becomes a law, there is a provision in one project only where the United States pays to the railway companies more than $10,000,000 for the replacement of their bridges on one project alone. So much for that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

Mr. BULWINKLE. How many such instances are there in the United States?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Very few. There are not many cases of that kind that arise at all, and probably no more will arise in the next 10 years.

I want to call attention to this question of subsidies. We have heard a great deal about subsidies for the waterways. I want to make this statement, and I defy any man in the United States to dispute it. Subsidies to the railways, by reason of waterway improvements, are greater today than the subsidies to any boat line or any steamship line in the United States. We have upon the Great Lakes some 10 or 12 ports, almost exclusively for railroad use, in the ferriage of railroad trains. They are saved millions of dollars by reason of it. They tell us that if they were not permitted to ferry trains across Lake Michigan they would have to run their trains around over other lines of railroads south of Lake Michigan, through the car yards at Chicago, and that it necessarily delayed the trains approximately as much as 3 weeks in addition to the great cost they would be put to; but by reason of the Government dredging and maintaining those harbors on Lake Michigan, exclusively for railroad use, at Government expense, they are saved this enormous expense, amounting to many millions of dollars every year.

Reference was made to the port of New York. The car ferriage traffic of railroad cars loaded in the harbor of New York amounts to a billion dollars a year more than traffic handled in that port in ocean bottoms. How many people know that? The false propaganda that has been going over this country by reason of railroads circulating such things is absolutely terrific to one who has had occasion to make a study of these things. I hope the truth will become known before these discussion are over.

In 1934 the railroad car ferriage traffic from the different sections of the port of New York amounted to more than $14,000,000,000 in value, while freights handled by all the ships of the world that come in there were a little more than $13,000,000,000 in value. Almost every port in the United States has car ferries for the railroads. We have four ferries between Canada and the United States at Detroit, ferrying passenger trains, United States and foreign mails, express, and traffic of all kinds, which the railroads get entirely, but the Government of the United States dredges and maintains those channels for their use. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HARRINGTON.]

Mr. HARRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I find myself most emphatically in accord with the views expressed by the minority when this bill was reported from the House committee. As the Members signing the minority report so cogently said, "There is no public need nor demand for such vast extension of Government regulation of water transportation as is provided in this bill." That being undeniably the case, the proper thing to do would be to strike title II in its entirety from the bill.

No one will gainsay the fact that railroads are a necessity and the national interest demands that they be maintained in a manner that will enable them to render efficient and adequate service. But it does not follow that Congress should enact legislation that is deliberately designed to hamstring and cripple other forms of transportation.

The plan for regulation of the water carriers contained in this bill has been justly condemned by the Secretary of War, whose Department from the early days has been charged with the improvement of our inland waterways; it has been condemned by Chairman Land of the United States Maritime Commission, and its iniquities have been laid bare in a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House by the Secretary of Agriculture. As Mr. Wallace so appropriately puts it, "Any effort to improve the condition of the transportation industry should be harmonized with the general welfare." That is what the pending bill most glaringly fails to do.

The farmers of the country have long suffered from high transportation costs. In normal times they pay approximately 20 percent of the freight bill of the Nation. High rail rates tend to depopulate the interior of the country and to remove the farmer's market farther and farther from him. It increases his cost of doing business.

It cannot be successfully denied that water transportation is cheaper than rail transportation; and wherever this cheaper transportation is available to the farmers it would be a crime to deprive them of it.

Last year the farmers of the country received only 40 cents out of every dollar paid by the consumers for food. Some years back the farmer's share of the consumer's dollar went down to 33 cents. Such legislation as this would further aggravate the deplorable situation with which the agricultural producers of the country are now confronted.

As I see it, the prime purpose of title II of this bill is to raise water rates so as to place them on a level comparable with rail rates, creating a transportation monopoly. I raise my voice in protest against the perpetration of such an unwarranted outrage.

I am opposed to title II of this bill, the part placing water transportation under the devitalizing regulation of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I am not opposed to helping the railroads. On the contrary, I will go just as far as any other Member of Congress in helping the railroads to help themselves, and particularly to safeguard the welfare and interests of the employees of railroads. On the other hand, I am convinced that the strangulation of waterways, which is the obvious purpose of title II, will help neither the railroads nor the railroad employees, and, in short, that it is not the solution of the railroad problem.

I am just as firmly convinced that the incarceration of the waterways in the strait jacket of Interstate Commerce Commission regulation will only serve to saddle an additional burden on the farmers and shippers, the consumers, and the general public of this country, and further tend to stagnate the sources from which our domestic commerce springs.

To my way of thinking, this is a situation where an elephant has gotten himself tangled up in a mess of trouble, partly of his own making, and the blame is laid upon a mouse. Therefore, it is proposed to catch the mouse and put him into the same mess of trouble. It will punish the mouse, all right, but just how is it going to help the elephant?

Proponents of title II ask: "Why shouldn't the waterways be subject to the same regulations and restrictions as the railroads inasmuch as they are competitive?" My answer is that one dose of bad medicine does not warrant another. Simply because one member of a family has squandered his resources and, partly perhaps through no fault of his own, has landed in the poorhouse, is no reason every other member of the family should be placed in the poorhouse to share the pauperism of the first unfortunate. The obvious solution is to get the one out of the poorhouse rather than to put the others in.

In this discussion you will hear the inland waterways attacked as unfair competitors of the railroads, as the recipient of Government subsidies, and so forth, so much so that one might think that our waterways are an alien and illegitimate form of transportation. Should it not be recognized that the rivers and seas are our original avenue of transportation, God-given, if you please, and that if there is any interloper on the transportation scene, it is the railroads.

Rightly it has been said that our inland waterways belong to the public. Anyone can use them. But just try to operate your own private handcar over a railroad track and you quickly discover that you are trespassing. You promptly find out that the railroad right-of-way is a private monopoly and that you have no rights there unless you conform to the requirements of the private owner and are willing and able to pay whatever tariff he sees fit to exact.

Therefore, it is well to thus clearly define and understand the relative positions of these two forms of transportation—the one belonging to Mr. United States Citizen, the other owned by Mr. Private Monopoly, whose record of economic and moral sins is, well to be charitable and say the least, nothing to brag about.

Still I will grant you that everything possible should be done for the railroads, as long as what is done is constructive and not destructive as I construe title II of this bill to be. You cannot build up one fellow by tearing all the others down, but this is what the present bill proposes to do.

Personally, I feel that much of the present railroad trouble is due not so much to competition as to lack of competition. Fair competition is healthy for all, but when you tie up the railroad industry with all the rules, regulations, restrictions, and red tape that now comprises railroad law, the industry naturally loses energy and ambition and creeping inertia sets in. It seems to me that an obvious means of assistance would be to release the railroads from a lot of these restrictions, let them compete with one another, let them go after and create new business. Replace inertia with initiative, and I believe more would be accomplished than by trying to put another tiny competitor into the same strait jacket.

Let me give you an example of what, perhaps necessarily, seems to be the dominating theme of railroad operation in the United States today. Just the other day the Des Moines Register carried a story that an employee in the accounting department of one of the railroads had been handsomely rewarded. For what? For discovering that this particular railroad could save itself $50 a day by shortening the run on a certain division, thereby dispensing with a substantial number of man-hours of labor and throwing some employees out of work. I mention this as indicative of what appears to be the twin trends of thought actuating railroad operation—first to increase revenues by raising transportation rates, and second to cut down expenses by laying off employees. Any other business operating solely on these two principles could not help but go broke, and many of the railroads have.

Within recent years we have seen the railroads demonstrate what a little initiative and an idea can do toward recapturing some of their lost business. For nearly half a century the lines had been operating with just about the same type of passenger equipment and approximately the same speed schedules. Then one railroad tried out a superspeed streamlined passenger train, and things began to happen. Passenger business immediately picked up and a great deal of business lost to the airways and highways was recouped. The result is that most of the lines are now operating this type of train with gratifying increases in passenger revenue.

More of this type of initiative and effort, less regulating and restricting, and the railroads would not have to worry so much about a competitor that carries only 4 percent of the freight. Let us loan them money; let us cut out some of the red tape and restrictions; let us help get the railroads out of the hole, but why in the name of common sense subject waterways to the same type of treatment that has ruined the railroads?

Other speakers have quoted expert opinion in support of my position in this matter. They have quoted the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Labor and farm organizations and shippers in opposition to the waterways section of this bill. So I will not go over the same ground again. Instead I will conclude my remarks with a little story of how high transportation costs have stagnated the tri-State empire of which my home town of Sioux City, Iowa, is the commercial capital.

Years ago we had river transportation on the upper Missouri River and this territory was a prosperous empire. Then the railroads came, several of them running a race, in fact, to get into this rich territory. Strange as it may seem, the railroads actually put the river out of business. These were days before Interstate Commerce Commission rule when rate cutting, rebating, and other sharp practices were indulged in.

At any rate, with the new, quicker, and just as cheap form of transportation the steamboat business slowly disappeared, the river was neglected, and eventually meandered off into another channel and became unnavigable. In the course of time the Interstate Commerce Commission came into being, stopped some of the abuses, and started regulating rates. Ever since then the trend of freight rates has been in only one direction—up.

We continued to raise crops, but high freight rates erected a new barrier to the successful marketing of our foodstuffs. As our purchasing power was reduced, we had to cut down on the things we bought from other sections of the country, and this made less business for the railroads. Railroad traffic gradually declined, railroad employees lost their jobs, and as traffic dwindled, freight rates went still higher—the higher the rates the less business, and the less business the fewer railroad men employed.

As now planned by the Army engineers, river navigation will be restored to the Sioux City territory by 1941. The return of shipping to the Missouri River will release this inland empire from the economic shackles of prohibitive freight rates, help reestablish industry in the midst of agricultural plenty, expand our trade markets, and help bring back prosperity of this section. It will mean new life, new hope, new commerce, new production, new consumption, and with it a prosperity and purchasing power to absorb the products of the East, the South, and the West, which are now denied this region by reason of high freight rates and low purchasing power.

But the important thing here is that the railroads are going to profit rather than suffer from the rehabilitation of the upper Missouri River Basin. I am informed that the roads are now losing more money proportionately in this section than in any other, and that employment for railroad men is correspondingly bad. With the return of self-sufficiency to this section, it is only reasonable to anticipate that railroad traffic will increase accordingly and that railroad employment will get back on the upgrade. It is always the history of transportation that, even with river competition, the railroads continue to carry the great bulk of the freight.

In conclusion, let me refer the Members of this House to the minority report of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee reporting out this bill. The report says:

> The total amount of freight handled by the water carriers involved amounts to less than 4 percent. If this traffic were taken over by the railroads, the handling of it would be easily accomplished by slightly lengthening trains, without increasing the number of employees. In other words, both management and labor in the railroad field, we believe, are chasing a rainbow in their hope that this bill will bring them prosperity.

Therefore, with the interests of the farmers and working people of my section of the country in mind, and with the interests of the railroad employees of Sioux City and northwest Iowa just as fully in mind, I am going to express the hope that the House will see fit to eliminate title II from this bill. I am fully and firmly convinced that the welfare of the citizens of my district, including the railroad men, is wrapped up in the restoration of economic self-sufficiency to this area, and I know that the benefits of river transportation, so long hoped for, will be hampered if not altogether hamstrung by the enactment of the waterways clause. No Member of Congress wants to help the railroads and the railroad men more than I do, but I submit that drying up the rivers to freight traffic is not the solution. It can do little good. It will do much harm. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday, a proponent of this measure stated on the floor of the House that this is not a railroad bill, but I submit to you that every Member in favor of it bases his support on the contention that the railroads need help. I have heard no one assert that the inland waterway contract carriers have asked for legislation of this kind. I have heard no one assert that there is a public clamor for regulation of the small independent inland waterway contract carrier. No one has asserted that the inland waterway carrier has been guilty of the same practices which forced upon the railroads regulation by the Interstate Commerce Commission. No one has charged that the small waterway carrier has been guilty of the same misdeeds, of the same corruption, exploitation and building up of false-capital structures as was true of the railroads.

Low-cost water transportation is of benefit to the entire Nation; to the consumer; to the farmer and to the commercial and manufacturing interests. By assiduous and intensive propaganda, the Association of the American Railroads has sought to convey to the Congress and to the people of the country that all railroads are in desperate financial condition. I, for one, do not believe this to be true. It can be shown on the very best of authority that the majority of rail carriers are in remarkably sound condition when contrasted to business in general.

The Congress is being asked in this bill to legislate against an industry which is by every measurement only a weak competitor to the powerful railroad systems. This cannot be denied because the inland waterways sought to be regulated only carry 3 percent of the total transportation of the country. The Congress is being asked to legislate in favor of the strong and against the weak. It is being asked to sacrifice and destroy the usefulness of cheap inland waterway transportation for the sole purpose of attempting to strengthen the weak financial structure of the powerful private railroad interests.

If this bill is enacted, I predict that the small independent contract water carrier will very shortly be starved out of business and the railroads will have a practically complete monopoly.

Suppose we admit that some of the railroads of the country are in poor financial condition. Is not that generally true of every business concern? Is it not true of the farmer, the retail merchant, the skilled mechanic, and the laborer? The blame for the condition of these few railroads cannot be laid at the door of Congress. No legislation has been passed by this, or any other Congress, of which I am aware, that can be held responsible for their condition. Personally, I am not antagonistic to the railroads. I believe that their welfare is bound up with the welfare in general of all American business, but I do think that this bill goes much too far. Railroad management has shown no disposition to put its shoulder to the wheel and try to pull itself out. On the contrary, it has shown a disposition to depend upon legislation alone to lift it out of its difficulties.

This bill contains 243 pages, and in those 243 pages you will not find a single proposal which would have the railroads do anything whatever toward helping to improve or ameliorate their own situation. Every provision of the bill seems to have for its purpose the relieving and freeing of them from proper restraints and obligations which now rest upon them. While on the other hand, in provision after provision, restrictions and prohibitive tolls are imposed upon their competitors, particularly the small independent contract water carriers. Only one result can ultimately ensue, and that is a higher transportation cost to the consuming public.

There is another phase which I think is important. All over the country factories, warehouses, flour mills, steel mills, and plants have located themselves so as to be able to take advantage of low-cost river transportation. You will find them concentrated along river fronts. Passage of this bill and the regulations to be imposed would, without any doubt, increase their overhead costs, would increase their transportation costs. These additional costs would take away from them the advantage which they enjoy by reason of their location. It would, in many cases, destroy their business and would, in most cases, demoralize the operation of the industries so located. The enormous investments by these private companies would be jeopardized because many of them are existing solely because they are enjoying the benefit of their location and of river transportation. When their transportation rates are increased, as they surely will be if this bill is passed, their prices to the consumer will necessarily be increased. Large industrial areas would suffer a paralyzing blow and thousands upon thousands of employees would lose their jobs. Vast industrial structures, such as mills, factories, and warehouses would lose the inherent advantage which they enjoy because of their location and their low-cost water transportation, and would be compelled to either operate at a loss or to close down their plants.

These large industrial enterprises, which by the exercise of sound judgment in the first instance by taking advantage of what may be said to be the natural advantages of the country, by their hard, honest work, their employment of good business ethics, would, through an act of Congress, suffer an irreparable loss and perhaps be totally destroyed. A survey of the country will, no doubt, show that the greatest industrial activity occurs in those districts adjacent to or served by navigable streams.

Are we, by the passage of legislation of this sort, to attempt to reverse the basic and fundamental principles of economy and industry? Should we be expected, in order to help the financial condition of a few railroads, to devitalize our industrial empires and to combat the principles of natural finance, economy, and industry? Are we to say that we shall not take advantage of one of the Nation's greatest natural resources, our navigable streams, by putting the use of these navigable streams under an insuperable handicap?

The small help that this bill is intended to give toward relieving the railroads is many times outmeasured by its far-reaching consequences and damages to the prosperity of the country in general and to the increase in cost to the consuming public. Other proposals are now pending before Congress to help the railroads, notably the proposal to lend them hundreds of millions of dollars for the purchase of equipment and rolling stock. Whether the proposal to lend them this money is sound I am not prepared to say; but I do say this, that there is no valid reason for the passage of the measure now pending, as I am firmly convinced that its ultimate effect will be disastrous to industry and business and to the consuming public in general, as well as being inimical in the long run to the railroads of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, under permission previously granted I shall extend my remarks considerably by the insertion therein of numerous tables and statistical data taken from the hearings held on this very interesting subject. I hope between the adjournment this afternoon and Monday or Tuesday whenever we happen to vote formally on the controversial features of this bill, Members who are away over the week end will have an opportunity to read what I have tried to compile as a brief, succinct summary of some of the high spots from the hearings insofar as the plight of the railroads of this country is concerned.

Qualifying, as I think I may, in discussing a bill of this character, I come from a great water State. My district has much water. I doubt if there are many Members of this body who have more constituents than I whose livelihood is found along the water-front and whose problems are affected by this legislation.

I am for this bill. I am not willing to concede that my study of this problem can match that of the President of the United States, of the Honorable Jesse Jones, head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, now promoted to an even greater position, an agency which has loaned almost a billion dollars to the railroads of this country, much of which has been paid back. To give you an idea of what I had in mind in referring to Mr. Jones, it was my privilege to question Mr. Jones when he appeared before the committee. Reading from his testimony—which will follow herein at greater length—in answer to a question which I propounded, he said—

> I am rather inclined to the opinion that the Interstate Commerce Commission should fix, or somebody ought to fix, all of the rates for all of the different carriers, so as not to let them cut each other's throats.

I imagine that is where the "cutthroat" phrase was coined yesterday, with which so many of our friends found objection.

When I hear talk about the damage to our water-transportation systems to follow the enactment of this bill, I look naturally to such water carriers as the great Merchants & Miners Transportation Co., operating between Boston and Florida, one of the main water companies of this country. I was curious to know their reaction to the final draft of this measure presented by the subcommittee of which I am a member. You will find it set forth in full later in my remarks. I want here to pay my respects to the members of this committee of which I am a member for the hard work they have put in on this bill since January—not only the past 2 or 3 weeks, but since last January, morning, afternoon, and night. I was amazed at the spectacle we saw before the Rules Committee of this House when great Members of this Congress, chairmen of major committees, saw fit to try to stop consideration of this measure through the denial of a rule. I had never experienced anything of that kind. This bill has been available to everybody. True, it was in its final shape only printed a few days ago, but in presenting it this week end there was no idea of trying to drive it through this afternoon. The desire was to give the membership ample time. Copies of committee prints have been available from time to time. We, the members of this committee, standing unanimously behind this measure, feel that the more time you have to study it, the more you read it, the more seriously you consider the debate we have had in the past 2 days, the more convinced you will be that the transportation problem is one of the most vital before this country at this time, one of the most serious, and, as the President says, one that must be solved and should be solved through a measure of this character. So today messages similar to that from the Merchants & Miners Transportation Co. from back home are coming in.

Last night I looked over once more the report of the Maritime Commission and the latest survey of coastwise and intercoastal shipping which was presented to Congress in March last. Some of the Members pleading for water-borne transportation should read parts of that report. They will find those of the water carriers free from financial obligation in competition with other water carriers being financed today by the Maritime Commission, and possibly properly so. It is a promotional agency of this Government, not a regulatory body, an agency set up—and I hope that we might further dignify it along these channels—to promote and develop the merchant marine of this country. It should not be a rate-making body. I leave it to the fairness of the membership of this Committee if we want to legislate millions and millions of dollars at the free disposal of an agency such as the Maritime Commission, for the membership of which I have the highest regard—an agency to lend money almost at will, and at the same time throw the water traffic which that money develops into competition with the fellow who is able to travel the same road without financial help. It is not done with the railroads, it is not done with the trucks, and upon the passage of this bill it will not be done, I am glad to say, with water transportation, except within the field that proper development of our merchant marine requires.

Mr. Chairman, I now quote from a message from President Roosevelt, dated April 11, 1938, addressed to the Congress and published as House Document No. 583:

I ask your special consideration of the fact that matters relating to transportation in its wider sense are now dealt with by the following departments or agencies of the Government:

1. The Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture.
2. The Bureau of Air Commerce of the Department of Commerce.
3. The United States Maritime Commission.
4. The Division of Transportation of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce.
5. The Interstate Commerce Commission.
6. The Lighthouse Service of the Department of Commerce.
7. The Bureau of Navigation and Marine Inspection of the Department of Commerce.

These agencies deal with special phases of transportation rather than the transportation problem in its broader national aspect. Some of the functions are executive, some are legislative, and some are judicial.

From the point of view of business efficiency, such as a private corporation would seek, it would seem to be the part of common sense to place all executive functions relating to all transportation in one Federal department—such as the Department of Commerce, the Department of the Interior, or some other old or new department. At the same time all quasi-judicial and quasi-legislative matters relating to all transportation could properly be placed under an independent commission—a reorganized Interstate Commerce Commission. And such action would be highly constitutional.

I refer to this, not by way of recommendation, but only as one method which should receive congressional study.

In the meantime, and until it has been possible for the Congress to make any and all studies for permanent solution of the railroad problem, some immediate legislation is, I believe, necessary at this session, in order to prevent serious financial and operating difficulties between now and the convening of the next Congress.

The testimony before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of Hon. Jesse Jones, in part, ties very definitely with the statesmanlike stand President Roosevelt has taken in this matter. It was my privilege to be questioning Mr. Jones in an attempt to draw from him a recommendation as to what, in his opinion, was necessary as an approach at least toward the solution of our transportation problems. I quote from pages 1776 and 1777 of the hearings, as follows:

GENERAL MODIFICATIONS

Mr. COLE. Mr. Jones, we are concluding today about 10 weeks of hearings before this committee in response to statements from the President that there is need for immediate action by Congress in this railroad situation. Committees of three and six have been appointed and have reported. Two important bills have been presented to us, one by the Committee of Three and the other by the railroads. I mean by that, management and labor. This is the first time, to my knowledge, that they have come in since I have been a member of this committee and presented anything like this, which, whether we agree or disagree with it, is the result of many hours of hard work.

Mr. JONES. You mean management and labor.

Mr. COLE. Yes. They have presented a complete bill on this entire subject, and we have heard every interest that is affected.

In view of the testimony before us, and because of your having loaned almost $800,000,000 to the railroads, and having been very closely and intimately associated with the railroads, both in or out of court for the past 7 years, I am wondering if this paper you have submitted is a complete statement of your recommendations as to what is needed at this time. Are we to accept this as the sole conclusions of the R. F. C. as to what is needed at this time to help the railroad situation in this country?

Mr. JONES. No; I could go a little further than that—the part dealing with the R. F. C.

Mr. COLE. I thought you could, and I would like to hear it.

Mr. JONES. I see; you want to smoke me out. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLE. Well, I do not know of any man in this country I would rather smoke out on this subject than you.

Mr. JONES. All right. This redraft we are suggesting has to do, of course, with the R. F. C.'s part of railroading. That has been pretty well covered.

I would like to make this comment, with all due respect to management and labor: I do not know who represented the fellow who owns the railroads, the security holders. Has he been here yet?

Mr. COLE. Yes, sir; some of them have.

Mr. JONES. He was not in the council of that Committee of Six, was he?

Mr. COLE. I do not know.

Mr. PATRICK. He was represented here.

Mr. JONES. Well, that is only an observation that the people who put up the money to build the railroads were not represented on that committee, but that is all right. I have no criticism of the committee.

I do not like this idea of lending money at 2 percent and not having any of it come back for 5 years. I think if money is worth anything people should pay for it. If it is not worth anything, let us begin printing it.

I think we ought to help the railroads, but we ought to do it in a sensible way. I do not think that way is sensible.

Now, the next thing you need is a revision, a modification, of your bankruptcy law that will make it possible to reorganize. I sent a letter to the Judiciary Committee which about covered my views on that, and it was about that long [indicating half a dozen lines]. It said when two-thirds of all of the creditors of a railroad—and it should apply to any other business—and 50 percent, or 51 percent, of each class of creditors agree upon a plan of resetting the capital, there ought to be some way to make it effective.

Mr. COLE. That is similar to the pending B. & O. plan.

Mr. JONES. Except I went a little further than that. The B. &. O. already has a larger percentage. But it seems to me two-thirds of all creditors and a majority of each class ought to know what is to their best interest, and when they reach an agreement about it I cannot see any reason why we should not have some way to make it effective.

Now, that is the next important thing.

That and some little better regulation of competition.

I am rather inclined to the opinion that the Interstate Commerce Commission should fix, or somebody ought to fix, all of the rates for all of the different carriers so as not to let them cut each other's throats. I think, also, it would be proper to repeal land-grant rates and to put the cost of bridge construction over navigable waters, in substantial part, on the Government, where the changes are ordered by the War Department.

I do not think of anything else at the moment. If anybody has anything in mind, I would be glad to take a shot at it.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure all agree that statements of a character similar to the foregoing could be multipled many, many times in searching the papers produced by our leading public officials and businessmen throughout the country, including capital as well as labor; but for the purpose of persuading the House, if any persuasion is necessary, that something along the line adopted in the instant bill is necessary, I am going to content myself and limit, by reference in these remarks, the two outstanding gentlemen to whom I referred—the President of the United States and the Honorable Jesse Jones.

Let us proceed, therefore, on the theory that there is need at this time for something of a big and wholesome manner to be done by Congress—and I think it should be this Congress—on the subject. Discard, if you will, from the discussion before us the feeling of prejudice and in many instances smallness displayed by a lot of false propaganda that this legislation seeks to persecute and ruin the water carriers of this country. Again I remind you I represent a State and a district whose people are proud of our great water possessions; and I make the statement now that, aside from those interested in water transportation who have been to my office during my service as a member of the subcommittee handling this legislation, the objection of not a single, solitary water transportation man or company in my entire district, which includes much of Baltimore City, one of the finest harbors in the world, has been brought to my attention. I do not say they are entirely satisfied, and some may still be against the bill, but we feel at least that their objections have been met to a very large extent.

If there is any question as to the authenticity of this statement, let me remind you that activities within the harbor, conducted as a general thing by barges and tugs, are entirely out of the provisions of this bill, just as the commonly accepted bulk cargo carriers admittedly not in competition with common carriers are also excluded. As the strongest possible evidence of the correctness of this statement, let me read you a letter. In introducing the letter to which I have previously referred, I expect it is safe to say that every Member of this House knows of the Merchants & Miners Transportation Co.—certainly every Member of Congress representing the eastern-seaboard States does—because that company performs a service of the highest character; its boats, passenger and freight, operate daily from Boston to Florida and touch all major cities on the Atlantic coast. If the inclusion of water transportation in this legislation is as damaging as some of the weak and empty arguments advanced by the opposition to this bill, I ask, in all fairness, if you should not expect a great water-transportation company like the Merchants & Miners to be in line with that thought, let us see what they have to say on the subject. I read from a letter dated July 19, 1939, from the president of the Merchants & Miners' Transportation Co., addressed to me, as follows:

MERCHANTS & MINERS TRANSPORTATION CO.,
Baltimore, July 19, 1939.

Hon. WILLIAM P. COLE, Jr.,
Member of Congress, House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I understand that there will be a vote on the House substitute for Senate bill 2009 this week, and so far as I have been able to study this substitute bill it does contain similar provisions, insofar as water lines are concerned, to those contained in the Senate bill itself.

I hope that this substitute bill meets with your approval and will therefore receive your vote.

We have taken the position for years that the only fair and successful regulation of rates, etc., must be by one regulatory body, and this bill, as we understand it, accomplishes as much along this line as can reasonably be expected.

With kindest personal regards,

Yours very truly,

A. D. STEBBINS, President.

To this letter could be added numerous telegrams and letters from other water carriers which have come to me since this debate started.

Some of us in the past few days have received telegrams from our motor friends opposing this legislation or at least objecting to the amendment inserted in the bill last week by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce dealing with the American Railway Express and objecting so strenuously that they were almost willing to oppose the entire bill. The true situation is, as those who want to familiarize themselves with it must know and as I am sure many have since been advised, that dealing with this difficult subject in which the legislative drafting service of the House was called into service, a compromise of the attitude of the motor industry on one hand and the railway express on the other was attempted, and that compromise adopted on Friday by the full committee was found over the week end to be capable of a different interpretation than was really intended. Immediately on Monday, when after further study had been given to the matter the language was changed with the complete acquiescence of all concerned and with not only the approval but the hearty endorsement of the motor-truck industry and the railway express officials. There is nothing at all parallel in this situation from the standpoint of the conduct of the committee with that in its dealings toward water or any other phase of the bill. In my own case I received some telegrams in opposition to the bill from motor industries I have stated, but upon receipt of word that the change had been made in the language, which change had been prepared by the legislative counsel, they have been men enough to write to me counteracting their previous expression of opposition and expressing their appreciation of the fact that the features of the bill objectionable and unfair, as they saw it, had been removed. There is any concrete evidence of this situation you desire; I could insert at this point letters before me from the Maryland Motor Truck Association and many others, but I prefer to limit my references to my own State rather than go into the great bulk of correspondence I have naturally received from all over the country on the subject.

A brief history of the study given this subject preliminary to the introduction of legislation is found in this part of the opening statement by our able chairman, Mr. LEA, on page 17 of the hearings:

Chairman LEA. Last spring the President appointed a committee of 15, representing various groups interested in transportation, as a committee to consider our transportation problems. After appropriate conferences at the White House the President invited three members of that committee—Chairman Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and Commissioners Eastman and Mahaffie—to present recommendations for legislation.

The committee of three thus appointed, headed by Chairman Splawn, gave a comprehensive report, which was submitted to the Congress with a message from the President on April 11, 1938.

On September 20, 1938, the President appointed a committee of six to consider transportation problems and recommend legislation. The report and recommendations of this committee were, on December 23, 1938, presented to the White House. This committee was composed of M. W. Clement, Carl R. Gray, George M. Harrison, B. M. Jewell, Ernest E. Norris, and D. B. Robertson; three members of this committee represented railroad management and three railroad labor.

The bill now under consideration is an outgrowth of these efforts of the administration to secure legislation to improve the transportation situation of the country.

One of the greatest demonstrations by a big mind and an intimate student of our transportation problems was furnished our committee during the testimony by Commissioner Walter W. Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Dr. Splawn, impaired in vision, testified at great length, referring to charts and pamphlets in a way that would test the keenest sight there is, and we all marveled at the accuracy with which he proceeded. While I have prepared a historical background pertaining to the development in transportation, I am going to discard that and read at this point some of the high spots of the testimony of Dr. Splawn, because it is so very accurate and comes as a result of close and intimate association with the problem he has studied and lived with for many years. Quoting from page 19 of Dr. Splawn's testimony referring to early experiments and developments in transportation:

EARLY EXPERIMENTS AND DEVELOPMENTS IN TRANSPORTATION

Transportation has been of absorbing interest to the American people since the first colonists settled on the Atlantic seaboard and began slowly to creep up the rivers and look longingly toward the rich and fertile lands of the West that ever beckoned them. For 2 centuries the pioneers were handicapped by lack of transportation. The canoe and coastwise shipping, they had to rely upon. Then came, in the early part of the nineteenth century, the steamboat on the rivers and the lakes. The steamboat revolutionized for the time the settlement of this country. Jefferson had predicted that the country east of the river could not be thoroughly occupied for a thousand years. With the coming of the steamboat, settlers hurried into all of the fertile river valleys and along the southern shores of the Great Lakes in great numbers. Then there began an eager construction of canals. Engineers pointed out that the natural waterways might be supplemented by artificial waterways—man made. The most famous of these canals, the Erie, was completed in 1825.

There was great enthusiasm for the canals and for the turnpike. With New York connected by the Hudson and the Erie Canal with the Great Lakes, Philadelphia looked longingly toward connection with Pittsburgh on the Ohio and projected canals to the west, in spite of the expensive portages that interfered with continuous transportation.

Baltimore looked to the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal and the great business acumen of George Washington was brought into counsel in the promoting of that canal. Boston was shut off by the mountains from any canal connection with the Hudson or the Lakes to the west.

The advocates of the canals were in all of the States, particularly New York and the States bordering the Lakes and the navigable rivers; enthusiastic advocates of this type of transportation solicited the support of the States, the municipalities. States went into the transportation business. Candidates for Governor and for the legislature boldly claimed to their constituents that enough would be made from canal tolls to bear all of the expenses of the State government and relieve the people from all taxes, and some of them in their zeal prophesied that the earnings would even educate all of the children in the State.

Quoting further from page 21 with reference to the rapid extension of the railway net:

In 1873 there was a terriffic panic. Overexpansion of transportation was one of the chief causes of collapse. Railroads had been built too far ahead of the traffic. The canals in 1837 had not built ahead of the traffic, but ahead of the capacity to finance them. Then in the eighties 70,000 miles of railroad were built. The great transcontinental lines for the most part were completed with some others to follow in the next 10 or 15 years, and another panic broke in 1893 in which overexpansion in transportation was again a big factor. That panic ran along for several years. It was a major depression, and yet there was railroad construction; refinancing of railroads; reorganization of railroads; borrowing much money from European investors to rehabilitate railroads during the nineties.

Quoting further from page 23 dealing with competitors emerge:

COMPETITORS EMERGE

The period of liquidation set in in the early twenties. This country then began to invest in and lend very heavily to Europe and for 6 or 7 years there was a continued foreign market, which turned out to be another abnormal demand for American products.

That is, it was not a permanent demand, though many businesses expanded, thinking it was permanent, and during that era the transportation of the country greatly expanded. The railroads invested six or seven billions of new capital. It appeared that they had a monopoly. About 1920 the Federal Government began to invest very heavily of public funds in waterways and canalizing rivers, and the like, improving the coastwise water facilities. Some $2,000,000,000 of Federal money during the period after the outbreak of the World War went into those improvements.

Then there came, with the development of the petroleum industry and the parallel development of the automotive industry, a great demand for hard-surfaced roads, and the Congress at various times extended aid to the amount of about a billion and a half dollars to the States. During recent years another half billion in the form of work projects has been added to this road construction, making a Federal investment of public funds of some two billions of dollars in our public highways.

The States, municipalities, counties, and road districts matched that money with about 5 to 1, or with something over $9,000,000,000.

So there has come during and since the World War our system of highways, our hard-surfaced roads, our revived, and repaired, and rejuvenated waterways activities; and then the oil companies have developed, as well as the gas companies, a tremendous network of pipe lines. Electricity in a general way has come to replace much coal, and there has been an improvement in the use of coal itself.

While you have already received an idea of the magnitude of our transportation set-up in the United States, it is so important, as a basis of this legislation, that I am going to insert at this point some tables and discuss that phase of the problem, even at the risk of slight repetition. I do this because, as has frequently been stated, you are not dealing with a small matter but one of the greatest activities ever developed by man. Such is illustrated by the following table with explanation accompanying it from page 24 of the hearings:

THE PRESENT TRANSPORTATION SYSTEM IN THE UNITED STATES

The line mileage of the various transportation agencies in the United States is given below according to the latest available statistics:

Agency:		Miles
Steam railway mileage, 1937		[1] 238,539
Pipe lines		[2] 110,580
Electric railways, reporting to I. C. C. (excludes city street railways)		[3] 5,069
Mileage of navigable rivers and canals		[4] 27,406
Highway mileage, excluding city streets, 1936:
Local	2,535,777
State system	533,144
Total highway		[5] 3,068,921
Airway route miles, domestic		[6] 31,084

The Pullman Co. operates over 111,507 miles of railways and the Railway Express Agency operates over 282,091 miles of route, of which 211,571 miles are on steam railways.

Let us take first the line-haul miles. Of the railroads it is about 238,000 miles—that is, owned mileage. If that included owned and duplicated operated miles it would be about 250,000. Pullman cars are operated over 111,000 of the 238,000 total owned miles. Express companies operate on 211,000 miles. The express companies operating over other agencies and the railroads total 282,000 miles. There are 110,000 miles of pipe lines, counting the gathering lines; 27,500 miles of improved inland and domestic waterways; about 5,000 miles of electric lines left, excluding city street railways; some 31,000 miles of routes over which commercial aviation is conducted.

Then you have your local highways of 2,500,000 miles and your designated State highways of something like a half a million. Of this over half a million designated highways about 160,000 are hard-surfaced and built of the best materials and are the best highways.

Then there are about 800,000 miles of designated and local that have had some sort of treatment, some type of topping, good, bad, or indifferent.

There is your line-mile transportation set-up.

Hand in hand with the picture you have of a line mileage by various transportation agencies, it is necessary and interesting to be acquainted with the investment in dollars and cents which the public, including our banks, insurance companies, and charitable institutions have in the agencies with which we are seriously dealing today. I insert therefore, at this point a table which is clear in its explanation and brief, although it covers a tremendous field. Page 24:

Investment in intercity transportation agencies

Agency	Investment		Percent
Investment in rail transport agencies:
Steam railways—book investment	$26,598,000,000
Less accrued depreciation	3,000,000,000
		$23,598,000,000	44.34
Electric railways, not including city street railways	430,000,000
Less accrued depreciation	51,000,000
		379,000,000	.71
Sleeping car property	253,000,000
Less accrued depreciation	162,000,000
		91,000,000	.17
Express companies	43,000,000
Less accrued depreciation	26,000,000
		17,000,000	.03
Total for rail		24,085,000,000	45.25
Highways and highway vehicles:
Passenger automobiles:
Estimated depreciated value of vehicles	5,334,000,000
One-half assigned to intercity use [1]		2,667,000,000	5.01
Motor trucks:
Estimated depreciated value	1,021,000,000
One-half assigned to intercity use (182 I. C. C. 400)		510,000,000	.96
Motorbusses:
Investment in plant and equipment	531,000,000
48 percent assigned to intercity use [2]		255,000,000	.48
Highway cost, not including city streets [3]		20,800,000,000	39.09
Total for highway		24,232,000,000	45.54
Water-line investment [4]		3,782,000,000	7.11
Airways (airports and airplanes) [5]		171,000,000	.32
Oil pipe-line carrier property [6]		945,000,000	1.78
Grand total		53,215,000,000	100.00

[1] Depreciated value per vehicle applied to number registered. The Passenger Traffic Report of the Federal Coordinator of Transportation, p. 112, shows 51.7 percent of private pasenger-miles to have been intercity in 1933.

[3] Research Section of Federal Coordinator of Transportation.
[4] Census of 1916 adjusted to date.
[5] Bureau of Air Commerce, Department of Commerce.
[6] I. C. C. reports taken as 85 percent of total.

In this set-up, take the steam railroads: Private investment is twenty-six billions less accrued depreciation, three billions, bringing it down to about twenty-three and one-half billion dollars, and then you add in the net of the express companies, the Pullman Co., the electric railways, and you get a little over twenty-four billions book investment, less depreciation, or about 45 percent of the total—all private capital, private investment.

Then you have an investment of public funds in the waterways of about $3,600,000,000, and in the pipe lines an investment of private capital of about $945,000,000.

Then, there is the highway set-up, the public investment of some twenty billions in the highways themselves; then private investments in the facilities on the highways: The private passenger cars, intercity, about two and one-half billions, less depreciation, and the various motor vehicles, allowing half of them for intercity and half for urban, you get for the intercity, plus the public investment in the highways, an investment in interstate transportation by highway of something over $24,000,000,000, or a shade above 45 percent.

You have a grand total for all transportation of about $53,000,000,000; some estimates have run as high as sixty-five billions—some authorities think it is that much, and if you put in the city streets it would run, they believe, to eighty-five billions—but taking a conservative estimate of the intercity highway-transportation set-up it appears to be above fifty billions and something like thirty billions of that is private capital and about twenty-three billions public investment.

I am sure the operating expense and taxes of all our transportation agencies is likewise important. Dr. Splawn presented a most interesting analysis along this line, and I insert it herewith (p. 27 of the hearings):

The importance of transportation agencies in the United States as economic factors is shown by the fact that in 1937 they charged or paid for expenses, depreciation, and taxes over $22,000,000,000, as detailed by the following table:

Operating expenses and taxes of transportation agencies [1]

Item	Amount	1937
		Percent
Rail operations [2]	$4,397,000,000	19.77
Highway operations:
Highway motortrucks, common and contract	708,000,000	3.18
Private trucks, not for hire	3,830,000,000	17.22
Privately owned automobiles	11,477,000,000	51.59
All other highway	678,000,000	3.05
Total highway	16,693,000,000	75.04
Waterway operations	971,000,000	4.36
Airways	46,000,000	.21
Pipe lines (fuel and gasoline)	138,000,000	.62
Total	22,245,000,000	100.00

[1] Fifty-second Annual Report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, p. 33.
[2] Includes interurban and urban electric railways and bus operations associated therewith.

The above includes the activities of motor vehicles in cities. If the table were recast by confining it to intercity operations, the relative importance of railways would be increased.

I realize that data similar to that being introduced by me and pertaining to railroads is not available as to other forms of transportation, but it should be and is gradually becoming more and more accessible to us, they seeking the protection of regulation. As railroads are, as many claim, the major consideration in this matter, a review of railway finances, in part, is of intense interest and most convincing in the formation of an opinion as to whether anything on the subject of legislation along the lines proposed is needed. In other words, from a financial standpoint are the railroads in need of something being done at our hands? I quote from pages 28 and 29 of the hearings before our committee, volume 1.

REVIEW OF RAILWAY FINANCES

The capitalization of all the railways is a complicated system of wheels within wheels. If one wishes to view them as one system with all intercorporate holdings eliminated, it appears that the net capitalization on December 31, 1937, was $18,319,000,000, of which $7,069,000,000 was stock and $11,250,000,000 unmatured funded debt. These totals exclude $3,045,000,000 of stock and $2,759,000,000 of funded debt held by some railway companies as investments or as a means of controlling their subsidiaries.

The class I line-haul companies collect over 96 percent of the total steam-railway revenues. The par value of their stock on December 31, 1937, was $8,123,000,000. Their funded debt was $10,150,000,000, mostly mortgage bonds. The equipment obligations amounted to $549,724,000. The sum of the stock and debt was $18,273,000,000 of which the debt was 55.5 percent. Their total corporate surplus was reported as $3,126,000,000, but this, of course, was not available in cash. It is mostly invested in the railway property.

Income account, class I steam railways

I like to think in terms of the national picture dealing with this problem; what we need for the advancement of this Nation in peacetimes as well as war. In doing so it must be admitted that our railway lines are almost totally indispensable to the needs of our Nation at all times and especially as a medium of national defense. The same is true of our highways and waterways, but at this time the known financial condition of our railway carriers is distressing and we have reason to believe that the financial condition of other carriers, if the true facts were known, might be comparable. In other words, we are face to face, as has been stated, with a demand on the part of capital, labor, our great insurance and savings banks where so much is invested in the transportation agencies of this country, to do something in order that the $50,000,000,000 set-up that the transportation agencies present today might be conserved. I am opposed to Government ownership, but I am willing to predict the inevitable that if we do not, as statesmen and not as Congressmen looking selfishly to the problems of our individual districts, legislate and legislate promptly on this subject, that the railroad systems of this Nation will be taken over lock, stock, and barrel as an agency of the Federal Government. Imagine what this means. Think of the mileage, capitalization, and all of the ramifying problems associated with such an activity. Just a casual glance at the following table taken from our hearings will, I hope, cause you to immediately rebel against any move that might lead toward the future operation of our railroads by the Federal Government in peacetimes:

It is not possible, we discovered, to present to you how many of our water carriers and motor carriers are operating in the red, but we do have very accurately the shocking and distressing situation that faces our great railway systems. This table illustrates very definitely their difficulties. Page 39:

You will find in the hearings, volume 1, pages 40, 41, 42, and 43, a break-down in detail of the various roads in the hands of the receiver and trustee as of December 31, 1937; and as those exhibits are most too lengthy to insert as a part of my remarks, I do call them to the attention of the Members because of the interesting data they contain.

Mr. Chairman—possibly I should say Mr. Speaker, for the distinguished Speaker of the House honors us at this time with his presence—this is a tremendous problem. For the first time in the number of years I have been a Member of Congress we see a great business set-up, one of the giant industries of this country, coming hand in hand with the labor it employs in happy agreement recommending their idea as to the solution of their problems. Upon consideration by your committee, with two exceptions—two gentlemen for whom I have the highest regard, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], who made the same speech in substance yesterday, I think, as he made when the truck legislation was on the floor, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH], who is looking out for the interests of his section as he sees them—the balance of this committee, after intensive study, coming not from railroad men but men having possibly more water than railroads and motor transportation in their districts, recommend its passage. It has been a hard job. We are now rewarded with the wholehearted and enthusiastic endorsement of the President of the United States and many others. We now submit to you with confidence and satisfaction that after a very short period of operation under its provisions it will go down upon the records of big and worthwhile accomplishments by a Congress willing to look at our great transportation agency from a broad national viewpoint and not from what the interests of a local district here and there might present. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. TAYLOR] for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I am very much interested in the subject treated by this measure and I expect to vote for the bill, but there are one or two questions I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, and the first one is this: Will he point out to me for my own information in what respect this bill provides better facilities for mergers and consolidations than is provided by existing law?

Mr. LEA. The present law, as the gentleman is perhaps aware, requires that the Commission itself must devise the plan and present it to the railroads subject to their approval. The original scheme involved the idea of the Commission's dividing the country into about 15 sections and providing for consolidations in each of these general groups. This bill discards that and permits the railroad companies to present their own plans for consolidation subject to approval, rejection, or approval with modifications by the Commission. The Commission may require a showing that it is in the public interest as a condition on which it gives its approval.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The other question is this: Under existing law as I understand it, when the Commission arrives at certain specified findings they may order a merger or consolidation; but the pending bill, as stated, in line 15, on page 208, instead of giving the Commission discretion in this matter makes it mandatory that they shall order the consolidation. Why is the Commission denied discretion in matters of this kind?

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute. You will notice line 10 provides that "if the Commission finds, subject to such terms and conditions and such modifications as it shall find to be just and reasonable," and so forth, "will be consistent with the public interest, it shall enter an order approving and authorizing such consolidation" and, if you go over to page 209 you will find there are four considerations, including the proper consideration for the carrier employees before they approve and before they can make this finding. So that the Commission has a very broad discretion. It is not compelled to do anything, even though the word "shall" is used there, unless it first finds that it is in the public interest.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE].

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted me I wish in the first place to answer some of my colleagues who oppose this bill and who make the statement that there was haste used in its consideration and presentation here. They say that it is being jammed down the throats of the Congress.

The first bill was introduced in January. There were 10 weeks of hearings by the House committee, at which 20 or more witnesses representing the waterways appeared, in which Members of Congress came before the committee and then after an additional time the subcommittee of which I was a member had three committee prints made of a bill in order that we could draft as good a bill as possible. We submitted those committee prints to the various interested parties. Each and every member of the subcommittee listened patiently to the railroads, water lines, motor lines, forwarding companies, express companies, and so forth. There was not the slightest attempt by anyone to jam this down the throat of any person.

Who, pray you, started all this anyhow? We hear it is the railroads, that they are pulling the wool over our eyes, that they are covering our heads and that we are railroad-minded. If it be that I am interested in a great industry like this, one which has largely brought the country to its present industrial growth, and has helped to make of it a great Nation in which over a million men are employed, and that by being interested in such industry which is the very life blood of the Nation, I am railroad-minded, then I am proud to admit I am railroad-minded.

Who started this, I ask you? A year ago the President of the United States sent a message to the Congress asking it to consider the question of the regulation of all these transportation agencies in one agency. Pray, tell me was he, the President, railroad-minded? Did he have the wool pulled over his eyes? Nothing was done in the last Congress. In September the President appointed a committee consisting of three railway executives and three executives of railway labor organizations. They filed a report. But before this the President had appointed a committee of three from the Interstate Commerce Commission who likewise made a report to the President. When Congress convened the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee took the matter up and we held hearings. Before I forget it, may I say that we have heard how the great Secretary of Agriculture, how the Secretary of War, and how the admiral in charge of the merchant marine and other gentlemen connected with the Government are opposed to this measure; but not one word on this floor have I heard about the President of the United States favoring the bill. So I want to tell you how the President stands now.

Here is an Associated Press dispatch from New York issued last night:

ROOSEVELT ASSURES LABOR HE'S FOR IT

HYDE PARK, N. Y., July 21.—Representatives of railway labor and management have been informed that President Roosevelt wants House action on a bill for regulation of railway, water, and highway transportation.

The President said at a press conference today he had so advised E. E. Norris, president of the Southern, and B. M. Jewel, head of the railway employees department of the A. F. of L., at a White House conference in Washington yesterday. Norris and Jewel are members of a Committee of Six which drafted for the President recommendations for aiding the railways.

Mr. Roosevelt said he did that on two grounds:

That a year ago he thought something ought to be done, and he recommended that Congress act. Congress has been in session 6½ months and has done nothing to help the railroads.

Action would be absolutely in line with what he had been advocating for years—getting all forms of transportation coordinated so that wholly separate Government agencies would not be running transportation policies.

I want to hear something more now about what Secretary Wallace says. The Chief Executive has asked the Congress to pass the pending bill.

Let us see what is said in opposition to the measure. They do not like what has been placed in there about bridges. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MANSFIELD] said he knew of only one such bridge. I could name other instances in Texas, California, right here on the Potomac River in the District of Columbia, in Alabama and other States of the Union. It is only fair and just that where a railroad company has built a bridge over a navigable stream and has had it there for years, put there under the direction of the Secretary of War, put there by authority of the Congress, and by the expenditure of their own money, if they be required, in order to help navigation on the river, to change the bridge, there should be an apportionment of the cost between the railroad and the Government. That is fair. That is just. I know that every Member of this House will approve that.

We heard a lot said about southern freight differentials. My good friend from Texas said that we threw a sop in there. Let us see what that sop is. I would hate to call BOB RAMSPECK's bill a sop, because before the committee some 35 or 40 southern men appeared. What did they ask for? They said they did not want any law enacted because they knew that the Congress could not engage in the rate-making power itself. They stated further there was sufficient law now, and the only thing that should be done was to jog up the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SOUTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, it has always been the custom for one member of the committee to yield to another one. The gentleman did not yield to me yesterday, but I will yield to him now and let him ask me any question he wishes to ask.

Mr. SOUTH. I thank the gentleman and apologize to him for not yielding yesterday. It was because I had such a short time and needed it very badly.

May I ask the gentleman if anyone said that the investigation which this bill proposes should be limited to manufactured goods, and if this bill does not limit the investigation which the Interstate Commerce Commission is to make to manufactured goods? I also ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that most of the goods shipped from our section of the country are raw materials?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Now, I will answer the gentleman. That is the Ramspeck bill verbatim, which I had the subcommittee put in this bill.

Mr. SOUTH. The gentleman is talking about the witnesses, not the Ramspeck bill.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am talking about the Ramspeck bill, the one that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] asked for, and the one that every member of that so-called committee that met on southern freight differentials asked for.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman heard the testimony to which he has just referred. Is it not a fair statement to say that the investigation those people wanted made has particular reference to manufactured goods and the transportation of manufactured goods?

Mr. SOUTH rose.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I am not going to yield any more. I will answer that question.

Yes; because in the South we have commodity rates on our products such as cotton, fruits, and vegetables, and lumber that are as cheap if not cheaper than similar rates in any other section of the country today, and this fact cannot be disputed.

Mr. Chairman, I want to bring other matters to your attention that were said in regard to this subject, not only the question of the southern freight differentials, because I know and every man here knows that the Interstate Commerce Commission is fair and just. I wish to call to the attention of you southerners that on the Commission today there are three men from the South. There are two from Alabama, and there is Dr. Splawn, from Texas. Dr. Splawn came before the committee asking for this in simple justice in order that this bill should represent a national transportation policy.

We are Members of Congress. We men must rise above our little localities and remember that we are legislating for great industries the entire Nation over, and not just a few communities in the United States.

Now speaking in general terms about the bill, I call to your attention that for a number of years now the thoughtful American citizen has seen the necessity for a national transportation policy. The bill now for consideration before the House of Representatives, the Lea substitute for S. 2009, provides for this national transportation policy in its declaration of policies. I quote:

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

It is hereby declared to be the national transportation policy of the Congress to provide for fair and impartial regulation of all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of this act, so administered as to recognize and preserve the inherent advantages of each; to promote safe, economical, and efficient service and foster sound economic conditions in transportation and among the several carriers; to encourage the establishment and maintenance of reasonable charges for transportation services, without unjust discriminations, undue preferences or advantages, or unfair or destructive competitive practices; to cooperate with the several States and the duly authorized officials thereof; and to encourage fair wages and equitable working conditions;—all to the end of developing, coordinating, and preserving a national transportation system by water, highway, and rail, as well as other means, adequate to meet the needs of the commerce of the United States, of the Postal Service, and of the national defense.

In 1932 a committee comprising former President Coolidge as chairman, Bernard M. Baruch as vice chairman, former Governor Alfred E. Smith, Alexander Legge, Clarke Howell, and John W. Powers, who acted as secretary, and known as the National Transportation Committee, met, organized, and thereafter met to investigate and consider what should be done as effecting the national transportation policy of the Government. The report of the committee was far reaching in its scope, and I read to you the first part of the report, quote:

The railroad system must be preserved. Changed conditions require new policies but not abandonment of railroad regulations.

Among other things, the committee was examining and reported on the question of competition from water carriers, motor carriers, and airplanes. The entire report would be well worth the study of every Member of Congress for it must be realized that we as legislators under the changing conditions in the last quarter of a century have to do and look at the situation from a national standpoint. The one trouble, and it is no small matter, has been that time and time again the Congress as well as State legislators have never gone beyond the vision of their own locality.

President Roosevelt has sent frequent messages to Congress in regard to the situation, and in the fall of 1938 the President appointed a special committee consisting of three railway executives, namely: Mr. Clemment, Mr. Gray, and Mr. Norris; and three representatives of the railway labor who were, namely: Mr. Harrison, Mr. Jawell, and Mr. Robertson, to study this question and to make a report to the President. This they did, and this report is also well worth the reading by every Member of Congress who desires to study this question from a national standpoint and in the interest of all the people in the United States.

Prior to this, there was also another committee appointed from the Interstate Commerce Commission, known as the Splawn Committee, and the committee made an excellent report with many recommendations for the consideration of Congress; and likewise, do I advise the reading of this report. At the beginning of this Seventy-sixth Congress, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House gave consideration to this question and after extended hearings and after very lengthy discussions before a subcommittee, as well as the consideration of the Representatives on the subcommittee, by the full committee which lasted several weeks or more, the Lea substitute was finally reported to the House and this substitute provides in its entirety for amendments to the existing Interstate Commerce Act, a new title regulating water carriers, and a miscellaneous title providing for the construction of bridges over navigable rivers; second, the repeal of the land grant act provision; and third, amendments to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act; but in order that it may be brought to your attention I shall state to you a short analysis of its provisions in the law as is shown in the report:

TITLE I. AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING LAW

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION POLICY

This section contains a declaration of national policy with respect to all modes of transportation subject to the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act. In this declaration, for the first time, there is a statement of a policy which includes all forms of transportation made subject to that act.

SECTION 2. REGULATION OF FORWARDING CARRIERS

This section makes forwarding companies subject to part I of the Interstate Commerce Act and defines such carriers as persons which in undertaking to transport property for compensation employ other transportation agencies for the transport services. Such companies are made subject to regulation as forwarding carriers except with respect to transport operations which they perform as common or contract carriers otherwise subject to the act.

SECTION 3. THROUGH ROUTES

This amends section 1 (4) of the present act so as to make it the duty of carriers by railroad to establish through routes and reasonable rates with common carriers by water. The duty in respect of through routes between carriers by railroad is not changed.

SECTION 4. TRANSPORTATION FREE OR AT REDUCED RATES

This section amends the free-pass and free-transportation provision of the present act, section 1 (7), so as to permit the railroads to grant free transportation to executives, general chairmen, and counsel of employee organizations designated to represent employees under the Railway Labor Act.

It amends section 22 (1) of the act so as to permit railroads and other carriers to enter into contracts with the United States Government for the transportation of persons for the Government at free or at reduced rates. It also amends the same section so as to permit the free transportation of the household goods and other personal effects of employees when such effects must be moved as the result of change in the place of employment of such employees.

SECTION 5. CAR SERVICE

Section 5 amends section 1 (14) of the act so as to make it clear that the Commission's jurisdiction with respect to car service and the compensation to be paid for the use of any car not owned by the carrier using it includes a car of private as well as of carrier ownership.

SECTION 6. UNDUE PREFERENCE OR ADVANTAGE; INVESTIGATION BY COMMISSION; LIABILITY OF BENEFICIAL OWNER AND SHIPPER; FACILITIES FOR INTERCHANGE OF TRAFFIC

This section amends section 3 of the act in three respects: (1) It adds to paragraph (1) the words "region, district, territory" to the list of places to which a railroad may not give any undue preference or advantage, or subject to undue prejudice or disadvantage; (2) a new paragraph is added after paragraph (3) to relieve a shipper or consignor of a shipment of property, under specified conditions, from liability for transportation charges, and imposing such liability upon the party to whom delivery is made, if such party is the beneficial owner; and (3) it amends paragraph (3), which prohibits railroads from discriminating against connecting lines, by renumbering such paragraph as (4) and by including all common carriers by water subject to new part III (which regulates water carriers) as well as carriers by railroad.

Section 6 also includes a direction to the Commission to institute an investigation into the rates on manufactured products between points in one classification territory and points in another such territory and into like rates within any such territory maintained by common carriers by rail or water subject to part I of the act to determine whether any unlawfulness exists in such rates per se or in their relation to each other. Such investigation may be confined in the discretion of the Commission to such manufactured products as shippers thereof may specifically request to be included in the investigation.

SECTION 7. REPEAL OF PROVISIONS RELATING TO RAISING RATES REDUCED TO MEET WATER COMPETITION

This section repeals section 4 (2) of the act, which declares that when a railroad carrier, in competition with a water route, reduces rates on any species of freight to or from competitive points it shall not be permitted to increase such rates unless the Commission finds such increase rests upon changed conditions other than elimination of water competition.

This provision was considered to be no longer necessary in view of the increased jurisdiction of the Commission over rail and water carriers, and in view of certain decisions by the Supreme Court of the United States which had greatly lessened the application of this section as a deterrent in the matters the section was designed to reach.

SECTION 8. POOLING—CONSOLIDATIONS, MERGER, AND ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL IN CASE OF CARRIERS BY RAILROAD, MOTOR VEHICLE, AND WATER

Section 8 amends section 5 of the present act—

First. By including in the pooling provision carriers by motor vehicle and water carriers. The present section deals only with agreements between carriers for the pooling of freight traffic and earnings of different and competing railroads. No change is made with respect to the findings that must be made by the Commission in each case as to the probable effect of such a pooling arrangement upon service, operation, and competition. The assent of all carriers involved must be obtained as provided in the present law.

Second. By repealing the provisions of existing law requiring the Commission to prepare and adopt a general consolidation plan.

Third. By including in one section all the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to consolidations, mergers, and acquisitions of control of all types of carriers. In addition to rail carriers and motor carriers, heretofore included under the old section 5 and section 213, water carriers are included, and express companies and forwarding companies are included for the first time. Section 213 is repealed. Certain special provisions therefrom are retained and included in the amended section 5.

Fourth. Three additional paragraphs are added to renumbered paragraph (2)—corresponding to paragraph (4) of present section—these additional paragraphs direct the Commission to give weight to the following considerations when passing upon any proposed transaction: (1) The effect upon adequate transportation service; (2) effect upon the public interest of the inclusion or failure to include other railroads in the territory involved; (3) the total fixed charges; and (4) the interest of the carrier employees affected. In respect of employees the Commission is directed to require as a prerequisite to its approval of any proposed transaction under this section "a fair and equitable arrangement to protect the interests of the employees affected." The Commission is also instructed not to approve any consolidation, merger, purchase, and so forth, which contemplates a guaranty of dividends except upon a specific finding that such guaranty is not inconsistent with the public interest. A specific finding must also be made with respect to an increase of total fixed charges on funded debt, that such increase in a particular case would not be contrary to the public interest.

SECTION 9. REPEAL OF POWER TO FIX CERTAIN THROUGH ROUTES AND JOINT RATES

Section 9 repeals subparagraph (b) of paragraph (13) of section 6. That subparagraph as now in effect limits the Commission's jurisdiction with respect to the establishment of through routes and joint rates by rail and water by providing that the Commission may prescribe only the maximum joint rate that may be charged. The bill gives the Commission full authority over rates by water carriers including authority to prescribe both the minimum and the maximum joint rail and water rates. It was necessary to repeal the subparagraph in paragraph (13) of section 6 which limits the authority as aforesaid.

SECTION 10. EXPENSES OF STATE COMMISSIONERS; COOPERATION WITH STATE AUTHORITIES

Section 10 adds to paragraph (2) of section 13 of the act an additional provision which directs that representatives of State commissions sitting with the Interstate Commerce Commission, under the provisions of that section, in cases pending before the Commission shall receive such allowances for travel and subsistence expenses as the Commission shall provide.

Paragraph (3) of section 13 is amended by providing for cooperation between the Commission and State authorities in matters arising under new part III of the act, relating to water carriers as well as in matters arising under part I.

SECTION 11. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 15

Section 11 amends section 15 of the act by striking out in paragraphs (1) and (3) the provisions which restrict the Commission to the prescription of maximum rates over rail and water routes. This repeal is necessary inasmuch as new part III gives the Commission authority over minimum rail-water rates as well as over maximum rates.

SECTION 12. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 16

Section 12 amends section 16 of the act by reducing from 3 years to 2 years the period within which actions at law by carriers subject to part I may be begun for recovery of their charges and making the same change with respect to actions by shippers against carriers for recovery of overcharges. No change is made in the present 2-year period of limitation for the filing of complaints by shippers against carriers for recovery of damages not based on overcharges.

SECTION 13. COMMISSION PROCEDURE; DELEGATION OF DUTIES; REHEARINGS

Section 13 amends provisions dealing with procedure before the Commission and with the methods of carrying on the work of the Commission now in sections 16a, 17, 204 (e), and 205 (a). The purpose of the change is to include so far as possible all such general provisions in one section.

Section 16a, which provides for rehearings by the Commission, is repealed and the matter therein is incorporated in amended section 17. This change results in a more logical and orderly arrangement.

Section 17 is amended in several important respects:

First. The Commission may as now create divisions of its members and in addition designate one or more divisions of its members as appellate division.

Second. The assignment or reference to divisions of any work or functions relating to rates, fares, or charges shall be made according to the character of the regulation to be exercised and not according to the kind or classes of carriers, or form of transportation in which such carriers are engaged. This is intended to prevent the establishment of divisions to deal exclusively with a particular class of carriers.

The Commission may also assign any of its work or functions (except matters required to be referred to joint boards by pt. II) to an individual Commissioner, an examiner, or a board of examiners, with full power to act thereon. The prohibition upon such assignments in present section 17 in matters involving investigations upon the Commission's own motion, or (without consent of the parties) in contested proceedings involving public hearings, is repealed. Under section 17 in the existing law the Commission has authority to assign any of its work or functions (except as noted) to any employee or to a board composed of employees, as well as to individual Commissioners.

Third. Power to issue subpenas is granted to examiners but this power may be exercised only as to the work or functions of the Commission which by order under this section is specifically assigned or referred. Where an examiner performs other duties he has no authority to issue subpenas. The Commission may continue to assign duties to examiners, as it does now, to conduct hearings and to prepare and issue proposed reports and with respect to such duties he has no additional authority.

Fourth. Any finding, report, or requirement of an individual Commissioner, examiner, or board of examiners with respect to any matter assigned under this section, as to which a hearing is held, shall be accompanied by a statement in writing of the reasons therefor, together with a recommended order. This order if not excepted to by the parties or stayed by the Commission or a division, or otherwise postponed, becomes the order of the Commission and is effective as such after 20 days after service upon the interested parties. This is substantially the same as the procedure now provided for in section 205 (a) with respect to certain matters under part II, as to motor carriers, extended to apply to regulation of the other classes of carriers subject to the act.

Fifth. In view of the broadening of the authority to assign work or functions it is considered desirable to limit the class of employees to which such assignments may be made. The amended section therefore provides that assignments of work or functions of the Commission with power to act as the Commission itself or a division may act shall be made to an examiner or to a board composed of examiners in addition to such assignments to individual Commissioners.

Sixth. The rights of parties are protected by providing that upon exceptions to a recommended order of an individual Commissioner, examiner, or board, the Commission or a division, as the Commission may provide, shall reconsider the matter either upon the same record or after a further hearing. It is further provided that where such recommended order becomes the order of the Commission after a period of 20 days as specified in this section, if no exceptions are filed, an application for reconsideration or rehearing, if filed within 20 days after the recommended order has become effective shall be granted and the matter shall be reconsidered by the Commission or an appropriate division. If such application is filed after the expiration of said 20 days, the reconsideration may be granted in the discretion of the Commission for good cause shown. Litigants by prompt application are thus assured as a matter of right of a reconsideration or rehearing by the Commission or a division of any so-called automatic or 20-day order resulting from a recommended order of an individual Commissioner, examiner, or board.

Application for rehearing of a decision, order, or requirement of a division shall be considered and acted upon by the Commission or referred to an appropriate division for consideration and action, but the Commission may by general rules or orders establish limitations upon the right to a rehearing of a decision, order, or requirement of the Commission or of a division so as to confine such right to proceedings or classes of proceedings, involving issues of general transportation importance. This is a change in the present law under which the entire Commission is required to consider and pass upon applications for reconsideration or rehearing of any decision, order, or requirement of the Commission or a division. The change in procedure will operate to expedite the work of the Commission while affording shippers, carriers, and other interested parties in any proceedings full consideration of matters before the regulation agency in accordance with the importance of such matters.

Seventh. A new paragraph is added at the end of section 17 providing that representatives of employees of a carrier may intervene and be heard in any proceedings arising under part I affecting such employees.

SECTION 14. SHORT TITLE FOR PART I

Section 14 amends section 27 of the Interstate Commerce Act by changing the present short title of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act.

SECTION 15. SHORT TITLE FOR PART II

Section 15 amends section 201 of the act by changing the present citation of part II from the "Motor Carrier Act, 1935," to "part II of the Interstate Commerce Act."

SECTION 16. REFERENCES TO POLICY DECLARED IN PART II

Section 16 repeals references in part II of the act to the declaration of policy in section 202 (a) and substitutes in lieu thereof the words "the national transportation policy declared in this act."

SECTION 17. REPEAL OF DECLARATION OF POLICY IN PART II

Section 17 amends section 202 of the act by repealing the declaration of policy in part II. The national transportation policy declared in section 1 of the bill applies to all forms of transportation included in parts I, II, and III, and makes it unnecessary to include separate declaration for each part.

SECTION 18. AMENDMENTS TO SECTION 203

Section 18 amends section 203 in part II of the act by changing the definitions of "common carrier by motor vehicle" and "contract carrier by motor vehicle."

Under the present definitions transportation of passengers or property "by a lease or any other arrangement" is included. This language is omitted from the definitions as rewritten. Its application is not clear. Presumably, it was intended to cover the case of a person who, though not performing service as a carrier, leased vehicles to another person to be used by such other person for his own purposes. Careful consideration was given to this question, but the committee decided that it was best to leave this or any similar language out of the definitions.

Motor vehicle operations of express companies will continue to be subject to regulation upon the same basis as under present law, notwithstanding certain changes in the language of these definitions.

The amended definitions provide that transportation by motor vehicle performed by carriers by raidroad or by water of transfer collection, or delivery services, in terminal areas, shall be considered to be transportation subject to, and shall be regulated under, part I or part III, as the case may be, when such services are incidental transportation regulated by such parts. Performance within terminal areas of motor carrier transfer, collection or delivery services, for common carriers by railroad, motor vehicle, or water, or for express companies subject to part I, when performed by any person as an agent for such carriers, or under a contractual arrangement, is to be considered to be transportation by the common carrier for which it is performed, and regulated as such under parts I, II, or III, as the case may be. This provision, as contained in paragraph (14), is one of the exceptions referred to in the language in parentheses contained in paragraph (15).

SECTION 19. EXEMPTION OF CERTAIN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE OPERATIONS OF MOTOR CARRIERS

Section 19 amends section 204 (a) of part II by adding a new subparagraph (4a). This authorizes the Commission to exempt from provisions of part II, as specified in the certificate of exemption, any motor carrier (or a group of such carriers) engaged in operation solely within a single State which also incidentally engages in transportation in interstate or foreign commerce within the State. The certificate shall be issued where the Commission finds that such transportation in interstate or foreign commerce is in fact of such nature, character, or quantity as not substantially to affect or impair uniform regulation by the Commission of transportation by motor carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce in effectuating the national transportation policy. The filing of an application for exemption under this subparagraph shall exempt the carrier from regulation under part II until final disposition has been made of the application, provided that the application is accompanied by a certificate of the State board of the State in which the operations of the applicant are carried on stating that in the opinion of such board the carrier is entitled to exemption under this subparagraph.

SECTION 20. AMENDMENTS TO SECTIONS 204 AND 205

This section repeals subsection (e) of section 204 of part II. The substance of that paragraph which deals with application for rehearing, and so forth, has been incorporated in amended section 17 of part I. It also repeals subsection (a) of section 205 of part II, which deals with procedure in matters arising in the administration of such part. The substance of the subsection is incorporated in amended section 17 of part I.

SECTION 21. AMENDMENTS RELATING TO POWER OF THE COMMISSION TO LIMIT SCOPE OF MOTOR-CARRIER OPERATIONS

Section 21 amends subsection (a) of section 208 and subsection (b) of section 209 of part II. Those subsections authorize the Commission to impose conditions and limitations upon the operations of common and contract carriers by motor vehicle as the public convenience and necessity may require. The amendments provide that the Commission shall not impose any condition or limitation which shall prevent a motor carrier entitled to a certificate or permit on the basis of its operations on or prior to June 1, 1935, from transporting any commodity or class thereof which it transported, or from engaging in transportation from or to points to and from which it transported such commodity or class, on or prior to said date.

SECTION 22. REPEAL OF MOTOR-CARRIER PROVISIONS RELATING TO CONSOLIDATIONS, MERGERS, AND ACQUISITIONS OF CONTROL

This section repeals section 213 of part II, which deals with consolidations, mergers, and acquisitions of control of motor carriers. The substance of section 213 is incorporated in amended section 5 of part I, which deals with the same matters in connection with carriers by railroad, express companies, forwarding carriers, motor carriers, and water carriers.

SECTION 23. NEW SECTION ADDED TO PART II

Section 23 amends part II of the act by adding a new section, 213, providing that if an owner of property transported under such part renders any service connected with such transportation or furnishes any instrumentality used therein, the allowance therefor which may be made by the carrier shall be reasonable, and authorizes the Commission upon complaint or upon its own initiative, after a hearing, to determine the maximum amount of such allowance. This section is the same as section 15 (13) of part I.

SECTION 24. PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION CONTAINED IN CONTRACTS

Section 24 amends subsection (a) of section 218 of part II of the act, which relates to schedules of rates and contracts of carriage of contract carriers by motor vehicle. The subsection at present provides that such carriers shall file, at the request of the Commission, in lieu of schedules of minimum charges, copies of contracts containing their minimum charges. There are also provisions relating to publishing and keeping open for public inspection such schedules and copies of contracts. In order to clarify these provisions, the amendments to the section provide that such carriers shall not be required to publish copies of such contracts and keep them open for public inspection, but the Commission is empowered to make public the minimum rates or charges contained therein. The names of the persons for whom property is transported and other terms of the contracts shall not be made public by the Commission, but the Commission may make the contracts, or any part thereof, available as a part of the record in a formal proceeding where it considers such action consistent with the public interest.

SECTION 25. INVESTIGATION OF NEED FOR REGULATING SIZES AND WEIGHT OF MOTOR VEHICLES

Section 25 directs the Commission to expedite the investigation of the need for Federal regulation of the sizes and weight of motor vehicles, already authorized by section 225 of part II of the Interstate Commerce Act.

SECTION 26. REPEAL OF SECTION 3 (e) OF INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

Section 26 repeals subsection (e) of section 3 of the Inland Waterways Act of June 7, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 49, sec. 153 (e)). That subsection relates to certificates of public convenience and necessity obtained under the provisions of part I upon application by any person engaged or about to engage in common-carrier service by water on the Warrior, Mississippi, Columbia, Snake, Sacramento, San Joaquin, or Savannah Rivers, or tributaries. Such operations are included in the new part III of the Interstate Commerce Act and the procedure for obtaining certificates is provided for in that part.

Subsection (e) also provides that the Commission shall by order direct connecting common carriers and their connections to join with a common carrier by water possessing a certificate so issued, in through routes and joint rates, and that the Commission shall fix reasonable minimum differentials between all-rail rates and joint rates in connection with such water carrier to apply until changed by the Commission. Provision is made in section 307 (d) of new part III of the Interstate Commerce Act for the establishment by the Commission of through routes and joint rates by railroad and common carriers by water. Such section further provides that the Commission may prescribe such reasonable differentials, if any, as it may find justified between all-rail rates and joint rates in connection with a common carrier by water.

TITLE II. REGULATION OF WATER CARRIERS IN INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

This title of the bill consists of two sections, 201 and 202. Section 201 amends the Interstate Commerce Act by adding at the end thereof a new part III providing for the regulation of domestic water transportation. Section 202 relates to the effective date of the provisions of the new part III.

Most of the regulatory provisions included in the new part III were modeled on provisions of part I dealing with the same subject. However, it was found that the provisions of part I were, in many cases, unnecessarily repetitions, and in many cases not logically arranged. Much unnecessary language was omitted or condensed, and some provisions were rearranged, in the drafting of the provisions of part III. It seems desirable to state this in order that undue significance, from the standpoint of their legal effect, will not be attached to these differences in language and arrangement.

The provisions of the new part III are as follows:

SECTION 301. SHORT TITLE

This section contains the short title of the new part, and a table of contents.

SECTION 302. DEFINITIONS

This section contains the definitions. Reference is here made only to those definitions which seem to require some explanation.

Paragraphs (d) and (e) contain definitions of common carrier by water and contract carrier by water. The only features of these definitions which need explanation are the exceptions contained therein which are principally for the purpose of dealing with the subject of water transportation engaged in by carriers which are primarily engaged in other modes of transportation.

By virtue of these exceptions the definition of common carrier by water does not include transportation by water by a carrier by railroad subject to part I, or by a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to part II where such transportation is incidental to transportation subject to parts I and II, and where such transportation is performed within terminal areas in transfer, collection, or delivery services, or where such transportation constitutes the performance of floatage, lighterage, or towage. Such water transportation by railroads and motor carriers is to be regulated under parts I and II of the act according to the type of carrier performing it. A similar exception is contained in the definition of contract carriers by water with respect to water operations of contract carriers by motor vehicle. This latter exception was confined to contract carriers by motor vehicle because of the fact that operations by railroads and by common carriers by water do not involve contract carriage.

The definition of contract carrier by water excludes transportation of the character defined in paragraph (d) and in the various exceptions in that paragraph.

Each of these definitions contains a provision to the effect that transfer, collection, or delivery services by water by any person—whether as an agent or under a contractual arrangement—for a common carrier by railroad subject to part I, an express company subject to part I, a common carrier by motor vehicle subject to part II, or a common carrier by water subject to part III, shall be considered to be performed by the common carrier or express company for which such person performs such services, and shall be regulated on that basis. This provision as contained in paragraph (d) is one of the exceptions referred to in the language in parentheses contained in paragraph (e).

Paragraphs (g) and (h) contain definitions of "transportation facility" and "transportation." Some question has been raised as to the broadness and comprehensiveness of these two definitions, apparently based on the misconception that this will result in the regulation of persons generally. It seems well to point out that these definitions are merely for the purpose of giving definite meaning to other definitions contained in part III. No regulation of transportation or of the use of transportation facilities is provided for except where such transportation or use is by, or incidental to operations of, water carriers subject to part III.

Paragraph (i) defines the terms "interstate or foreign commerce" and "transportation in interstate or foreign commerce." This paragraph defines the jurisdiction of the Commission so far as the type of water transportation covered by part III is concerned. In general terms the scope of regulation is all domestic water transportation or transportation by a combination of water, railroad, or motor vehicle, and also such transportation in foreign commerce to the extent that there is a movement from a point in the United States to another point in the United States either before or after transshipment at a place within the United States. To illustrate, a shipment of goods by water from Albany, N. Y., to Liverpool, England, would not be covered by part III if there were no transshipment at an intermediate point within the United States. On the other hand, goods shipped by water from Albany to New York City and there transshipped for movement beyond by water to Liverpool would be subject to regulation insofar as the shipment from Albany to New York City was concerned.

SECTION 303. APPLICATION OF PROVISIONS; EXEMPTIONS

Certain water transportation, principally by carriers owned and controlled by railroads, has heretofore been subject to regulation under part I. Much of this transportation will be subject to the new part III. However, it is deemed advisable to have part I continue to apply to such transportation to the extent that it imposes regulation in addition to what is imposed by part III, and subsection (a) of this section so provides.

Subsections (b), (c), and (e) relate to exemptions in the case of contract carriers. Very painstaking consideration was given to the working out of these exemptions. Every effort was made to avoid imposing unnecessary regulation upon carriers of this type, which have never before been regulated, and at the same time to insure that the exemptions would not result in regulated carriers being subjected to unfair competitive disadvantages.

Subsections (b) and (c) are unqualified exemptions, and the carriers exempted are not required to apply to the Commission for exemption. These exemptions are written in terms of the transportation engaged in, so that any other transportation which the carriers may engage in will be subject to such regulation as may be provided for. Subsection (b) exempts transportation by any contract carrier by water of commodities in bulk in a vessel the cargo space of which is used for the carrying of not more than three such commodities at any given time. In order to further limit the exemption, it only applies in the case of commodities which are (in accordance with the existing custom of the trade in the handling and transportation of such commodities as of June 1, 1939) loaded and carried without wrappers or containers and received and delivered by the carrier without mark or count. It is provided that two or more vessels, while navigated as a unit, shall be considered as a single vessel. This is necessary for purposes of the application of the "three commodities" provision, and will apply in the case of barges and similar vessels physically connected with one another and towed or propelled under or by the same motive power. It is provided that the subsection shall not apply to transportation subject, at the time part III takes effect, to the provisions of the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933, as amended. This provision does not exempt intercoastal contract carriers because such carriers are already under regulation by the Maritime Commission. Such carriers will, however, be entitled to be exempted under the provisions of subsection (e) if they can qualify thereunder.

Subsection (c) exempts transportation by a contract carrier by water of commodities in bulk in a nonoceangoing vessel on a normal voyage during which the cargo space of the vessel is used for carrying not more than three such commodities, and during which the vessel passes within or through waters which are made international for navigation purposes by any treaty to which the United States is a party. This will apply on the Great Lakes. If the contract carriers in question were regulated, it would place them at an unfair advantage in their competition with unregulated Canadian vessels.

Subsection (d) exempts transportation of liquid cargoes in bulk in tank vessels designed for such use exclusively and certified under regulations approved pursuant to section 4417a of the Revised Statutes.

Subsection (e) provides for an exemption, which may be obtained only upon making application to the Commission, in the case of contract carriers engaged in transportation which, by reason of the inherent nature of the commodities transported, their requirement of special equipment, or their shipment in bulk, is not actually and substantially competitive with transportation by a common carrier subject to part I, II, or III. This provision is more liberal than the similar provision in the Senate bill (S. 2009) in that it provides that an application made prior to October 1, 1939, by a carrier in operation on June 1, 1939, shall exempt the carrier until a final determination of the application. This gives the carrier an opportunity to escape from being brought under regulation at all if he is entitled to the exemption. Under the Senate bill the carrier would come under regulation and then have to prove his right to be relieved from it. This special privilege relating to an application made prior to October 1, 1939, does not apply, however, to intercoastal contract carriers, since they are already under regulation; but such carriers are entitled to exemption in due course if they can establish their right to it.

Subsection (f) is to insure that laws of navigation, and certain other admiralty matters, will not be affected by part III unless there is a conflict.

Subsection (g) exempts certain transportation within a single harbor or between places in contiguous harbors, and transportation by ferry, and by small craft.

Subsection (h) provides for exempting water carriers engaged solely in transporting the property of persons owning all—or substantially all—of their voting stock.

Subsection (i) relates to the application of the provisions of part III to water carriers owned or controlled by the United States.

Subsections (j) and (k) make it clear that the regulatory powers of the States over matters within their respective jurisdictions are not impaired by the provisions of part III.

SECTION 304. GENERAL POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

Subsections (a) and (b) grants the Commission administrative powers similar to provisions contained in parts I and II.

Subsection (c) empowers the Commission to classify carriers to establish just and reasonable rules, regulations, and requirements consistent with the provisions of part III to be observed by the carriers so classified. This is similar to section 204 (c) of part II.

Subsection (d) gives the Commission power to relieve water carriers from the provisions of part III to the extent necessary to avoid or lessen undue disadvantages suffered by reason of the practices of persons operating to or from ports of foreign countries.

Subsection (e) authorizes the Commission to investigate for the purpose of determining whether any water carrier has failed to comply with any provision of part III or with any requirement established pursuant thereto, and to issue appropriate orders to compel compliance.

SECTION 305. RATES, FARES, CHARGES, AND PRACTICES: THROUGH ROUTES

Subsection (a) contains the general requirement regarding the duty of a common carrier by water to render service and to establish just and reasonable rates, and so forth. The requirements are similar to those in section 1 (4) and (6) of part I.

Subsection (b) imposes the duty upon common carriers by water to establish through routes with other such carriers and with common carriers by railroad. Permission is given to establish reasonable through routes with common carriers by motor vehicle. Just and equitable divisions of joint rates are required. Comparable provisions of part I are in section 1 (4).

Subsection (c) prohibits a common carrier by water giving undue or unreasonable preferences to any person, port, port district, and so forth, but it contains a proviso that the subsection is not to apply to any discrimination, prejudice, or disadvantage to the traffic of any other carrier. Except for the proviso, comparable provisions of part I are in section 3 (1).

Subsection (d) prohibits discriminations by common carriers by water in the interchange of traffic between their lines and connecting lines of railroad. The comparable provision of part I is in section 3 (3) as amended.

SECTION 306. TARIFFS AND SCHEDULES

Subsection (a) imposes the duty on common carriers by water to file with the Commission, and to keep open for public inspection, tariffs of its rates, charges, classifications, rules, regulations, and practices. It is comparable to section 6 (1) of part I.

Subsection (b) imposes certain requirements relating to rates and tariffs.

Subsection (c) requires observance of rates and tariffs filed with the Commission.

It also makes applicable to common carriers by water the provisions of section 1 (7) and 22 (1) of part I relating to transportation free or at reduced rates.

Subsection (d) requires notice to be given of changes in rates. It is comparable to section 6 (3) of part I.

Subsection (e) deals with contract carriers by water, and requires such carriers to file with the Commission and keep open for public inspection schedules of minimum rates actually maintained and charged, but the Commission is authorized to require the filing in lieu of such schedules, of copies of the contracts containing the charges of such carriers. Such contracts are not required to be open for public inspection, but the Commission may make public the information contained therein under certain specified circumstances. The Commission may, for good cause, grant relief from the requirements of this subsection. It is comparable to section 218 (a) of part II as amended.

SECTION 307. COMMISSION'S AUTHORITY OVER RATES, ETC.

Subsections (a) and (b) give the Commission authority to inquire into the justness and reasonableness of rates of common carriers by water, and to prescribe, in proper cases, maximum or minimum rates, or both. This provision is comparable to provisions contained in sections 13 (1) and (2) and 15 (1) of part I.

Subsection (c) specifies certain elements which shall not be considered in determining value for rate-making purposes. This provision is comparable to section 216 (h) of part II.

Subsection (d) authorizes the Commission, and makes it the duty of the Commission when found necessary or desirable in the public interest, to establish through rates and joint rates applicable to transportation by common carriers by water and by such carriers and carriers by railroad. This provision is comparable to a similar provision in section 15 (3) of part I. This subsection (d) also provides that in case of a joint rail and water rate the Commission may prescribe such reasonable differentials as it may find to be justified between all-rail rates and the joint rates in connection with such common carrier by water.

Subsection (e) gives the Commission authority to establish equitable divisions of joint rates between carriers subject to the act. This subsection is comparable to section 15 (6) of part I.

Subsection (f) is the "rate making" rule directing the Commission to take into consideration, among other factors, certain specified considerations. Among these is the need, in the public interest, of adequate and efficient water-transportation service at the lowest cost consistent with the furnishing of such service. This subsection is essentially the same as section 15a of part I and section 216 (i) of part II, except that each is written from the standpoint of the type of transportation covered in the particular part of the act.

Subsection (g) gives the Commission power to suspend new rates of common carriers by water pending determining of their lawfulness. It is similar to section 15 (7) of part I. It will not apply to schedules filed prior to January 1, 1941, except in the case of carriers which have been under regulation under laws administered by the Maritime Commission.

Subsection (h) gives authority to the Commission to prescribe minimum rates of contract carriers by water. The subsection contains special provisions regarding consideration to be given to the competitive relationship between contract and common carriers, and to the cost of the services rendered by contract carriers, and to the effect of such minimum charge on the movement of traffic by such carriers.

Subsection (i) authorizes the Commission to suspend rates of contract carriers for new services, or rates representing a reduced charge, pending determination of their lawfulness. It applies to schedules, contracts, and so forth, filed by contract carriers now subject to regulation under existing law by the Maritime Commission, and to schedules, contracts, and so forth—except initial schedules, contracts, and so forth—filed prior to January 1, 1941, by contract carriers made subject to regulation by this part.

SECTION 308. REPARATION AWARDS; LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS

This section provides for liability for damages for violations of part III by certain water carriers and is similar to certain provisions in sections 8, 9, 16 (1), (2), (3), and (4) of part I. This section does not apply to all water carriers, but only to those carriers which have heretofore been subject to similar liability for damages under the Shipping Act, 1916, and the Intercoastal Shipping Act, 1933. It is so limited by the definition of "carrier" in subsection (a).

It also deals with the time for bringing suits against such carriers for recovery of damages for violations of part III. It conforms to the provisions of part I as amended by this bill, except that it does not include provisions for actions by carriers for recovery of their charges. Such actions will be governed by several principles of law.

SECTION 309. CERTIFICATES OF PUBLIC CONVENIENCE AND NECESSITY

Subsections (a) to (e) are similar to certain provisions in sections 206, 207, and 208 of part II, relating to certificates of public convenience and necessity, and contains a "grandfather" provision as to common carriers by water in operation on June 1, 1939.

Subsections (f) and (g) require the securing of permits in the case of contract carriers by water. The "grandfather" date is June 1, 1939, as in the case of common carriers. These subsections compare with section 209 of part II.

SECTION 310. DUAL OPERATIONS UNDER CERTIFICATES AND PERMITS

This section provides for issuance of both a certificate and a permit to the same carrier when the Commission finds it consistent with the public interest. It is similar to section 210 of part II.

SECTION 311. TEMPORARY OPERATIONS

This section permits the Commission to authorize temporary operations by water carriers to meet immediate and urgent needs, and in cases where delays occur in connection with the determination of applications for consolidations and mergers. It is comparable to section 210a of part II.

SECTION 312. TRANSFER OF CERTIFICATES AND PERMITS

This section permits certificates and permits to be transferred under regulations to be prescribed by the Commission. It is comparable to section 212 (b) of part II.

SECTION 313. ACCOUNTS, RECORDS, AND REPORTS

This section provides for the making of reports to the Commission by water carriers, and authorizes the Commission to prescribe the forms of accounts, records, and memoranda of such carriers. It is comparable to certain provisions in section 20 (1) to (5), inclusive, of part I.

SECTION 314. ALLOWANCES TO SHIPPERS FOR TRANSPORTATION SERVICES

This section is similar to section 15 (13) of part I, and relates to allowances to shippers on account of services rendered or facilities furnished by them in connection with transportation performed by a water carrier.

SECTION 315. NOTICES, ORDERS, AND SERVICE OF PROCESS

This section relates to routine administrative matters, and is comparable to similar provisions relating to carriers subject to part I.

SECTION 316. ENFORCEMENT AND PROCEDURE

Subsection (a) makes applicable to the new part III general procedural and judicial review provisions which apply in case of the administration and enforcement of part I.

Subsection (b) relates to procedure for the enforcement of the provisions of part III and of orders issued thereunder other than orders for the payment of money.

Subsection (c) relates to the reports and findings of the Commission and the publication thereof.

Subsection (d) relates to the preservation as public records of copies of schedules, tariffs, contracts, etc., of water carriers filed with the Commission and the use of certified copies thereof as evidence.

SECTION 317. UNLAWFUL ACTS AND PENALTIES

This section defines certain unlawful acts and prescribes penalties therefor and for violations of provisions of this part.

SECTION 318. COLLECTION OF RATES AND CHARGES

This section provides that a common carrier by water shall collect its tariff rates and charges before delivery of freight transported by it, except under rules as prescribed by the Commission. It also provides for credit arrangements, and for liability of the consignor, consignee, and the beneficial owner of the property transported under specified conditions. It is similar to section 3 (2) of part I.

SECTION 319. EMPLOYEES

This section authorizes the Commission to employ such experts, agents, examiners, attorneys, or other employees as may be necessary for the efficient administration of this part.

SECTION 320. REPEALS; TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES, RECORDS, PROPERTY, AND APPROPRIATIONS

Subsection (a) repeals the provisions in the various shipping acts and the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, and the Merchant Marine Act, 1936—except section 205—insofar as they provide for the regulation of transportation in interstate or foreign commerce—as defined in part III—and insofar as they provide for the regulation of persons engaged in such transportation.

It was impossible to repeal the various provisions of these acts by specific reference, due to the fact that regulation of domestic commerce by water is intermingled with regulation of foreign commerce by water. While some uncertainty will probably result, particularly at first, by reason of the necessity for handling these repeals in this way, no more satisfactory way was found.

It is believed that the general purpose is clear, namely, to supersede the provisions of present law to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of the new part III, and to the extent that the new part III covers the same subject matters covered by the present provisions of law.

Subsection (b) relates to the transfer of such officers and employees of the United States Maritime Commission as the President shall determine to be necessary.

Subsection (c) relates to the transfer of certain files, reports, records, tariff schedules, and other documents filed with the United States Maritime Commission, to the jurisdiction and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Subsection (d) relates to the availability for expenditure by the Interstate Commerce Commission of appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the United States Maritime Commission in the administration of any provision of law repealed by this part.

SECTION 321. EXISTING ORDERS, RULES, TARIFFS, ETC.: PENDING MATTERS

Subsection (a) relates to the continuance in effect of all orders, rules, regulations, permits, tariffs, contracts, and so forth, issued, authorized, or filed under provisions of law repealed by this part. Such orders, rules, regulations, permits, tariffs, contracts, and so forth, shall continue in effect as though issued, authorized, or approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission under this part.

Subsection (b) provides for the continuance by the Interstate Commerce Commission of any proceeding, hearing, or investigation commenced or pending before the United States Maritime Commission at the time this section takes effect to the extent it relates to any provision of law repealed by this part.

Subsection (c) provides for the continuance and determination of any judicial proceeding arising under any provision of law repealed by this part.

SECTION 322. SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

This section provides that if any provision of this part shall be held invalid the remainder of the part shall not be affected thereby.

TITLE III. MISCELLANEOUS

PART I

This title of the bill consists of three parts. The provisions of part I relate to the construction and alteration of bridges over navigable waters. They include sections dealing with definitions of terms used in the part; the obstruction by a bridge of free navigation of any navigable waters of the United States; the alteration of bridges over such waters; sections governing the building and alteration of such bridges; the apportionment between the owner of the bridge and the United States of the cost of building and altering such bridges; sections dealing with authorization of appropriations; penalties for failure to comply with orders, together with provisions for judicial review thereof. These provisions will supersede present law relating to the same subject.

PART II

Part II deals with rates on Government traffic. This part consists of two sections, 321 and 322. Subsection (a) of section 321 provides that notwithstanding any other provision of law the Government shall pay the full applicable commercial rates, fares, or charges for transportation by any common carrier subject to the Interstate Commerce Act of persons or property for the United States or on its behalf; and the full compensation determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission as reasonable therefor for the transportation by railroad of the United States mail. The provision with respect to the transportation of persons or property is, however, subject to section 22 of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended, which permits railroads and other carriers voluntarily to enter into contracts with the United States Government for the transportation of persons or property for the Government at free or reduced rates.

There is also a provision that any carrier by railroad and the United States may enter into contracts for the transportation of the United States mail for less than the compensation prescribed as reasonable by the Commission. It is provided also that section 3709, Revised Statutes (U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 41, sec. 5), shall not be construed to require advertising for bids in procuring transportation services when such services can be procured from any common carrier lawfully operating in the territory where such services are to be performed.

The effect of subsection (a) is to relieve the carriers from the necessity of transporting persons or property of the United States at land-grant rates.

Subsection (b) provides that before any carrier by railroad may obtain the advantage of subsection (a) it shall file with the Secretary of the Interior a release of any claim it may have against the United States to lands, interest in lands, compensation, or reimbursement on account of lands or interests in lands, which have been granted, claimed to have been granted, or which it is claimed should have been granted to such carrier or any such predecessor in interest under any land grant to such carrier or such predecessor in interest as aforesaid.

Section 322 provides for prompt payment to any common carrier subject to the Interstate Commerce Act for transportation of persons or property for the United States and includes a provision for deduction of overpayments.

PART III

Part III amends section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended. The amendments in part III provide that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, with the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission, may purchase the obligations of railroads, including equipment trust certificates, or guarantee the payment of the principal of, or interest on, such obligations, or both, or make loans to such railroads. The purchases, guaranties, or loans may be made to aid in the financing, reorganization, reduction, or readjustment of principal or interest charges, consolidation, maintenance, or construction of railroads. It is provided that in every case of such a purchase, guaranty, or loan, the Commission and the Corporation shall, in connection with the approval or authorization thereof, find that the prospective earning power of such railroad, together with the character and value of the security offered, furnish, in the opinion of the Commission and the Corporation, reasonable protection to the Corporation.

Section 5 of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act is further amended by adding a provision to the effect that the title of any owner to property leased or conditionally sold to a railroad which the Corporation has financed, or aided in financing, any right of such owner to take possession of such property under such lease or sales contract, and the title of any owner of a collateral note evidencing a loan to a railroad from the Corporation and the right of any such owner to acquire title to the collateral securing such note, free of any equity of redemption, and the absolute ownership thereof, shall not be affected by the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act of July 1, 1898, as amended, or by any other provision of law applicable to any proceedings thereunder.

Section 3 of the act approved January 31, 1935 (49 Stat., ch. 2, pp. 1–2), is amended by extending the time within which loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may mature from January 31, 1945, to January 31, 1955.

5. COMPLIANCE WITH PARAGRAPH 2A OF RULE XIII

In view of the voluminous character of the provisions of law amended by the bill, a supplemental committee print is being prepared showing in bill-size type the textual changes proposed to be made in the Interstate Commerce Act and other provisions of law. This print will be made available for Members of the House.

It is said by some that the bill, even though enacted into law, will increase freight rates and will not help the railroads. This is not necessarily true. The bill, if enacted into law, will help the railroads because it will prevent cutthroat competition, which always destroys. If this is done, the public will not pay any increased freight rates because the public does not get an advantage from cutthroat competition. The same thing was said when we passed the Motor Carrier Act. I heard practically the same argument then against that bill that I am hearing now. If motor transportation had not been regulated, no efficient, capable operator of trucks or busses could have stayed in business. One of the main reasons that we passed the law was on account of the fact that there were so many irresponsible operators of motor vehicles that cut the prices so that any operator wanting to give service to the public could not compete. We had illustrations where motor carriers of freight who were not financially responsible were moving largely furniture of individual people in moving from town to town where the property was lost or destroyed by fire, and it was an absolute loss to the shipper. In the hearings it was also shown that there were irresponsible bus owners or operators whose bus broke down long distances away from where the journey started or where it was to end and passengers were left stranded.

Water regulation will prevent these irresponsible, both morally and financially, persons from engaging in the transportation business. This will be a benefit to the public. It will not increase the freight rates to the public and it will benefit the legitimate water carriers as well as the railroads.

But if the cost of transportation should be increased slightly, both the passenger and the freight, is it not better to have a sound transportation system in the United States rendering the service to the people by an authoritative regulation, to take care of the people's interest, than it is to have an unregulated, irresponsible system liable to break down at any time not rendering the service to which the public is entitled?

The railroad company employs approximately a million persons; the rights of railway labor are to be considered, and should be considered, in the passage of any legislation. The rights of railroad securities owners, totaling billions of dollars, are to be considered in the passage of any legislation, but there should also be considered, because we are representing the public interest, what is in the public interest, and, as I stated in the beginning, those who have studied this question for a number of years have unanimously decided that all forms of transportation should be regulated in order that all forms of transportation be dealt justly with and have an equal opportunity. We cannot have a transportation policy with the railroads, the motor carriers, and the airplane carriers regulated and leave one great transportation agency unregulated, to prey upon the public as well as its competitors. The next question then comes, Who shall regulate the water carriers? To my mind there is only one agency of the Government who should do this and that is the Interstate Commerce Commission. For over 50 years they have regulated the railroads; for over 4 years they have regulated the motor carriers; they have rendered at all times high and efficient services, and the criticism that has been made here on the floor of the House of the Commissioners is unjust and uncalled for. Men like Chief Justice Hughes, lawyers not representing the railroads, and others having no connection have not hesitated to praise the work of the Commission very highly. With the reorganization of the Commission, as provided in this bill, there is no question but what they will be able to handle an additional transportation agency as well as they have handled the motor carriers and the railroads. All of the regulations necessary for the various forms of transportation should be coordinated by one regulatory body.

As the bill is read under the 5-minute rule, the members of the committee and I remind you that 23 out of the 25 members of the committee are for the bill; and if it becomes necessary will explain to you the various sections.

Those of us who were fortunate enough to be on the subcommittee and all who were on the committee realize the importance of this question and all gave to it their best in order that the country might have a national transportation policy. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLVERTON of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time on this side, so I yield myself the remainder of the time.
